"Now, gentlemen, I don't want to read at any greater length, but this is the true complexion of all I have ever said in regard to the institution of slavery and the black race. This is the whole of it, and anything that argues me into this idea of perfect social and political equality with the negro is but a specious and fantastic arrangement of words, by which a man can prove a horse chestnut to be a chestnut horse."

"I have no purpose to introduce political and social equality between the white and black races. There is a physical difference between the two which, in my judgment, will probably forbid their ever living together upon the footing of perfect equality, and inasmuch as it becomes a necessity that there must be a difference, I, as well as Judge Douglas, am in favor of the race to which I belong having the superior position."

After insisting that notwithstanding this inequality the negro has certain natural rights of which he ought not to be deprived—a fact which I have already fully conceded in my remarks to-day—Mr. Lincoln continues:

"I agree with Judge Douglas, he [the negro] is not my equal in many respects. Certainly, not in color; perhaps not in moral or intellectual endowments."

Mr. Lincoln also then quoted from another speech he had previously made, as follows:

"While I was at the hotel to-day an elderly gentleman called upon me to know whether I was really in favor of producing perfect equality between the negroes and white people. While I had not proposed to myself on this occasion to say much on that subject, yet as the question was asked me, I thought I would occupy, perhaps, five minutes in saying something in regard to it. I will say, then, that I am not nor ever have been in favor of bringing about in any way the social and political equality of the white and black races; that I am not or ever have been in favor of making voters or jurors of negroes, nor of qualifying them to hold office or intermarry with the white people; and I will say in addition to this, that there is a physical difference between the white and black races, which I believe will forever forbid the two races living together on terms of social and political equality. And inasmuch as they cannot so live while they do remain together, there must be the position of superior and inferior, and I, as much as any other man, am in favor of having the superior position assigned to the white race."

After reasserting his belief that there were certain rights, however, that ought not to be denied to the colored man, and after indulging in some pleasantries at the expense of Judge Douglas, Mr. Lincoln, on that occasion, further proceeded to say:

"There, my friends, you have briefly what I have, on former occasions, said upon the subject to which this newspaper, to the extent of its ability, has drawn the public attention. In it you not only perceive, as a probability, that in that contest I did not at any time say I was in favor of negro suffrage, but the absolute proof that twice—once substantially and once expressly—I declared against it. Having shown you this, there remains but a word of comment upon that newspaper article. It is this: that I presume the editor of that paper is an honest and truth-loving man, and that he will be greatly obliged to me for furnishing him thus early an opportunity to correct the misrepresentation he has made, before it has run so long that malicious people can call him a liar."

Mr. Lincoln's name will go down to posterity as the great emancipator and friend of the African race, and I quote him therefore as a representative man of his class and of his times. And while I was, during his eventful life, especially the last years of it, unable to agree with him in many things, I am gratified with the opportunity of saying that in his views thus expressed, as to the differences between the races, and as to the impracticability of their living together or terms of equality, I fully and heartily concur with him.

Mexico, sir, is a living example of the folly of trying to commingle essentially different races of people together upon terms of equality. I do not claim that all the troubles of that unfortunate country result from that cause alone, but I am quite sure it is one of the great disturbing causes, which will not, and I fear cannot, be easily removed.

Many colored men, it is true, have given evidence of superior talents, and some of them have risen to a comparative degree of eminence. But they are the exceptions, not the rule. An admixture of white blood is discernible in most of those who have in any laudable way distinguished themselves. As a class I have failed to see in them any of those high traits of character which indicate them as fit to become a governing race anywhere. So far as we know, the African race had as fair a chance in the earlier ages of the world for improvement in the arts and sciences and for advancement in civilization as did the white race. If we are all the children of Adam, they certainly had; and yet what have they of themselves accomplished? What progress they have made has resulted from their having been, against their will, brought into contact with white people. It is true that they have recently obtained their freedom, and are now in a condition to demonstrate better than ever before to what extent they are capable of accomplishing great results.

But, sir, they did not win their freedom, and had but little agency in shaping the events which conferred it upon them. It came to them as one of the results of and as incident to a great civil war in which white men contended for power, and in which colored men played but a subordinate part. It came to them on the demand of white men who wielded the power of the Government, first as a measure of war, and afterward as a condition of peace. As the war progressed, many of them under the great inducements held out for their encouragement, did from time to time enter the ranks of the Union Army and rendered such assistance as they were capable of affording.

Others of them, however, adhered to the cause of their late masters to the last, and I think I am justified in saying that, whatever their sympathies as a class may have been, a majority of them either adhered from first to last to the rebellion or aided and assisted by their labor or otherwise those who did so adhere. One of the most remarkable developments of the late war in connection with this race of people was the fidelity and personal devotion to their late masters, exhibited by a great proportion of them in the seceding States when the strongest inducements to freedom were held out to them by the Federal Government. The teachings of history, sir, are in vain if white men would have so acted under similar circumstances. I think, therefore, Mr. Lincoln has been amply sustained by this circumstance alone in saying that there is a physical difference between the two races; that there is a difference in their moral and intellectual endowments. And, when I hear it asserted with so much confidence by gentlemen on the other side, that the colored people of the South constitute a unitedly loyal element, I confess I am unable to understand upon what authority the assertion is made. I am inclined to think, sir, it is one of those poetic licenses that visionary men are too apt to indulge in when treating of solid realities.

Now, sir, I have attempted to show, and I shall assume for the purposes of my argument that I have shown it, that there is an inequality between the two races, physical and intellectual; the white man occupying the superior and the colored man the inferior position. I have also shown, and before I conclude will attempt further to show, that this difference was recognized and acted upon when our matchless Government was instituted, and that it has been observed and perpetuated, in a greater or less degree, by every department of the Government to the present time. In view, then, of these facts, in view of this anomalous and inferior condition of the colored race in this country, it is no matter of surprise that negroes in any considerable numbers, especially in States where their labor is not needed, should be regarded as an undesirable population. In Indiana the kind of labor to which these people are peculiarly adapted was nowhere needed when her policy in regard to them was adopted. Even yet there is no special demand for that kind of labor. Our climate is unsuited to them as a race. There was room, and to spare, for them elsewhere under a more genial sun, and where their labor was, and perhaps always may be, needed.

Was it strange, then, that our people should desire to provide against an increase of this population, and should be anxious, even, at the same time to devise some humane plan to induce those already among us to emigrate? It was to accomplish these results that the provision in our constitution in relation to negroes and mulattoes was inserted. To refuse a negro the right of immigration into the State can at best, under the circumstances of his position, be no more than an inconvenience to him. To receive him into the State might be much more than an inconvenience to its people. Neither was there then, nor is there now, any inhumanity in holding out pecuniary inducements to those already in the State to emigrate, and this is all that the provision in relation to colonization amounts to. On the score of policy, therefore, I announce it as my deliberate conviction that the people of Indiana were justified in the course they saw fit to pursue in regard to the colored race.

I now proceed, Mr. Speaker, to discuss another question which at once presents itself in connection with what I have already said, and one of more practical and general importance to all the States than anything I have yet offered, and that is as to the effect of the recent action of Congress in passing the so-called civil rights bill on State laws and State regulations imposing disabilities on its negro population.

The first and second sections of the act of Congress to which I refer read as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all persons born in the United States and not subject to any foreign Power, excluding Indians not taxed, are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States; and such citizens, of every race and color, without regard to any previous condition of slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall have the same right, in every State and Territory in the United States, to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, and give evidence, to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property, and to full and equal benefit of laws and proceedings for the security of person and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, and penalties, and to none other, any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, to the contrary notwithstanding."

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That any person who, under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, shall subject, or cause to be subjected, any inhabitant of any State or Territory to the deprivation of any right secured or protected by this act, or to different punishment, pains, or penalties on account of such person having at any time been held in a condition of slavery or involuntary servitude except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, or by reason of his color or race, than is prescribed for the punishment of white persons, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be punished by fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court."

The language employed leaves no doubt, sir, as to the intention of Congress in enacting this law. If Congress possesses the constitutional power to enact such a law, then all persons born in the United States, and not subject to any foreign Power, except Indians not taxed, of whatever race or color, are citizens of the United States, and entitled to full protection as such. And all State constitutions and State laws making any discrimination against negroes, mulattoes, Indians who pay taxes, Chinamen, or Gypsies, on account of their color or race, are null and void; and any State judge or other State officer who shall attempt to enforce the law of any State making such discrimination is liable to "be punished by fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court." Take the case of the State of Indiana as an instance. As I have shown, any negro or mulatto who may come into the State since the 1st day of November, A. D. 1851, is liable to a fine; and all contracts made within the State with such negro or mulatto are void under the constitution and laws of that State. Such negro or mulatto thus coming into the State in violation of its laws is not a competent witness to testify against white persons under the State law. Yet if this law of Congress shall be held valid, then if any judge of any of the State courts in that State shall assess a fine against any negro or mulatto for coming into the State in violation of its laws, or shall refuse to permit any such negro or mulatto to testify against a white person in any case, then such judge is liable to be indicted for thus acting in one of the Federal courts at Indianapolis, to be taken to that city for trial, and to be punished under this law of Congress. Every other officer of the court who may assist the judge in thus enforcing the State law is liable to be punished in the same way, astounding as it may seem.

Has Congress, then, the constitutional power to enact such a law? The people of every State in this Union are interested, either directly or indirectly, in the answer to this question. The people of those States in which there is any discrimination against negroes or mulattoes are especially interested in it. To every judge and officer of any court in Indiana it is a most important question, because until it is judicially settled either the one way or the other such judge or other officer of his court cannot know what his duty is in such a dilemma.

I have no hesitation in announcing it as my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that Congress does not possess the power it has attempted to exercise in the passage of this civil rights bill. I shall endeavor very briefly to give some of the reasons for the opinion I thus entertain.

I have already attempted to show that at the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution none but persons of the white race were recognized by that instrument as citizens of the United States. As this construction of the Constitution is an important question in connection with the subject I am now discussing, I hope I will be pardoned for again alluding to it. It is objected that this construction is in opposition to the plain words of the Declaration of Independence, and hence inadmissible. If this were true the Constitution, being later in date, and the real bond of union between the States, would have to prevail. That there is, however, no such conflict between the Declaration and the Constitution I shall attempt to show. It is true the Declaration of Independence contains these memorable words:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among them are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments are instituted, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

In commenting on these words the Supreme Court of the United States says:

"The general words above quoted would seem to embrace the whole human family, and if they were used in a similar instrument at this day would be so understood. But it is too clear for dispute that the enslaved African race were not intended to be included, and formed no part of the people who framed and adopted this Declaration; for if the language as understood in that day would embrace them the conduct of the distinguished men who framed the Declaration of Independence would have been utterly and flagrantly inconsistent with the principles they asserted; and instead of the sympathy of mankind, to which they so confidently appealed, they would have deserved and received universal rebuke and reprobation."

Yet the men who framed this Declaration were great men—high in literary acquirements—high in the sense of honor, and incapable of asserting principles inconsistent with those on which they were acting. They perfectly understood the meaning of the language they used, and how it would be understood by others; and they knew that it would not in any part of the civilized world be supposed to embrace the negro race, which by common consent, had been excluded from civilized Governments, and the family of nations, and doomed to slavery. They spoke and acted according to the then established doctrine and principles, and in the ordinary language of the day, and no one misunderstood them. The unhappy black race were separated from the white by indelible marks and laws long before established, and were never thought of or spoken of except as property, and when the claims of the owner or the profit of the trader were supposed to need protection."

"This state of public opinion had undergone no change when the Constitution was adopted, as is equally evident from its provisions and language."—Dred Scott case, 19 Howard's United States Reports, page 410.

The court, in the same case, in considering whether the African race were recognized by the Constitution as citizens of the United States, says:

"The words 'people of the United States' and 'citizens' are synonymous terms and mean the same thing. They both describe the political body who, according to our republican institutions, form the sovereignty, and who hold the power and conduct the Government through their Representatives. They are what we familiarly call the 'sovereign people,' and every citizen is one of this people and a constituent member of this sovereignty. The question before us is, whether the class of persons described in the plea in abatement (that is, persons of African descent) compose a portion of this people and are constituent members of this sovereignty? We think they are not, and that they are not included, and were not intended to be included, under the word 'citizens' in the Constitution, and can therefore claim none of the rights and privileges which that instrument provides for and secures to citizens of the United States. On the contrary, they were at the time considered as a subordinate and inferior class of beings, who had been subjugated by the dominant race, and whether emancipated or not yet remained subject to their authority, and had no rights and privileges but such as those who held the power and the Government might choose to grant them."

It is not the province of the court to decide upon the justice or injustice, the policy or impolicy, of these laws. The decision of that question belonged to the political or law-making power; to those who formed the sovereignty and framed the Constitution. The duty of the court is to interpret the instrument they have framed, with the best lights we can obtain on the subject, and to administer it as we find it, according to its true intent and meaning when it was adopted."—19 Howard, 405.

It may be also added, Mr. Speaker, that when our national Government was instituted, degrading laws as to the African race existed in nearly all the States which were then in existence. Even up to and as late as 1848, in no State except Maine did the African race, in point of fact, participate equally with the whites in the exercise of civil and political rights. (See Kent's Commentaries, sixth edition, vol. 2, p. 258, note b.)

The Constitution itself allowed the continuation of the African slave trade until 1808. In view of these historical facts, and in the light of the authorities I have cited, it could not have been that the great men who formed our Government should have intended that the African race should participate in it as the equals of the whites and have full protection as citizens of it. They could not have intended so great an inconsistency.

I do not refer, sir, to this treatment of the African race with any pleasure. I do so only because my line of argument seems to require it. If it shall be said that our fathers sinned in their treatment of this unfortunate race, then I answer that they sinned not alone, but that the whole civilized world, to a greater or less extent, participated in the sin, and that all sections and portions of our country were alike involved in it.

Now, therefore, sir, as persons of African descent, though born in the country, are not by virtue of the provisions of the Federal Constitution citizens of the United States, by what power and in what way, if at all, can this class of persons be such citizens?

The States cannot by any separate or State action make them citizens of the United States. While, as I have shown, a State may impose disabilities on this class of persons within its jurisdiction, it may at the same time confer any privileges and immunities on them or any portion of them as it may seem proper within its own territorial limits. A State may make them jurors, witnesses, voters, or office-holders if it choose, but such disabilities on the one hand, and such privileges and immunities on the other, do not extend beyond the boundaries of the State imposing or conferring them. The Supreme Court of the United States, in commenting on the power of the States in this respect, say:

"The Constitution upon its adoption obviously took from the States all power by any subsequent legislation to introduce as a citizen into the political family of the United States any one, no matter where he was born, or what might be his character or condition."—And no law of a State, therefore, passed since the Constitution was adopted can give any right of citizenship outside of its own territory.

On the same subject that court also say:

"No State was willing to permit another State to determine who should or should not be admitted as one of its citizens, and entitled to demand equal rights and privileges with their own people, within their own territories. The right of naturalization was, therefore, with one accord, surrendered by the States and confided to the Federal Government."—19 Howard, pages 417 and 418.

All the power, therefore, that exists anywhere to introduce any person as a citizen into the political family of the United States rests with the Federal Government. This power is embraced in the grant of authority to Congress, to which I have before alluded, "to establish a uniform rule of naturalization." What, then, is the extent of this authority thus conferred on Congress? Under this power may Congress make everybody it chooses citizens of the United States, or can it under it only make certain classes or descriptions of persons such citizens?

The American definition of the word "naturalization" is found in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, and is as follows: "Naturalization—The act by which an alien is made a citizen of the United States of America."

Bouvier also defines a "naturalized citizen" to be "one who, being born an alien, has lawfully become a citizen of the United States under the Constitution and laws."

The same author defines an "alien" to be

"one born out of the jurisdiction of the United States, who has not since been naturalized under their Constitution and laws."

Chancellor Kent, in his Commentaries, (see volume two, page 12,) says:

"An alien is a person born out of the jurisdiction and allegiance of the United States."

The Supreme Court of the United States, in considering the power of Congress on the subject of naturalization, also say:

"And this power granted to Congress to establish a uniform rule of naturalization is, by the well-understood meaning of the word, confined to persons born in a foreign country, under a foreign Government. It is not a power to raise to the rank of a citizen any one born in the United States, who, from birth or parentage, by the laws of the country, belongs to an inferior and subordinate class."

Chancellor Kent, in treating of this subject of naturalization, also says:

"The act of Congress confines the description of aliens capable of naturalization to free white persons. I presume this excludes the inhabitants of Africa and their descendants; and it may become a question to what extent persons of mixed blood are excluded, and what shades and degrees of mixture of color disqualify an alien from application for the benefits of the act of naturalization. Perhaps there might be difficulties also as to the copper-colored native of America, or the yellow or tawny races of the Asiatics, and it may well be doubted whether any of them are 'white persons' within the purview of the law."—Kent's Commentaries, vol. 2, page 88.

Under the construction of this act of Congress thus foreshadowed by Mr. Kent, Chinamen have been denied naturalization in California, and nowhere, within my knowledge, have the courts of the country extended its benefits to any but persons of the white race.

To the inquiry propounded as to the power of Congress over this subject of naturalization I respond, that this grant of authority "to establish a uniform rule of naturalization" only confers on the Federal Government the power to admit "aliens," that is, persons born out of the jurisdiction and allegiance of the United States, to citizenship, and does not confer on it the power to elevate to the rank of citizens persons of an inferior race born within its jurisdiction and allegiance.

If I am right in these conclusions, then it follows, irresistibly follows, I submit, that so much of the civil rights bill as attempts to confer citizenship on the class of colored people which is intended to be embraced within its provisions is wholly inoperative and void within the territorial limits, at least, of the several States of this Union, and only efficient, if anywhere, in those places to which the exclusive jurisdiction of Congress extends.

Now, it has been shown, Mr. Speaker, and I hope satisfactorily shown, that persons of the African race never have been and still are not citizens of the United States by virtue of the provisions of the Federal Constitution. I have shown, or at least attempted to show, that the States cannot by any separate action on their part confer national citizenship on that race of people. I have also endeavored to show that Congress cannot make citizens of the United States of negroes who were born within the jurisdiction and allegiance of the Federal Government. My position in relation to that portion of the African race who were born in this country, then, is, that they were left by the Constitution of the United States, and as one of the results of our peculiar institutions, in an anomalous and subordinate condition, from which Congress by an ordinary act of legislation cannot relieve them. I do not say that Congress might not by an amendment of the naturalization laws provide for the naturalization of persons of color born outside of the jurisdiction and allegiance of the United States, who might arrive here as emigrants in the ordinary way. My argument is not now addressed to that question, and I affirm nothing in regard to it, either the one way or the other. What I insist on is, that Congress under the pretense of naturalization cannot confer citizenship on native-born persons of an inferior race of people not recognized as citizens by the Constitution.

It may be asked how these persons of African descent, born in the country, can be made citizens of the United States if the people shall really desire to make them such. I answer that this can only be done by an amendment of the Federal Constitution. In this declaration I feel that I am sustained by the recent action of the committee on reconstruction in the proposed amendments to the Constitution which that committee have reported, and which have recently passed Congress in a modified form. The first of the series of the proposed amendments is intended to confer citizenship on that very class of persons. Why, then, is such an amendment to the Constitution necessary if the civil rights bill already confers citizenship upon them? I have heard no satisfactory response to that inquiry yet, and I know of none that can begiven. Hence I infer that the majority here in Congress doubt the constitutionality of the civil rights bill, at least in so far as it attempts to confer citizenship on the native colored race.

But it is insisted that these disabilities imposed by many of the States upon their colored population are in opposition to the prevailing sentiment of the times in which we now live, and ought to be at once removed. This I maintain is a question for the States themselves to discuss and to determine. What is best for the colored people in some States may not be best for them in others, and hence the States can best respectively determine the necessities of these people within their own limits. If let alone by the General Government, these matters will soon adjust themselves. In the present altered and defenseless condition of the negro race the highest impulses of humanity will impel the white people everywhere, I firmly believe, to provide what is necessary to their prosperity and comfort. To doubt this is to cast suspicion on the fitness and capacity of the white people as a governing race. To allege the unfitness and incapacity of the white race to govern this country in any of its parts is to assert that republican institutions are a failure. For under Providence, this country is indebted for all its grandeur and glory to the genius and energy of the white man. To him the jewels of liberty, progress, and civilization were confided on this continent, and upon him devolve their preservation and transmission to posterity. He cannot, if he would, evade his responsibility. Despite the discouragements of the past few years, I yet have faith that he will not fail in the high destiny that has been assigned to him.

Let, therefore, the people of the States upon whom this duty peculiarly devolves, as I have attempted to show, legislate with care, with humanity, and with justice for those of the inferior races within their midst. Let them see to it that these people, not so gifted and not so endowed in all things as they, have all the protection which their condition demands. Let the white people, however, retain the power of the Government in their own hands, and wield it for the good of all. Let there be no visionary attempts to equalize fundamentally different races. Let there be no surrender of political power to weaker and untrained hands. When the colored people shall have developed in the sunlight of freedom, if they ever shall, their capacity for self-government, it will then be time enough to talk about dividing political power with them.

As for the State of Indiana, on whose behalf I have attempted to speak, I can very safely predict that she will do with the colored race within her borders whatever humanity requires that she shall do, and that she will in her own good time relax her laws in relation to those who may desire to migrate into the State if her people shall ever be convinced that justice or sound policy requires her to do this. As to whether she shall do so, and if so, when, are questions for her people to determine, however, and not for Congress. For my own part, until some stronger reason than has yet been urged shall present itself to my mind, I will stand opposed to any policy which tends to increase the negro population of the State.

There are some other provisions of this civil rights bill, Mr. Speaker, which I would like to discuss, but my time will not permit me. I can only refer to them in general terms. This bill in substance also says that people of color of all shades and races except Indians not taxed—

"Shall have the same right in every State and Territory in the United States to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, and give evidence, to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property, and to full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of person and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, and penalties, and to none other, any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding."

This provision, I insist, is utterly null and void so far as it conflicts with State laws, State ordinances, and State constitutions. In the District of Columbia, and wherever else Congress is supreme, it is doubtless an effective and valid provision, but in matters of local and domestic concern within the States it can have no force and validity whatever, as I believe. This power of a State over its domestic affairs was never in any manner surrendered to the General Government, and hence was reserved to the "States respectively or to the people." This a cardinal principle in our form of government, and until recently was never denied, that I am aware of, by any respectable statesman in this country.

The convention which assembled at Chicago in 1860, and which first nominated Mr. Lincoln for the Presidency, adopted the following as a part of one of its resolutions:

"That the maintenance inviolate of the rights of the States, and especially the right of each State to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to that balance of power on which the perfection and endurance of our political fabric depends."

The party, therefore, constituting the majority of this House, as it is thus shown, came into power in 1861 fully pledged to this cardinal principle of allowing the States exclusive control of their own local affairs. That principle is as much the doctrine of the Constitution to-day as it was in 1861. Then why attempt to overthrow it? To attempt to do to-day what the Constitution forbids is as much a crime against liberty as if attempted in the earlier and better days of the Republic.

These extraordinary provisions of this civil rights bill are to me another illustration of the tendencies of late to centralize all power in the General Government. This tendency to consolidation of power in the Federal Government is the counterpart of secession, and is another of the political heresies which all true friends of constitutional liberty ought equally to resist. We must see to it that the reserved powers of the States are respected on the one hand, and on the other that the authority of the Federal Government, in all matters confided to it, must be sustained at every hazard and at every sacrifice. Those who most strive to preserve the proper equilibrium between the States and the General Government are the truest friends of the Union everywhere. It is sometimes suggested that the Federal Government does not possess the constitutional power to do many things which the emergencies of the country require, and hence the necessity of some amendments to the Constitution.

Until we learn, Mr. Speaker, to regard more sacredly than we have of late done the inviolability of the obligations which the Constitution already imposes, I fear that amendments will be of little avail. Besides, sir, when the Government is disorganized and nearly one third of the States unrepresented in the national councils, it occurs to me as being an inopportune time to consider amendments to the fundamental law affecting every portion of the country. If the people of the lately insurgent States are too disloyal to be allowed to reorganize their State governments in their own way, and too disloyal to elect Representatives to Congress, it does occur to me as being a strange inconsistency to say that they are nevertheless loyal enough to vote upon amendments to the Constitution. These suggestions are digressive, however, from my line of argument, and I cannot pursue them further.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the States are the pillars which support the grand national edifice, and are component parts of the Federal Government. To sustain them, then, in what pertains to their jurisdiction is to sustain the Government itself. To restore those States which are now out of their practical relations with the General Government is a task imposed by the highest impulses of patriotism. Give us, therefore, restoration! Give us Union! After these are secured to us we will then be in a condition to consider what else our situation requires.

Mr. DAVIS obtained the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. If the gentleman from New York does not particularly desire to go on now, I ask him to yield to me for a few moments.

Mr. DAVIS. I will do so with pleasure.

LOAN TO REPUBLIC OF MEXICO.

Mr. STEVENS. I wish, Mr. Speaker, to say a few words, not upon the question of reconstruction so much as upon other national matters. As introductory to the remarks which I propose to make, I ask the Clerk to read a resolution which I propose to offer (not for action at the present time) and move that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union report it to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be instructed to inquire into the propriety of loaning to the republic of Mexico, on proper security, $20,000,000 to enable said republic to prevent the overthrow of its Government and the establishment of a monarchical Government on the continent of North America.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CULLOM.) This resolution is read at the present time only for information, as a part of the gentleman's speech.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the time has arrived when the United States can calmly inquire whether that declaration of American policy called the "Monroe doctrine," which was once deemed so important and manly, shall be a practical idea or a mere bravado. While we were engaged in civil war it was certainly prudent not to provoke a war with any powerful nation, though I do not forget the bold policy of Rome, which made her declare war against a powerful nation, and march a legion against her to avenge an insult, while Hannibal was at her gates.

Three years ago the measure now proposed might have given to France just cause of war. On the invasion of Mexico by that Power, under a pretense very different from the ultimate one, she and Mexico were the contending belligerents. To have aided either of them with loans would have been a breach of neutrality. So now a loan to the republic might be justly considered by Maximilian as just cause of war, for which we would be responsible to him. For though he be a usurper he is an acknowledged belligerent.

But now France could have no cause of complaint according to the strictest rules of national law. By the treaty of April, 1864, between Napoleon and Maximilian, an empire was sought to be established independent of all other nations. France ceased to be a principal in the contest, and entered into arrangements with the so-called empire for the payment of her expenses and for the use of her troops as a future portion of the army of Maximilian. France occupies the same relation to the empire of Mexico that the Hessian States did to England while they sold their citizens to fight against America in the time of our Revolution. Their troops are mere Swiss fighting for pay in a foreign army. The prime minister of France lately disclaimed any interest in the Government of Mexico, and said to our minister, "You do us too much honor in supposing that we have any part in the Mexican empire." What might be just cause of war to Maximilian would concern no other nation. Other Powers might aid Maximilian without being responsible to any but the republic of Mexico. We or others might aid the republic, being responsible only to the usurping empire.

Without being aggressive, it is the duty of this nation to make its moral power felt among nations. Diplomatic essays, however smoothly written, which yield everything and command nothing, add little to the force of a nation, but rather invite insult and scorn. Why do we allow our avowed principles to be disregarded by any Power? It needs only the fiat of this great Republic to decide the fate of the intrusive empire of Maximilian. What a blunder, what a crime, to be content with a promise to withdraw the invading forces in eighteen months! Before that time unaided Mexico will be ground to atoms, and republicanism in that beautiful portion of our continent will be among the things that were.

If it is not intended to maintain the Monroe doctrine with the full energy of the nation, it ought to be abandoned with dignity as an inconsiderate error. If it be deemed important to the safety and honor of the country, then there should be no yielding, no time-serving, no timid policy. In my judgment, it is a principle vital to the safety of this Republic, and that our honor is concerned to see that it be not violated. Principles of government, like diseases, are contagious. The monarchs of Europe combine to suppress democratic revolutions at any point lest they should spread and work the final overthrow of absolute government. So ought we to take care that no despotic Government should touch our borders lest the leprosy might spread and pollute the continent. Hence there was wisdom in the declaration that no foreign nation should establish a throne on this continent against the consent of the people. The so-called empire of Maximilian was a fraud so far as the consent of the people was concerned. The republic has been oppressed by foreign bayonets. The Mexicans who form any portion of the imperial Government are traitors who might well rank with southern secessionists.

Beside being a monarchy, the empire is a barbarian Government. The decree by which all true men found fighting for their country are to be instantly executed—and which is fully carried into effect—stamps the Government as savage, barbarian, and outside the pale of civilization. It is worse than the ancient Governments of Tripoli and Tunis and Algiers, which the civilized world held to be nests of pirates and enemies to the human race.

As, then, such loan could not be just cause of war with any foreign nation, is it expedient to grant it? It is very clear that without such foreign aid republicanism in Mexico must be crushed out and a monarchy established. Juarez has persevered with a courage and fortitude unparalleled in modern history. I know nothing to compare with it but the unyielding endurance and faith of William of Orange. But in the midst of a horde of traitors, sustained by one of the most powerful nations of Europe, the resources of that distracted country must become exhausted. I believe now, while the President could command men enough, his materials of war are well-nigh expended. Unless a foreign loan can be procured, I do not see how any respectable army can be kept on foot. Twenty million dollars could easily be advanced by us on the mortgage of Lower California, Sonora, Sinaloa, or Chihuahua, which would make it perfectly safe.

If it should provoke a war with Maximilian I suppose no one would be much alarmed; it would give the great Republic an opportunity to vindicate her honor, which has become dim under the Micawber policy of our Foreign Secretary. By vindicating that honor we should increase and consolidate the strength of the nation.

I trust our able Committee on Foreign Affairs will soon take some decisive step in this matter.

Mr. DAVIS resumed the floor, and made some remarks upon the protection of American industry; which will be found in the Appendix.

POWERS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, under the parliamentary discipline which prevails in this House, it is impossible very often for members to get permission to discuss measures of the gravest importance, upon which, nevertheless, without discussion they are compelled to vote. This fact, however, does not relieve us from the solemn duty of giving full and careful consideration to all such measures. We may then simply announce our conclusions by our votes, or we may present our reasons therefor on some occasion like that accorded to me this day. On most matters of current business my judgment would be satisfied by the former course, but on subjects of such extraordinary importance as those to which I shall invite attention to-day, I prefer the latter.

There have already passed this House, by the votes of the dominant party here, three bills which are wholly without precedent, either in form or object, in the entire history of congressional legislation. There are ten or more bills of like character still upon our files which may at any time be presented for our consideration. These several bills, viewed together, rest upon the novel and alarming assumption that Congress possesses the constitutional power to create corporations generally, the theater of whose operations and business shall be some State or States of the Union, and to confer upon corporations created by State authority such additional privileges and franchises as Congress pleases, inconsistent with those conferred by the State, or to take from such corporations any privileges and franchises granted to them by the States; and, in short, carrying the theory of these bills to its logical results, to take under Federal control our vast and unparalleled system and network of telegraphs, railroads, canals, and other chartered highways which have sprung into such rapid existence under the fostering care and energies of State authority, as to constitute the greatest achievement of this age.

I am sadly conscious that it is not fashionable nowadays to question the omnipotence of Congress. But as a humble guardian of the liberties of the people, I gather ample motive from this fact alone to scrutinize with jealous care every attempt to overleap the just and prescribed limits upon power. The very apathy of the people should arouse the greater watchfulness in their representatives.

I shall now proceed to discuss in their order, briefly, the grave propositions involved in these bills. If Congress possesses these great powers, is it unreasonable to suppose that they should be found in the Constitution, in plain and unambiguous language?

First, then, I will inquire concerning the power of Congress to create corporations. No such power is expressly granted. It is not claimed by any intelligent public man to have been so granted. The history of the Constitution shows that a proposition to confer upon Congress, by appropriate words, such power, was rejected by a very large majority in the Constitutional Convention. (See Elliot's Debates, vol. 5, page 543.)

Alexander Hamilton in his great argument, in 1791, on the right of Congress to charter the United States Bank, conceded the entire absence of any express or substantive grant of such power in the Constitution, but he claimed that the right existed as an incident to other powers which were expressly granted, and that it could only be rightfully exercised in those cases in which such a corporation was a necessary and proper means or instrument for the execution of such expressly granted power. As Congress was expressly empowered to levy and collect large revenues and borrow money for the uses of the Government, he insisted that it might create a great financial corporation as a necessary and proper instrument to aid in the administration of its finances.

In the great case of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland, (4 Wheaton, p. 411,) which involved the question of the validity of the charter of that bank, Chief Justice Marshall, in 1819, speaking of the alleged power of Congress to create corporations, said:

"The power of creating a corporation is never used for its own sake, but for the purpose of effecting something else. No sufficient reason is therefore perceived why it may not pass as incidental to those powers which are expressly given if it be a direct mode of executing them."

In 1824 the same great jurist in the case of Osborn vs. United States Bank, (9 Wheaton, p. 860,) speaking of the alleged power of Congress to create corporations generally, said:

"It has never been supposed that Congress could create such corporations. The whole opinion of the court in the case of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland is founded on and sustained by the idea that the bank is an instrument which is necessary and proper for carrying into effect the powers vested in the Government of the United States."

In perfect harmony with these judicial decisions are the opinions of every other enlightened jurist or statesman in our country's history, except many of the early fathers, who earnestly insisted that these interpretations gave too much power to the Federal Government and exceeded the limits of safety and of sound construction. In my judgment, they go to the verge of reasonable and just construction, and ought never to be extended further. I affirm, therefore, that Congress has no power to create any corporations, except such only as are necessary and proper, or constitute a direct mode for the execution of some expressly granted power. Such cases are fortunately very few. The domain of congressional power does not extend to or require the creation of private corporations or monopolies to be controlled by the Federal Government and destroy the vitality of the States.

Then, Mr. Speaker, where does Congress get the right to enter a State, and tamper with her corporations, and entice them by the promise of privileges and franchises denied them by the State, or drive them by the threat of a diminution of those privileges and franchises, to desert their allegiance and obligations to the State, and seek protection under the ampler wing of the Federal Government? They get it nowhere. It is a myth. It is an assumption, a usurpation. It has no foundation in the Constitution, in authority, or reason. If Congress can empower a railroad company chartered by Indiana to extend its road beyond its lawful terminus to the boundary of the State of Ohio, and thence across that State to the boundary of Pennsylvania, and thence to the city of Philadelphia, or the city of Washington, or elsewhere, contrary to the provisions of its State charter, and without the consent or authority of the States whose territory is to be invaded by it, then it would be hard indeed to imagine what Congress cannot do. Yet the party that dictates the policy of this House, by two or three bills which they have already passed, and several others still pending, assert the right to exercise these extraordinary powers. I will cite enough of these bills to indicate their general character. The first section of House bill 537, which passed this House on the 31st of May last, reads as follows:

"That the Cleveland and Mahoning Railroad Company, a corporation created by the State of Ohio and existing as aforesaid, be, and the same is hereby, authorized and empowered to continue the line of its railroad, and the location and construction thereof, from the village of Youngstown in the county of Mahoning and State of Ohio, (to which point its railroad has been constructed from the city of Cleveland,) to the west line of the State of Pennsylvania, at the county of Lawrence, in said State, and thence to cross said line into said State, and thence to the city of Pittsburgh, or near thereof, by the most advantageous, economical, and practicable route, and at or near said city to connect with any other railroads extending therefrom; and to have and continue the same corporate power and authority, rights, and privileges granted to said company by said State."

The second section provides—

pose of locating its said road to said city of Pittsburg, and to cross any road, street, alley, canal, stream, river, or water in the construction and maintenance of said road, switches, turn-outs, and other proper appendages; and shall have power and authority to acquire by purchase, grant, deed, or gift, any lands, roads, streams, or places necessary for the right of way upon which to construct said road for single or double track, with all necessary, suitable, and proper turn-outs, switches, side tracks, and branches; and also, all necessary grounds for station-houses, depots, water-tanks, engine-houses, machine and repair shops, and other necessary structures and appendages for the economical working and use of said road; and shall also have authority to receive gifts and conveyances of land to aid in the construction of said road and all its appendages."

It is further provided that if the railroad company cannot negotiate satisfactory terms with the private citizens whose land or property it wants, then it may institute proceedings to appropriate their property, not in the courts of their own State, where their rights may be determined by their neighbors, but in some remote Federal court, where their vindication may cost them more than they will gain.

It is further provided that said railroad company may exempt itself from all liability to answer in the tribunals of the State for wrongs done to its citizens by at once removing from the State court to the Federal court any action instituted against it in the former, and compelling the citizens of the State to abandon their just demands, or follow it into the latter court, which in many cases is equivalent in its results to a denial of justice.

These facts sufficiently indicate the novel and most alarming nature of the propositions contained in this series of bills, and I shall quote no more from their particular provisions, but only consider the principles involved in them. They claim for the Federal Government the right to go into the States and against their laws and constitutions to authorize the construction of railroads, canals, and telegraphs, to run wherever Congress may direct, to acquire rights of way in and title to the soil of the State, and to carry on their business within the State without regard to and in defiance of the laws thereof. They claim for the Federal Government, also, the right to confer upon such corporations, created by the State, new and extraordinary powers, in direct violation of State authority. Such legislation, if sustained by the Federal courts, (which I do not believe to be possible,) would lead inevitably to the complete subversion of the rightful control of the States over their greatest material interests, their internal policy and commerce and their citizens and property. The General Government could thus wrest from the States and assert for itself the absolute and sovereign control over the vast accumulations of capital and influence and power embraced in the great systems of internal improvements which have been hitherto established and managed by the States, for the advancement and development of their own interests, and which have become, under their generous care, without Federal aid or interference, after long years of struggling, most fruitful sources of prosperity to their people and of needful revenue to themselves.

I now proceed to consider some of the results of such measures, which will be found to be more intolerable than the assumption of the power itself. The laws of Congress, constitutionally enacted, become the supreme law of the land. When Congress rightfully creates a corporation, or what is the same thing in principle, confers new privileges and franchises on State corporations to be exercised under Federal authority and protection, such laws necessarily override all State legislation, and such corporations become means or instruments of the Federal Government in the execution of some of its expressly granted powers. Such corporations, with all their property, are thus, by the greedy hand of Federal power, snatched from the rightful control of the States and subjected to the exclusive management of the former. If the States are thereafter allowed to exercise any control whatever over them for taxation of their property or otherwise, it can only be done by gracious permission of the central Government. The corporation called the United States Bank was such an instrument, and the Supreme Court have repeatedly announced these principles in connection with it, and have expressly held it beyond the power of the States to tax it or its property. The language of that tribunal, from the pen of Chief Justice Marshall, presents these propositions in a most forcible and unmistakable manner. I will quote a few paragraphs:

"It is of the very essence of supremacy to remove all obstacles to its action within its own sphere, and so to modify every power vested in subordinate governments, as to exempt its own operations from their own influence. This effect need not be stated in terms. It is involved in the declaration of supremacy, so necessarily implied in it that the expression of it could not make it more certain."

"All subjects over which the sovereign power of a State extends are objects of taxation; but those over which it does not extend are upon the soundest principles exempt from taxation. This proposition may almost be pronounced self-evident."

"The sovereignty of a State extends to everything which exists by its own authority or is introduced by its permission; but does it extend to those means which are employed by Congress to carry into execution powers conferred on that body by the people of the United States? We think it demonstrable that it does not." "We find, then, on just theory, a total failure of this original right to tax the means employed by the Government of the Union for the execution of its powers. The right never existed, and the question whether it has been surrendered cannot arise."—McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland, 4 Wheaton, 427.

The same doctrines are reaffirmed by the same court in the subsequent case of Osborn vs. United States Bank, (9 Wheaton, 233,) and in many other cases. They all rest upon the theory that these corporations, thus created or endowed by the Federal Government, become instruments, as it were, in the hands of that Government, and that to suffer them to be taxed at all by the States would be equivalent to allowing them to tax the machinery of the Government itself, and that if the States had the power of such taxation they might abuse it, might tax such instruments out of existence. Hence the denial of the power.

In other words, Congress having no power to create such corporations except in cases where they are a proper and necessary instrumentality for the execution of some granted power, when they are created they at once become totally exempt from all control save that of the creating power, and to admit that they were subject to any other control in the important matter of taxation would be to endanger their very existence. Because, if the States could tax them at all without the consent of the General Government, they could tax them as much or as little as they please, and they might please to impose such burdens upon them as would wholly defeat their objects. The States might then discriminate against them and in favor of their own corporations, and thus drive them out of existence. It was upon such reasoning and arguments the Supreme Court held thirty years ago, and has ever since held, that such corporations and the bonds of the Federal Government are entirely exempt from State and municipal taxation.

Now, apply these principles to Federal railroad, canal, telegraph, and other corporations. If the power to create them exists, the power to control them follows. Then what becomes of the sacred and boasted rights of the States to control their internal affairs and commerce? To raise revenue to pay the expenses of their government by taxation of all the property of their citizens, whether individual or corporate? They have wasted away under the absorbing power of the central Government. Their judicial tribunals are stripped of half their jurisdiction. The great aggregations of wealth in the States, brought into existence by their efforts, and often in part by their means, are added to the great central power to augment its patronage and all-pervading influence and endanger the liberties of the people and destroy our glorious system of government. If Congress can enact such laws as the one to which I have particularly referred, it can by parity of reason and under the same authority enact laws and charters which will give it absolute and sovereign control over all our great works of internal improvement. It can thus acquire, in like manner, the like control over a large portion of the territory of the States without their consent.

Does the Constitution afford a shadow of authority for such enactments? I answer "No; nowhere, by no legitimate construction of any of its provisions." It says, in section eight of article one, that Congress shall have power—

"To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States; and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings."

It appears, therefore, that it is the intention of the Constitution that the United States shall acquire no title to or jurisdiction over any portion of the soil of a State without the consent of the Legislature thereof. And this has been the practice of the Government ever since its organization. It has never attempted in a single instance to do otherwise, except during the late war, when its acts in this particular were dictated by an overruling necessity which can supply no precedent for times of peace. Whenever the United States has desired to occupy any part of the soil of a State for court-houses, navy-yards, or other national purposes, it has first procured the consent of the State by a solemn act of State legislation, expressly ceding jurisdiction to the United States over the desired territory. When it was thought desirable to construct a highway to connect the waters of the Chesapeake and the Ohio, Congress would not permit the Cumberland road to be constructed until the consent thereto of the States of Maryland, Virginia, and Ohio, was expressly granted. James Monroe, in his great constitutional argument which accompanied his veto of the Cumberland road bill in 1822, held that Congress has exclusive control over the revenues of the Government, and may appropriate them to aid in the construction of internal improvements, but has no power itself to construct any such improvements, because to do that involved the exercise of territorial jurisdiction, which belongs to the State alone. There is nothing better settled in American law than that the right of eminent domain is in the States. The right to control the territory within the several States belongs to the States alone.

But in these days of radical and reckless statesmanship we are told that Congress can create corporations to build great highways wherever it pleases, and can take charge of those already created by the States, and under one pretext or another divest the States of their original and unquestionable control over the same, and of their right to tax them, or to regulate the manner in which they shall enjoy their franchises, or carry on their business, or answer for their wrongful acts toward their citizens. This kind of legislation will inevitably rob the States and the people of their most precious and invaluable inheritance—the right of local self-government. No evil ruler on earth could devise a more appropriate or wickedly cunning plan for the attainment of such a result.

It is claimed by the friends of these measures that Congress obtains the requisite power to enact them as an incident to the express power "to establish post offices and post roads," and to regulate commerce "among the several States."

If it can ever be said in this country that the interpretation of a constitutional provision is settled, then it may now be said of the power to establish post roads. It has been the uniform practice of the Government to carry its mails over the highways of the States—to make them "post roads" to the extent of their common use by its mail carriers—but never to open up and construct great highways for the purpose of facilitating the transmission of the mails. Mails never precede but always follow the opening up of a country and of its highways, and if they are rude and imperfect at first, the demands of the people are relatively few and simple. As society advances, and population and intercourse increase, improvements in the facilities and manner of transportation keep pace with them. Hence, the General Government has hitherto come after and not gone before these improvements in the extension of its mails. Shall it change this policy now, when the country is everywhere covered with a network of highways and railroads, and the people and States are everywhere inviting it to make them "post roads?" Shall it now enter into the business of constructing railroads and canals in order to provide ways over which to carry its mails? Is it necessary for it to usurp the control of the railroads and highways, established and constructed under the auspices of the States, in order to protect its postal service? These railroads and many other highways are private property.

It was thought necessary by the framers of our Constitution to insert an express provision to enable the United States to exercise absolute jurisdiction over ten miles square for a seat of Government, and over such places as should be ceded by the States for forts, arsenals, and other purposes. It would seem incredible that such solicitude should have existed about such inconsiderable spots, and yet that those great men should have been willing to confer the power to construct all kinds of highways throughout the country, with the consequent right to take great portions of the soil of the States and exercise exclusive jurisdiction over the same. There does not now and never did, and never can, exist a shadow of necessity or rational pretext for the inauguration of such a system. If inaugurated it could not fail, sooner or later, to prove fatal to the well-being of both Governments. But if I concede the power to build a highway for a "post road" it does not follow that Congress may create great corporations, with millions of capital, to erect all kinds of highways in the States for private gain, to be subject to the exclusive control and jurisdiction of the United States. It requires a most liberal charity not to believe that private gain, and not the interests of the postal service, is the inspiring motive in these measures. The power asserted in this series of bills to do these things is wholly unparalleled in the history of our Government. Why are they attempted now? Is it not done to subordinate the States more completely to the powers in this Capitol?

Does the power to regulate commerce "among the several States" authorize this kind of legislation? It is claimed that it does. This power has been the subject of frequent and elaborate discussion in the courts of the country, and it has received judicial interpretation in many cases. If the word commerce in this provision is to receive its largest and most comprehensive signification, then, indeed, the argument is with the friends of these measures, because thus defined it embraces nearly all the transactions and intercourse of human beings in society. But this definition has never been claimed or approved by any court or intelligent citizen. It has always been held to refer only to those public and business transactions and relations which affect the citizens of different States in their intercourse with each other. Many of the laws of a State may affect commerce in a greater or less degree and yet not be in conflict with the power of Congress.

This provision was designed to secure to the States a complete equality in commercial rights. No State has the power by her laws regulating her internal commerce, or the transaction of commercial business over her great public or corporate highways, to impose restrictions or burdens upon the citizens of one State which she does not alike impose upon those of all the States. She cannot discriminate against any State or section, but her laws and regulations must effect all alike who come within their operation.

In the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, (9 Wheaton, 18,) Chief Justice Marshall, in speaking of the right of a State to enforce its inspection laws, says:

"They form a portion of that immense mass of legislation which embraces everything within the territory of a State not surrendered to the General Government; all which can be most advantageously exercised by the States themselves. Inspection laws, quarantine laws, health laws of every description, as well as laws for regulating the internal commerce of a State, and those which respect turnpike roads, ferries, &c., are component parts of this mass."

In many other decisions by the same court, substantially the same language is employed, and the same doctrine held. There is believed to be no opinion in the entire range of State and Federal decisions which is inconsistent with the one expressed by Judge Marshall. And not one of the great statesmen of our country has every put on record a contrary opinion, excepting always the bolder, but not wiser leaders of the dominant party of this day. In that great argument submitted by Mr. Hamilton to President Washington, already referred to, he, the great leader of the latitudinarian school of statesmen, denied to the General Government all authority to make any work of internal improvement requiring the appropriation by it of any part of the soil or territory of the States without their consent. Thomas Jefferson, another of the great sages of the Republic, seems to have been sadly behind the learning of this age. He, too, always denied the existence of any such power, and, in a message to Congress, recommended the proposal of a constitutional amendment for the adoption of the States, expressly granting it. Mr. Madison, too, unsurpassed in wisdom and practical statesmanship, and the zealous friend of railroads, canals, and other improvements, was equally confident that this power did not exist, and could not be exercised without the aid of an amendment. Albert Gallatin, scarcely inferior to any in the great qualities of the early fathers, in his masterly report to Congress, in 1808, reviewing this whole subject, used the following language:

"The manner in which the public moneys may be applied to such objects, remains to be considered."

It is evident that the United States cannot under the Constitution open any road or canal without the consent of the State through which such road or canal must pass. In order, therefore, to remove every impediment to a national plan of internal improvements, an amendment to the Constitution was suggested by the Executive [referring to Mr. Jefferson] when the subject was recommended to the consideration of Congress. Until this be obtained, the assent of the State being necessary for each improvement, the modifications under which that assent may be given will necessarily control the manner of applying the money."

Justice McLean, of whom it is not unjust to say that he was the foremost of our Federal judges of his time in the liberal construction of the powers of Congress, in his opinion in the Rock Island bridge case, 6 McLean, 524, referring to the powers in question, said:

"Under the commercial power Congress may declare what shall constitute an obstruction or nuisance by a general regulation, and provide for its abatement by indictment or information through the Attorney General; but neither under this power, nor under the power to establish post roads, can Congress construct a bridge over navigable water. This belongs to the local or State authority within which the work is to be done. But this authority must be so exercised as not materially to conflict with the paramount power to regulate commerce."

If Congress can construct a bridge over a navigable water under the power to regulate commerce or to establish post roads, on the same principle it may make turnpikes or railroads throughout the country. The latter power has generally been considered as exhausted in the designation of roads on which the mails are to be transported; and the former by the regulation of commerce upon the high seas, and upon our rivers and lakes. If these limitations are to be departed from there can be no others except the discretion of Congress."

I might multiply such great authorities as these, but it cannot be necessary. These great men were at the birth of our Republic, and, guided and protected by their wisdom and patriotism, it grew great and powerful, and inspired mankind everywhere with new hope, and furnished them a great example. If it is competent for the human mind to comprehend the just meaning of language or the true intent of law, it must be that that capacity was possessed by these men. Their interpretations are almost equal as authority to the highest judicial decisions. The Representative who, having sworn to support the Constitution, should make them his guides as to its true meaning could not go far astray, and would certainly shun the wild chimeras and crotchets and mere partisan dogmas of this day.

I will yield to the temptation to refer to one other decision of our Supreme Court, (Veazie vs. Moor, 14 Howard's Reports, 573,) because it is the latest, having been made in 1852, and is the unanimous judgment of the judges then on the bench of that court, who were Chief Justice Taney and Justices McLean, Wayne, Catron, Daniel, Nelson, Grier, and Curtis. In discussing the power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, the court says:

"The phrase can never be applied to transactions wholly internal, between citizens of the same community, or to a polity and laws whose ends and purposes and operations are restricted to the territory and soil and jurisdiction of such community. Nor can it be properly concluded that because the products of domestic enterprise in agriculture or manufactures, or in the arts, may ultimately become the subjects of foreign commerce, the control of the means or the encouragements by which enterprise is fostered and protected, is legitimately within the import of the phrase foreign commerce, or fairly implied in any investiture of the power to regulate such commerce. A pretension as far reaching as this would extend to contracts between citizen and citizen of the same State, would control the pursuits of the planter, the grazier, the manufacturer, the mechanic, the immense operations of the collieries and mines and furnaces of the country; for there is not one of these avocations the results of which may not become the subjects of foreign commerce, and be borne either by turnpikes, canals, or railroads from point to point within the several States, toward an ultimate destination, like the one above mentioned. Such a pretension would effectually prevent or paralyze every effort at internal improvement by the several States; for it cannot be supposed that the States would exhaust their capital and their credit in the construction of turnpikes, canals, and railroads, the remuneration derivable from which, and all control over which, might be immediately wrested from them, because such public works would be facilities for a commerce, which, while availing itself of those facilities, was unquestionably internal, although intermediately or ultimately it might become foreign."

"The rule here given with respect to the regulation of foreign commerce equally excludes from the regulation of commerce between the States and the Indian tribes, the control over turnpikes, canals, railroads, or the clearing and deepening of water-courses exclusively within the States, or the management of the transportation upon and by means of such improvements. The design and object of that power, as evinced in the history of the Constitution, was to establish a perfect equality among the several States as to commercial rights, and to prevent unjust and invidious distinctions which local jealousies or local and partial interests might be disposed to introduce and maintain. These were the views pressed upon the public attention by the advocates for the adoption of the Constitution, and in accordance therewith have been the expositions of this instrument propounded by this court."

These views constitute a triumphant and authoritative refutation of the whole system of legislation to which I refer. Their statements are so clear and reasonable as to elicit approval from every unprejudiced mind. Their correctness becomes painfully apparent when we follow the opposite doctrines to their results. Admit these extraordinary powers to exist in Congress, and then let any intelligent man ask his own judgment what Congress may not do under their cover. It can go into the States and take from their hitherto undisputed control and regulate by its own laws and agents the chief highways of the States, and such others as it may see fit to authorize; it may assume absolute control in that way of a great part of the corporate and other property of the citizens of the State; and thus, without reducing the burdens, immensely diminish the revenues of the State, and thereby greatly increase the burdens of the people. No sane man needs, in these days of reckless extravagance and official infidelity, to be told that the vast interests and property to be affected by the legislation in question can be infinitely better managed under the auspices of the States and of individuals than under any possible system of Federal management. It is equally apparent that this incessant absorption of State power and jurisdiction by the General Government cannot fail to weaken the former and instruct their citizens to look here for that care and protection which until now they have obtained at home, and rapidly to loosen the bonds of their attachment to their States and to diminish their pride and interest in them. Then the blighting work of centralization will have been accomplished and local self-government destroyed, and the small rivulets and original sources of political power in this country will have become corrupted and the central government a despotism. The patriotic alarm, sounded none too soon by President Johnson on the 22d of February last, will then have become verified prophecy.

It is not possible, if the history of our country has any value or contains any truth, that it was ever intended by the framers of our Federal Constitution, who were at the same time pioneers and equally interested in the organization of our State governments, that the former should ever attempt to take the management of or legislate for the private and local affairs and interests of the people in the States. Such policy is everywhere deprecated and denounced by them as most dangerous to the best interests of both Governments. They have always, and with singular unanimity and tenacity, insisted that the chief element in our system of governments, which at once combines safety to liberty and great strength, is that of a well-defined and faithfully observed division of powers between the general and the local governments. It was their most cherished aim to establish firmly and observe faithfully this division. Let us not tolerate any other purpose. We cannot cultivate a sounder or more beneficent policy. Let us devote the energies of this General Government to its appropriate duties; to the wise superintendence of those general interests which pertain to and can be best administered by it; to its vast external affairs. Let us look more to the economical management of its finances and the reduction of the burdens of the people. Let us do justice promptly and with a liberal hand to the gallant and self-sacrificing defenders of the Government and country, and hasten to resume our career of union, peace, and prosperity. Let us discountenance all attempts at legislation calculated to produce discontent or sectional agitation. Let us give rest, not new commotion, to our country after its fearful struggles during the last five years, and we shall thus do the most exalted service to it and to mankind.*

The SPEAKER stated there were several gentlemen who wished to speak, but were not now prepared, and if there were no objection they could hand their speeches to the reporters to be printed in the Globe.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

DEATH OF HON. JAMES HUMPHREY.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, when I came to the House a telegram was handed to me announcing the death of my colleague, Hon. JAMES HUMPHREY, of the third congressional district of New York. He died this morning at his residence. The delegation from New York will hereafter decide what is proper to be done on the occasion. Now, as a mark of respect to his memory, I move the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at four o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, June 18, 1866.

Prayer by Rev. G. C. BALDWIN, D.D., of Troy, New York.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Friday last was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HARRIS presented six petitions of citizens of New York, praying for the repeal or modification of the law imposing a tax of ten per cent. on the circulation of State banks after the 1st of July next; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Mrs. Annie E. Dixon, widow of Major Henry T. Dixon, late a paymaster in the United States Army, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the memorial of John C. Simpson, and others, of Salem, Massachusetts, praying for an amendment of the tax bill so as to exempt all sums under $1,000 deposited in savings banks from taxation; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHANDLER presented a petition of citizens of Jersey City, New Jersey, praying for the passage of a general bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, presented a petition of citizens of Union county, Indiana, praying that a pension may be granted to John Pyle; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STEWART. I present the memorial of James McDaniel, S. H. Binge, White Catcher, D. H. Ross, J. B. Jones, and Smith Christie, delegates of the Cherokee nation now in Washington city, setting forth the evils of the present system of the Indian department and praying that the Bureau of Indian Affairs may be transferred to the War Department from the Department of the Interior. They go on to give reasons in favor of the change. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I present the remonstrance of George F. Kidwell, J. H. Caldwell, Edward Edwards, and one hundred and sixty-four other citizens of the first ward of Washington, against the proposed repeal of the charter of Washington city. As the bill is before the Senate, I ask that the remonstrance lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the memorial of Joseph Opocenzky, and divers others, Moravians, of Williams's Prairie, Austin county, in the State of Texas, praying for aid to erect a new Evangelical Moravian church and parsonage in that locality; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FESSENDEN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 513) to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, pay the interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) in relation to the purchase of certain lands at Point Lookout, Maryland, for a military and naval hospital, &c., asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 152) relative to certain guns captured in the late war, have instructed me to report it adversely. I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, from the same committee, to whom was referred a joint resolution (S. R. No. 93) for the appointment of a commission to examine and report upon certain claims of the State of Iowa, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 448) to authorize the construction of a railroad through certain land of the United States in Kansas, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 160) for the relief of William D. Nelson, reported it without amendment.

Mr. POLAND, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 590) for the relief of William Mann and Jacob Sennett, reported it without amendment.

Mr. NESMITH, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 332) to provide for the construction of a wagon road from White Bluffs, in Washington Territory, to Helena, in Montana Territory, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James P. Johnson, praying for compensation for services rendered as a veterinary surgeon in the Army, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 374) for the relief of James P. Johnson. The bill was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joshua Jones, praying for compensation for incidental losses to himself by the occupation of his property by the United States Army, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 521) for the benefit of Henry Horne, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 375) to amend an act granting a pension to the widow of the late Major General Hiram G. Berry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 109) for the relief of Joseph Segar, of Virginia; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WILSON. I have several papers accompanying this joint resolution from Mr. Segar; and I move the reference of the resolution, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Claims, and submit the matter to their consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

OPERATIONS OF THE WESTERN ARMY.

Mr. WADE. I offer the following concurrent resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the members of the Thirty-Ninth Congress the reports of Major Generals William T. Sherman, George H. Thomas, John Pope, J. G. Foster, A. Pleasonton, and E. A. Hitchcock, made to the joint committee on the conduct of the war, together with such other reports as may be received by the commencement of the next session of Congress, the same number and in the same style as were printed of the reports heretofore made by said committee.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. WADE. While the committee on the conduct of the war was in being, we had not much time to investigate the western campaigns, and long before the committee expired we wrote to the generals in the West stating to them that we would like each of them to give us a narrative of what he thought was important. There was some complaint that our investigations had been made principally in regard to the eastern armies, and thereupon the committee requested the leading generals of the western armies to give us a narrative of the operations of the armies under their particular observation, and send it to us as soon as they could. At that time they were very much occupied. Some of them sent in their reports earlier than others, but none of them in time to be bound with the report made by the committee. Their reports, which I now have before me, contain a good deal of information that I think is of the greatest interest to the public. It will furnish most authentic material for history hereafter, because it is the statement of each of those leading generals of the events of the war coming immediately under his particular observation. The report of the committee will be very incomplete unless these reports be printed and bound in the same way that the others were.

The resolution that I have offered is a concurrent resolution, because while we were a committee everything done by us was done by the concurrence of the two branches. I believe this report ought to be printed, and I hope that it will be. I trust that the resolution will pass. It will tend to complete the work that we were engaged in, and it will to some extent do justice to those who led our armies principally in the West, who were very much overlooked during that period by the committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask the Senator whether that will not come properly within the purview of a resolution that was offered the other day for the printing of all the documents in relation to the war. If so, it is hardly worth while to print it separately. I do not make any opposition to the resolution. I merely inquire for information.

Mr. WADE. I am not able to say about that; I do not know.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The resolution that we had up the other day provided for the printing of everything relating to the war, and would include all the reports of the various generals; and I think that resolution would cover the printing of these reports.

Mr. ANTHONY. That resolution has been suspended I understand.

Mr. WADE. I understand that the resolution providing for the printing of all matters connected with the war has been suspended for the present. I do not know what will come of that, nor am I aware that these reports would come within the purview of that resolution. These reports were made to the committee on the conduct of the war, and would have been embraced in their report and submitted with it if they had come in earlier during the period that the committee was in existence. I know that some of these generals exerted themselves very much in order to furnish these statements in season, but their multifarious cares and engagements while in active service prevented them from doing so. I presume that they will be exceedingly interesting matter to the public. They are not quite as technical as the reports made to superior officers or to the Government, but enter into all matters of interest in which the public feel so much concern, and furnish matter for history. If these statements had come in time they would have been made a part of the report of the committee, and would have given to the doings of the western generals that same notoriety among the people which other officers obtained who were engaged in the report of the committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Did the other generals make reports to the committee?

Mr. WADE. The other generals were examined mostly. I believe there were exceptions to that, where we wrote to generals to make reports of what they were doing and what had been done; but generally the previous reports contained examinations under oath. These are not of that nature; they are narratives of the generals themselves, containing statements just as authentic, I suppose, as though they had been under oath, for they are all honorable men, and men of distinction. I leave the matter with the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the resolution had better lie over. It strikes me that this is rather an unusual proceeding. When the committee on the conduct of the war was organized it was with a view to examine into matters of question and report on things that seemed to require elucidation. But this seems to be a history of the western campaigns, about which there was no question at all, and into which there was no specific order to inquire. I do not think it was the object of that committee to present a history of the war. It was only to inquire into matters which seemed to demand inquiry on account of some supposition that things had not been rightly conducted. This, however, is a very different thing; it is a mere statement by generals of their own personal experience. With regard to the previous statements reported by the committee, they were mostly depositions—testimony taken under oath. There were very few of those generals whose testimony was given in the previous reports that wrote any history of their own transactions. I do not know that any question has been raised in regard to the propriety of conduct of any of the gentlemen who have made these reports. The proposition requires consideration because it would seem to involve a considerable expense for printing. It strikes me that it requires a little more consideration than we can give it this morning.

Mr. WADE. What the Senator has stated is mainly true, but not to the extent he has stated. Many of these generals were written to about matters interesting at the time and tending to the same result that the inquiries of the committee did upon matters which they were investigating; but they had not time, really, while they were acting in the field, to write out their answers to the committee's inquiries in time to publish them to the world with the rest. They are of the same character, except that they are not under oath, with the testimony of other generals, and are intended to elucidate points that were in controversy to some extent at the time. We did not ask them to write history, but we asked an answer to certain suggestions, long before the committee ended its work; but these generals being in the field, engaged in active operations, had not time to answer them; and now, when their answers do come, I think they are interesting, and I think it is due to them that they should be published.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Did they not make their report to the Department?

Mr. WADE. I suppose they did make the usual kind of reports to the Department, but they were not, probably, of the character of these. They may have made dry and technical statements such as are generally made to the Department. I think, in justice to the generals who have taken the pains to write us these statements, the public will be willing to defray the expenses of their publication, and do not wish to be debarred of the accounts which they give of the transactions in which they bore so prominent a part. I think the publication ought to be made, but if the Senate judge otherwise, so be it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I believe that these reports ought to be published. That is my first impression, and I do not put very much distrust in the fact that they are not sworn to, as the others were. I think, however, the resolution had better go over, so that we may have a chance to think about it. I might come to a different conclusion in twenty-four hours; but I believe in having the whole matter of the operations of the Army published, including the account which those having charge of the operations in the West give of themselves.

Mr. POMEROY. I did not understand from the Senator from Ohio whether any estimate has been made in regard to the amount of this work, how many volumes it will be, how expensive it will be, what amount of cost it involves.

Mr. WADE. I am told by those who know better than I do that these reports and some that are expected to come in—for instance, General Burnside has not quite finished his report, but expects soon to send it in, and two or three more of the leading generals expect to do so—will probably make two volumes of about the same size as those that were printed by the committee on the conduct of the war, or perhaps not quite as large.

Mr. POMEROY. If it is only to be two volumes, perhaps we can stand it; but I did not know, from the size of the documents on the Senator's desk, that it would not make half a dozen volumes.

Mr. WADE. Not more than two, and rather less in size than those we printed before. So I am told.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills with amendments to each, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 174) to establish a hydrographic office in the Navy Department; and

A bill (S. No. 230) to reimburse the State of West Virginia for moneys expended for the United States in enrolling, equipping, and paying military forces to aid in suppressing the rebellion.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolutions without amendment:

A bill (S. No. 127) for the relief of Jonathan Gordon, late major in the eleventh regiment of infantry;

A bill (S. No. 278) for the relief of Captain John H. Crowell, assistant quartermaster in the United States Army;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 71) referring the petition and papers in the case of Joseph Nock to the Court of Claims; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 85) explanatory of and in addition to the act of May 5, 1864, entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in Wisconsin."

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 156) to amend the ninth section of the act entitled "An act to increase the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, and for other purposes;"

A bill (H. R. No. 474) for the relief of John C. McFerran, of the United States Army;

A bill (H. R. No. 540) in relation to claims for horses turned over to the Government;

A bill (H. R. No. 641) for the relief of Charles M. Stout, late a second lieutenant in company E, seventh regiment Pennsylvania Reserve corps;

A bill (H. R. No. 680) for the relief of certain officers in the volunteer service who failed to make proper returns of stores and other public property;

A bill (H. R. No. 681) for the relief of Celestia P. Hart;

A bill (H. R. No. 682) for the relief of Captain John J. Young, of the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 684) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. McManus, widow of Captain Andrew McManus, late of the sixty-ninth Pennsylvania volunteer infantry;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 79) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to settle the accounts of William A. West, as marshal of the Territory of Nebraska;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 161) for the relief of Captain A. B. Dyer;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 162) for the relief of Charles M. Blake;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 163) for the relief of Joseph Parkins; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 164) for the relief of Fontaine T. Fox, jr.

SAMUEL NORRIS.

Mr. BUCKALEW, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of Samuel Norris, submitted a report accompanied by a joint resolution for his relief. The resolution was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That resolution is merely to refer the claim to the Court of Claims, and I believe the committee were unanimous about it. I presented the petition of this party early in the session, on behalf of a friend who was interested in the matter. The resolution is very short, and I presume there will be no objection to it. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 108) for the relief of Samuel Norris was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to refer back to the Court of Claims, for examination and allowance, the claim of Samuel Norris, of California, for supplies furnished the Indians in that State under contracts made with certain commissioners, or either of them, to negotiate treaties with those Indians, and all papers relating thereto, with instructions to the court that in fixing the amount to be paid to the claimant the rule shall be the actual value of the supplies furnished at the times and places of delivery, of which due proof shall be made by the claimant.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana, what is the significance of the phrase "for examination and allowance?"

Mr. BUCKALEW. The object of this resolution is to authorize the court to allow the claim. They were satisfied of its justice, but they reported against the legal obligation of the Government. This is simply to permit the court to pass upon the merits of the case and pay the party the actual value of the supplies furnished.

Mr. MORRILL. Is it thought that the phrase "allowance" is necessary to confer jurisdiction?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The object is to remove the legal bar which the court reported in the former case; and the allowance of this claim is in accordance with two or three allowances by act of Congress.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not object to it.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move that the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs in this case be printed in order that it may be accessible to the members of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AMERICAN REGISTERS TO VESSELS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up Senate joint resolution No. 104.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 104) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue American registers to the barks Marget and Golden Fleece, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the bark Marget, of the collection district of the port of New York, it being a Prussian-built vessel, but now owned by an American citizen; and also to issue an American register to the bark Golden Fleece, formerly of New Haven, Connecticut.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 156) to amend the ninth section of the act entitled "An act to increase the pay of soldiers in the United States Army, and for other purposes"—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A bill (H. R. No. 474) for the relief of John C. McFerran of the United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A bill (H. R. No. 540) in relation to claims for horses turned over to the Government—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A bill (H. R. No. 641) for the relief of Charles M. Stout, late a second lieutenant in company E, seventh regiment Pennsylvania Reserve corps—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A bill (H. R. No. 680) for the relief of certain officers in the volunteer service who failed to make proper returns of stores and other public property—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A bill (H. R. No. 681) for the relief of Celestia P. Hart—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (H. R. No. 682) for the relief of Captain John J. Young, of the United States Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (H. R. No. 684) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. McManus, widow of Captain Andrew McManus, late of the sixty-ninth Pennsylvania volunteer infantry—to the Committee on Pensions.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 79) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to settle the accounts of William A. West, as marshal of the Territory of Nebraska—to the Committee on Territories.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 161) for the relief of Captain A. B. Dyer—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 162) for the relief of Charles M. Blake—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 163) for the relief of Joseph Parkins—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 164) for the relief of Fontaine T. Fox, jr.—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

HYDROGRAPHIC OFFICE.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 174) to establish a hydrographic office in the Navy Department, which was in section three, line two, after the word "section" to strike out the following words:

And that the sum of $15,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the objects hereinbefore recited in this and the preceding sections.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate concur in that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

WEST VIRGINIA MILITARY CLAIMS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 230) to reimburse the State of West Virginia for moneys expended for the United States in enrolling, equipping, and paying military forces to aid in suppressing the rebellion. The first amendment was on page 1, section one, line five, to strike out the words "a commissioner" and insert the words "three commissioners."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate concur in that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. All the other amendments are consequential on the first amendment, and I move that the Senate concur in them as they are read.

The next amendment was on the same page, line one, to strike out the word "commissioner" and to insert "commissioners."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was on the same page, in section three, line three, to strike out "commissioner" and insert "commissioners."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was on the same page, in section four, line two, to strike out "commissioner" and insert "commissioners."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was on the same page, in section five, line two, to strike out "commissioner" and insert "commissioners."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was on the same page, in the same section, line four, to strike out "he" and insert "they."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. TRUMBULL. These amendments are all of the same character, and I see no necessity for reading them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is proper that they should be read, in the opinion of the Chair. It would not be proper to call on the Senate to act on the amendments without having them read, unless a motion be made to that effect.

The next amendment was on page 3, section six, line one, to strike out "commissioner" and to insert "commissioners."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was in the same section, line three, to strike out "his" and insert "their;" and in line four to strike out "he" and insert "they."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was on page 3, in section six, line six, to strike out the words "he" and "his" and insert in lieu thereof the words "they" and "their."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was on the same page, section six, line eight, to strike out "he" and insert "they."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was on the same page, in line nine of section six, to strike out the word "his" and insert the word "their."

The amendment was concurred in.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. COOPER, his Secretary, announced that the President had approved and signed, on the 15th instant, the following act and joint resolutions:

An act (S. No. 328) for the relief of Mrs. Abigail Ryan;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 51) respecting bounties to colored soldiers, and the pensions, bounties, and allowances to their heirs; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 69) making an appropriation to enable the President to negotiate treaties with certain Indian tribes.

EDWARD ST. CLAIR CLARKE.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 283.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 283) for the relief of Edward St. Clair Clarke was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs that in the settlement of the accounts of Edward St. Clair Clarke, as assistant paymaster United States Navy, there shall be allowed him the sum of $4,022 on account of the loss of that amount of public funds in his hands, by theft, on the night of the 9th of May, 1863, the loss being without neglect or fault on his part.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS S. LYON.

On motion of Mr. TRUMBULL the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 373) releasing to Francis S. Lyon the interest of the United States in certain lands. It proposes to release and confirm any interest which the United States have in the lands described in a deed executed by Wager Swayne, assistant commissioner of the Bureau of Freedmen and Abandoned Lands, in the State of Alabama, to Francis S. Lyon, bearing date February 3, 1866.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HOWARD. I move to take up Senate bill No. 317, relating to the Pacific railroad.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the Senator from Michigan if he would not be willing to yield to another motion. The bill which he now calls up cannot be disposed of during the morning hour, and I desire to move to take up the resolution of the House of Representatives fixing the time for the adjournment, in order to settle that question.

Mr. HOWARD. It will be time enough for that in the course of to-day or to-morrow. I think we shall get through with this bill in a few minutes.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Of course, if the Senator thinks we can soon get through with this bill, I shall not insist.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 317) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, to insert as a new section:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Union Pacific Railroad Company, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, without reference to the one hundredth meridian of longitude, are hereby authorized to continue their road westward, according to the best and most practicable route, in a continuous and unbroken line until they shall meet and connect with the Central Pacific Railroad; and the Central Pacific Railroad Company are hereby authorized to continue their road eastward, according to the best and most practicable route, in a continuous and unbroken line until they shall meet and connect with the Union Pacific railroad: Provided, That the words "continuous and unbroken line" shall not be held to include necessary bridges and tunnels on the routes of said roads.

Mr. CONNESS. I prepared a substitute for that section, which I submitted on Friday last, when it was ordered to be printed. I have now modified it slightly, and offer it as an amendment to the amendment. It is prepared in accordance with the views of several gentlemen. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the committee's amendment and insert this:

That the Union Pacific Railroad Company, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, are hereby authorized to locate, construct, and continue their road from Omaha, in Nebraska Territory, westward, according to the best and most practicable route, and without reference to the initial point on the one hundredth meridian of west longitude, as now provided by law, in a continuous completed line, until they shall meet and connect with the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California; and the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, with the consent and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, are hereby authorized to locate, construct, and continue their road eastward, in a continuous completed line, until they shall meet and connect with the Union Pacific railroad: Provided, That each of the above-named companies shall have the right, when the nature of the work to be done, by reason of deep cuts and tunnels, shall for the expeditious construction of the Pacific railroad require it, to work for an extent of not to exceed three hundred miles in advance of their continuous completed lines.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to know how that changes the present law; exactly what effect it has upon the present law in reference to that railroad.

Mr. CONNESS. It simply restores the provision contained in the law of 1862, which left the whole route open between the two companies that are to construct the main line in this language: "that in case" the Union Pacific Railroad Company "shall complete their line to the eastern boundary of California before it is completed across said State by the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, said first-named company," the Union Pacific Railroad Company, "is hereby authorized to continue in constructing the same through California, with the consent of said State, upon the terms mentioned in this act, until said roads shall meet and connect and the whole line of said railroad and telegraph is completed; and the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, after completing its road across said State, is authorized to continue the construction of said railroad and telegraph through the Territories of the United States to the Missouri river, including the branch roads specified in this act upon the routes hereinbefore and hereinafter indicated, on the terms and conditions provided in this act in relation to the said Union Pacific Railroad Company, until said roads shall meet and connect, and the whole line of said railroad and branches and telegraph is completed."

The whole purpose was to get the main trunk constructed in the shortest possible time. In 1864, through the conference that was held between the two Houses, there was a provision introduced which now is a part of the law of 1864, limiting the Central Pacific Railroad Company to an arbitrary line one hundred and fifty miles from the eastern boundary of California. This simply opens it to what it was before, so that the road shall be constructed by each company each way, and they shall travel until they meet, giving neither company any preference but securing the early completion of the work.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I desire to submit an amendment to come in at the end of the first section. I have shown it to the Secretary of the Interior and to the chairman of the committee, and I suppose there will be no objection to it. Those gentlemen are for it, and I do not know of anybody who is opposed to it. My amendment is to insert at the close of the first section these words:

And provided further, That should the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division, under the provisions of this act, file their map locating their road upon a different route from that indicated in their map heretofore filed in the Department of the Interior, then and in that event the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company, or their assigns, being authorized to connect with the said railroad under the several acts to which this is an amendment, may be, and are hereby, authorized to continue their road westward from the point provided for in the aforesaid acts to a connection with the Union Pacific railroad at some point east of the one hundredth meridian of longitude, and for that purpose may have the same provisions and be subject to all the restrictions and limitations of the said Pacific railroad acts.

Mr. GRIMES. That would give them, as I understand, $16,000 a mile for the length of road which the Hannibal and St. Joseph Company may construct.

Mr. POMEROY. Yes, sir, for that little distance from the point where they are limited now to Fort Kearney.

Mr. GRIMES. I think the chairman of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad stated to the Senate some time ago that it was the conviction of that committee that no grants of money should be made to any railroad in addition to those made at the last Congress. That enunciation having been made here in the Senate, it has prevented applications from other quarters being made that would otherwise have been made. Now, if we are going to reverse that decision of the committee to whom questions of this kind have been committed by the Senate, I think we should have a complete understanding upon the subject, and then the policy of the body should be changed with full knowledge.

Mr. SHERMAN. This amendment, I presume, increases the amount to be granted to the Atchison branch.

Mr. POMEROY. Slightly, in case they move the line of their road.

Mr. SHERMAN. If this amendment should be attached in the Senate, I have no doubt it will defeat the bill, because I think it is certain that if the House of Representatives are determined on anything it is that they will not grant any additional money aid to railroads. I assented to the amendment proposed in behalf of the Pacific railroad, eastern division, because it gave them a route which I thought, from the information we had before us, would be better, and it would involve no expense to the Government, while it would probably create a rival competition between two lines as to which would reach the neighborhood of Denver first. It was manifestly for the interest of the Government to allow them to take the best route, one which would enable them to make the most progress westward. Since that time an amendment has been added to the bill in behalf of the California or Pacific division of the road, to which I have no objection; but if this is now added, it will undoubtedly defeat the bill. It seems to me that if the Senator from Kansas desires to see this bill pass, he ought not to add this provision. This is the third prong of the Pacific railroad. I think a large majority of the Senate is now convinced that we ought never to have agreed to make more than one line of Pacific railroad; but on account of the conflicting interests when the law passed, we authorized four lines, one to start from Sioux City, one from Omaha, one from St. Joseph, and another from Leavenworth with a short branch, making a many-pronged railroad, and we have given grants of money to all these lines. I doubt very much whether the Sioux City branch will ever be built. If it is built at all, it will probably be built to Omaha.

Another thing to be considered is, that Kansas is a State, and will receive more money from the United States than has ever been given by the United States Government to all the States together. Kansas is the only State in which the Government of the United States has ever undertaken to build railroads. All the other States have built their own systems of railroads without any other aid from the national Government except land grants and ordinary facilities, and the Government has been compensated for its land grants by the increased value given to the remaining lands.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator may not be aware that this Republican valley is mostly in Nebraska.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that; but this bill authorizes the road to be extended westward from Fort Riley, in the State of Kansas. If they should follow the existing law they would soon pass out of the State of Kansas and finish their road in the Territory of Nebraska; but the first section of this bill authorizes the road to be extended westwardly to a point west of the one hundredth meridian, and every mile of that road is in the State of Kansas.

Under these circumstances, the United States having already granted large money grants to the State of Kansas, it seems to me that it is not very modest, to say the least, to ask more of us at this time for that State. An attempt to build two branches of the Pacific railroad within one State is rather too much, in my judgment. I am willing to extend all facilities to the Pacific railroad or any of its branches that will not involve a larger appropriation of money, but I am not willing to grant any additional sums of money. As this amendment does that, I shall certainly vote against it, and it will undoubtedly defeat the bill, in my opinion.

Mr. CONNESS. The bill before the Senate does not propose to increase the grants to any of the Pacific railroad companies—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the special order.

Several SENATORS. Let us finish this bill.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the order of the day will be postponed temporarily until we get through with this bill. It will not occupy long, I am satisfied.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order is the bill (S. No. 257) to regulate the occupation of mineral lands and to extend the right of preemption thereto.

Mr. HOWARD. I suggest that that bill be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can be done by common consent.

Mr. WILSON. I hope it will not be done.

Mr. CONNESS. This bill will only occupy a few minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. And it is a very important bill.

Mr. WILSON. I think it will take some time.

Mr. CONNESS. Do I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to object to our continuing the consideration of this bill?

Mr. WILSON. I desire to go on with the regular order of business.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let this bill be disposed of.

Mr. WILSON. I want time to look into this bill and time to discuss it fully. I expect to do so, and I desire it to go over for that purpose. I regard it as a bill that works a great wrong to those engaged in constructing this road. I desire time to look into it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to laying aside the special order, it is before the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS. Before we proceed with the special order, I beg leave to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts, since he has given notice that he will discuss the Pacific railroad bill, from the consideration of which we are now passing, that those of us who are much interested in the passage of that bill would like that he should prepare himself and be ready to discuss it to-morrow morning in the morning hour. We intend to call it up, because it is a bill requiring immediate consideration.

Mr. POMEROY. I believe the Senator from Massachusetts does not ask that it be put over on account of the amendment which I have offered, but on account of the bill itself.

Mr. GRIMES. I should ask it on that account. I move that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire the indulgence of the Senate for a moment. I rise, Mr. President, to a privileged question. My engagements were such this morning that I could not be in the Senate during the morning hour. A friend has called my attention to the New York Tribune, of Friday last, in which, giving an account of the personal difficulty between General ROUSSEAU, of the House of Representatives, and Mr. GRINNELL, I find this remark, speaking of General ROUSSEAU:

"Among his backers who were present was Senator SAULSBURY, who had been awaiting for some time the anticipated assault."

Mr. President, I never assaulted any man. I never advised any man to assault another. It is true that I was present at the time the difficulty occurred; but I was at the other end of the porch and I did not see the commencement of it. Governor Saulsbury, who had been sitting by my side during the day, upon the invitation of our Representative in the other House left the Senate Chamber with the understanding that if the House adjourned before the Senate he would come back here, and if the Senate adjourned before the House I should go over there. The Senate did adjourn before the House, and I went over to the House. In a few moments after I got over there a motion was made to adjourn. To avoid the crowd, we started out and got into the Rotunda. It was raining very hard and we went on the east front to see if we could procure a carriage. While waiting for a carriage, with our backs turned toward General ROUSSEAU and Mr. GRINNELL, I heard the application of a cane to some person, and turned round and saw that General ROUSSEAU was caning Mr. GRINNELL.

That is my connection and all the connection I had with it. It was accidentally that I was there. I never heard of any assault being contemplated, had no knowledge of it in the world, was simply there accidentally; and yet these reporters, who love to tell the truth so well, must drag me into the public papers as an accomplice to an assault! I wish to pronounce the whole thing a falsehood from beginning to end, and the author a willful liar.

MINERAL LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 257) to regulate the occupation of mineral lands and to extend the right of preemption thereto, the question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining to strike out all of the original bill after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the mineral lands of the public domain, both surveyed and unsurveyed, are hereby declared to be free and open to exploration and occupation by all citizens of the United States, and those who have declared their intention to become citizens, subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by law, and subject also to the local custom or rules of miners in the several mining districts, so far as the same may not be in conflict with the laws of the United States.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That whenever any person or association of persons claim a vein or lode of quartz or other rock in place, bearing gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper, having previously occupied and improved the same according to the local custom or rules of miners in the district where the same is situated, and in regard to whose possession there is no controversy or opposing claim, it shall and may be lawful for said claimant or association of claimants to file in the local land office a plat of the same so extended laterally or otherwise as to conform to the local laws, customs, and rules of miners, and to enter such tract and receive a patent therefor, granting such mine, together with the right to follow said vein or lode, with its dips, angles, and variations, to any depth, although it may enter the land adjoining, which land adjoining shall be sold subject to this condition, and upon the further indefeasible condition, both to be fully expressed in the patent, that the owners and occupants of the mine so appropriated and held shall pay into the Treasury of the United States, in each and every year until the national debt shall have been paid, three per cent. of the net product of said mine, vein, or lode, which shall be in lieu of the stamp tax now levied upon bullion extracted from the public domain.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That upon the filing of the plat and survey as provided in the second section of this act, the register of the land office shall publish a notice of the same in a newspaper published nearest to the location of said claim, and shall also post such notice in his office for the period of ninety days; and after the expiration of said period, if no adverse claim shall have been filed, it shall be the duty of the surveyor general, upon application of the party, to survey the premises and make a plat thereof, indorsed with his approval, designating the number and description of the location; and upon the payment to the proper officer of five dollars per acre the register of the land office shall transmit to the General Land Office said plat, survey, and description, and a patent shall issue for the same thereupon; and the surveyor general shall receive for such service such compensation as is allowed by law, with mileage not to exceed at legal rates the amount chargeable from the county seat of the county in which the claim may be situated to the said claim.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That when such location and entry of a mine shall be upon unsurveyed lands, it shall and may be lawful, after the extension thereto of the public surveys, to adjust the surveys to the limits of the premises according to the location and possession and plat aforesaid, and the surveyor general may, in extending the surveys, vary the same from a rectangular form to suit the circumstances of the country and the local rules, laws, and customs of miners; Provided, That no location hereafter made shall exceed three hundred feet in length along the vein for each locator, with an additional claim for discovery to the discoverer with the right to follow such vein to any depth, with all its dips, variations, and angles, together with a reasonable quantity of surface for the convenient working of the same as fixed by local rules.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to establish additional land districts and to appoint the necessary officers under existing laws, wherever he may deem the same necessary for the public convenience in executing the provisions of this act.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That whenever adverse claimants to any mine located, and claimed as aforesaid, shall appear, before the approval of the survey as provided in the third section of this act, all proceedings shall be stayed until a final settlement and adjudication in the courts of competent jurisdiction of the rights of possession to such claim, when a patent may issue as in other cases.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That wherever, prior to the passage of this act, upon the lands heretofore designated as mineral lands which have been excluded from survey and sale, there have been homesteads made by citizens of the United States, or persons who have declared their intention to become citizens, which homesteads have been made, improved, and used for agricultural purposes, and upon which there have been no valuable mines of gold, silver, cinnabar, or platinum discovered, or which are properly agricultural lands, the said settlers or owners of such homesteads shall have a right of preemption thereto, and shall be entitled to purchase the same at the price of $1 25 per acre, and in quantity not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres, or said parties may avail themselves of the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 20, 1862, entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," and acts amendatory thereof.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That upon the survey of the lands aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior may designate and set apart such portions of the said lands as are clearly agricultural lands, which lands shall thereafter be subject to preemption and sale as other public lands of the United States, and subject to all the laws and regulations applicable to the same.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes aforesaid is hereby acknowledged and confirmed: Provided, however, That whenever, after the passage of this act, any person or persons shall, in the construction of any ditch or canal, injure or damage the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the right of way for the construction of highways over public lands, not reserved for public uses, is hereby granted.

Mr. STEWART. I have three or four slight amendments to offer to the committee's amendment. After the word "situated," in line six of section two, I move to insert the words "and having expended in actual labor and improvements thereon an amount of not less than $1,000;" so that the clause will read:

That whenever any person or association of persons claim a vein or lode of quartz or other rock in place, bearing gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper, having previously occupied and improved the same according to the local custom or rules of miners in the district where the same is situated, and having expended in actual labor and improvements thereon an amount of not less than $1,000, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. In lines sixteen and seventeen of the second section I move to strike out the words "both to be fully expressed in the patent."

Mr. McDougall. I should like the Senator from Nevada to explain that amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Those words are embodied in another portion of the amendment, and I propose to strike them out here.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. In section three of the amendment, line eleven, after the word "location," I move to insert the words "the value of the labor and improvements, and the character of the vein exposed;" so that the clause will read:

It shall be the duty of the surveyor general, upon application of the party, to survey the premises and make a plat thereof, indorsed with his approval, designating the number and description of the location and value of the labor and improvements, and the character of the vein exposed.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. In section seven of the amendment, line eight, I move to strike out the word "platinum" and to insert the word "copper," and in line nine, after the word "discovered," to strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I move further to amend the amendment by adding the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That as a further condition of sale, in the absence of necessary legislation by Congress, the local Legislature of any State or Territory may provide rules for working mines, involving easements, drainage, and other necessary means for their complete development; and these conditions shall be fully expressed in the patent.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the magnitude of the interests involved in this bill, and my long residence in the mining regions of the Pacific, make it proper for me to submit an explanation of the laws and customs of miners, the importance of mining, and the objects sought to be attained by the proposed legislation.

Upon the discovery of gold in California in 1848, a large emigration of young men immediately rushed to that modern Ophir. These people, numbering in a few months hundreds of thousands, on arriving at their future home found no laws governing the possession and occupation of mines but the common law of right, which Americans alone are educated to administer. They were forced by the very necessity of the case to make laws for themselves. The reason and justice of the laws they formed challenge the admiration of all who investigate them. Each mining district, in an area extending over not less than fifty thousand square miles, formed its own rules and adopted its own customs. The similarity of these rules and customs throughout the entire mining region was so great as to attain all the beneficial results of well-digested, general laws. These regulations were thoroughly democratic in their character, guarding against every form of monopoly, and requiring continued work and occupation in good faith to constitute a valid possession.

After the admission of California as a State in September, 1850, Mr. Fremont, then Senator from that State, introduced a bill, the purpose of which was to establish police regulations in the mines. It imposed a small tax upon the miners to defray the expenses of the system. Many Senators, when the bill came up for discussion, expressed the opinion that the mines ought to be sold or some means devised by which a direct revenue might be obtained from that source. Various amendments were offered to effect these purposes. But Mr. Benton took a leading part in the discussion, and contended throughout that good policy required that the mines should remain free and open for exploration and development. Mr. Seward sustained Mr. Benton. I will read a few extracts from the remarks of each, as reported in the Globe, to show the sentiment that prevailed in the Senate at that time. Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, offered an amendment to the proposed scheme which introduced a system of seigniorage, the money going directly to the Government and the Government paying back a certain portion of it to the miner. Upon that amendment Mr. Benton made the following remarks, among others:

"The motion which has been made by the Senator from Ohio, and the very objection made to it by the Senator from California, brings up the question which I have no doubt has occupied the public mind and the minds of the members of Congress, and which everybody could foresee would come up in the course of this debate. It is the question whether the United States will undertake to make a revenue out of the mines. This question is now brought up by the motion on the one side and the objection on the other; a question which all must have seen would arise, and to the consideration of which the attention of the whole Senate ought to be directed. I am decidedly of the opinion that the United States ought not to undertake to make a revenue out of the mines, that the United States ought to content herself with getting the wealth out of the bowels of the earth itself, which is now lying so useless, that she ought to content herself with receiving what will pay the expenses of the administration of such a system, and that system should be just as simple as it can be made, and at the same time preserve order among the miners."

He goes on at length discussing the disadvantages of encumbering the enterprise of that country with regulations further than simply to preserve order. He says:

"I therefore wholly object to the whole idea of deriving revenue from these mines. I am in favor of the simplest possible mode which will cover the expenses."

Mr. Seward, in the course of the debate, said:

"I will add now only this: that the objects of the United States in regard to the gold mines in California should be, in the first place, to bring to the general public use of the people of the United States the largest possible acquisition of national wealth from their newly-discovered fountains; and secondly, to render the mining operations conducive to the best and speediest possible settlement of our vast countries on the Pacific coast which are so soon to exercise boundless commercial, social, and political influences over the eastern world. The pecuniary wealth and the political power thus to be obtained will be obtained just in proportion to the number and assiduity of the persons who shall be engaged in working the mines of California. That number and that assiduity will be in exact proportion to the liberality of the terms upon which the mines shall be opened. It was on this ground that I voted against the proposition of my honorable friend from Ohio, [Mr. Ewing,] which contemplated seigniorage and revenue to the Government from these mines, and in favor of the provision contained in the bill, which stipulates for nothing in the way of revenue, but enough to pay the expenses of regulating the operations in the mines."

The arguments of Senators in favor of free mining finally prevailed, and all amendments looking to sale or direct revenue were voted down, and the bill finally passed the Senate, without material amendment, in its original form, but failed in the House from want of time to consider it. This solemn declaration on the part of the Senate in favor of a just and liberal policy to the miners was hailed by them as a practical recognition of their possessory rights, and greatly encouraged and stimulated mining enterprise and laid the foundation for a system of local government now in full force over a vast region of country inhabited by near a million men.

The Legislature of California, at their following session, in 1851, had under consideration the subject of legislating for the mines; and after full and careful investigation wisely concluded to declare that the rules and regulations of the miners themselves might be offered in evidence in all controversies respecting mining claims, and when not in conflict with the constitution or laws of the State or of the United States should govern the decision of the action. A series of wise judicial decisions molded these regulations and customs into a comprehensive system of common law, embracing not only mining law, (properly speaking,) but also regulating the use of water for mining purposes. The same system has spread over all the interior States and Territories where mines have been found as far east as the Missouri river. The miner's law is a part of the miner's nature. He made it. It is his own bantling, and he loves it, trusts it, and obeys it. He has given the honest toil of his life to discover wealth which when found is protected by no higher law than that enacted by himself under the implied sanction of a just and generous Government. Miners as a community devote three fourths of their aggregate labor to exploration, and consequently are, and ever will remain, poor, while individuals amass large fortune, and the treasury of the world is augmented and replenished.

Senators who have not given this subject special attention can hardly realize the wonderful results of this system of free mining. The incentive to the pioneer held out by the reward of a gold or silver mine, if he can find one, is magical upon the sanguine temperament of the prospector. For near a quarter of a century a race of men, constituting a majority by far of all the miners of the West, patient of toil, hopeful of success, deprived of the associations of home and family, have devoted themselves, with untiring energy, to sinking deep shafts, running tunnels thousands of feet in solid granite, traversing deserts, climbing mountains, and enduring every conceivable hardship and privation, exploring for mines, all predicated upon the idea that no change would be made in this system that would deprive them of their hard-earned treasure. Some of these have found valuable mines and a sure prospect of wealth and comfort when the appliances of capital and machinery shall be brought to their aid. Others have received no compensation but anticipation, no reward but hope.

While these people have done little for themselves they have done valuable service for this Government. They have enhanced the value of the property of the nation near one hundred per cent., as I shall hereafter show, and they have converted that vast unknown region, extending from British Columbia on the north to Mexico on the south, and from the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains to the western decline of the Sierra Nevada, into the great gold and silver fields of the United States, surpassing in richness and extent the mines of any other nation on the globe. I assert, and no one familiar with the subject will question the fact, that the sand plains, alkaline deserts, and dreary mountains of rocks and sage brush of the great interior would have been as worthless to-day as when they were marked by geographers as the great American desert but for this system of free mining fostered by our neglect and matured and perfected by our generous inaction. No miner has ever doubted the continued good faith of the Government, but has put his trust in its justice and liberality, traversing mountain and desert as incessantly and as hopefully as the farmer of the West has plowed his field. What he now occupies he has discovered and added to the wealth of the nation.

This good faith of the Government (promised, as it were, by the action of this Senate sixteen years ago) not only inspired enterprise and led to discoveries the magnitude and importance of which cannot be overestimated, but in the time of the severest trials of the Union, no people were more loyal than the miners. They lost no opportunity to enlist in your armies or contribute to the support of the Government. Their liberal donation to the sanitary fund was but a slight manifestation of their deep love of the Union and sympathy for its suffering heroes. The little town in which I reside contributed in gold coin over $112,000, being at the time about thirty dollars to each voting inhabitant, and a like liberality was displayed by the whole coast. The people are truly grateful to a generous Government, and time seems to have strengthened the tender regard they feel for their native land and their early homes. But they look with jealous eyes upon every proposition for the sale of the mines which they have discovered and made valuable. Any public man who advocates it, with whatever motive, is liable to be condemned and discarded as an unfaithful servant. The reason for this is obvious. It is their all, secured through long years of incessant toil and privation, and they associate any sale with a sale at auction where capital is to compete with poverty, fraud and intrigue with truth and honesty. It is not because they do not desire a fee-simple title, for this they would prize above all else; but most of them are poor and unable to purchase in competition with capitalists and speculators, which the adoption of any plan heretofore proposed would compel them to do; and for these reasons the opposition to the sale of the mineral lands has been unanimous in the mining States and Territories.

To extend the preemption system, applicable to agricultural lands, to mines is absolutely absurd and impossible. Nature does not deposit the precious metals in rectangular forms descending between perpendicular lines into the earth, but in veins or lodes varying from one foot to three hundred feet in width, dipping from a perpendicular from one to eighty degrees, and coursing through mountains and ravines at nearly every point of the compass. In exploring for vein mines it is a vein or lode that is discovered, not a quarter section of land marked by surveyed boundaries. In working a vein more or less land is required, depending upon its size, course, dip, and a great variety of other circumstances not possible to provide for in passing general laws. Sometimes these veins are found in groups, within a few feet of each other, and dipping into the earth at an angle of from thirty to fifty degrees, as at Freiberg, in Saxony, or Austin, in Nevada. In such case a person buying a single acre in a rectangular form would have several mines at the surface and none at five hundred or a thousand feet in depth. With such a division of a mine, one owning it at the surface, another at a greater depth, neither would be justified in expending money in costly machinery, deep shafts, and long tunnels for the working of the same. Nor will it do to sell the land in advance of discovery, for this would stop explorations and practically limit our mining wealth to the mines already found, for no one would prospect with much energy upon the land of another, and land speculators never find mines. The mineral lands must remain open and free to exploration and development, and while this policy is pursued our mineral resources are inexhaustible. There is room enough for every prospector who wishes to try his luck in hunting for new mines for a thousand years of exploration, and yet there will be plenty of mines undiscovered. It would be a national calamity to adopt any system that would close that region to the prospector.

The question then presents itself, how shall the Government give title, so important for permanent prosperity, and avoid these intolerable evils? I answer, there is but one mode, and that is to assure the title to those who now or hereafter may occupy according to local rules suited to the character of the mines and the circumstances of each mining district. The importance of legislation of this kind is daily increasing by the agitation of the subject, by the introduction of bills looking to what the miners regard as a general system of confiscation, destroying all confidence in mining titles, and by the absolute necessity of some system guarantying to capitalists security for their investment.

Your committee, feeling that the time has arrived when the prosperity of the country requires a settlement of this question, have carefully prepared a substitute for the bill introduced by the Senator from Ohio, which they believe is free from most of the objections hitherto urged to a sale of the mines. The system proposed by this report may be improved by experience, but your committee would apprehend evil consequences from any material change of the plan at this time. It continues the system of free mining, holding the mineral lands open to exploration and occupation subject to legislation by Congress and local rules. It recognizes the obligation of the Government to respect private rights which have grown up under its tacit consent and approval. It is in harmony with the legislation of 1865, which provided that—

"No possessory action between individuals in any of the courts of the United States for the recovery of any mining title, or for damages to such title, shall be affected by the fact that the paramount title to the land on which said mines are is in the United States, but each case shall be adjudged by the law of possession."

It is also in harmony with the rules of property, as understood by a million men, with the legislation of nine States and Territories, with a course of judicial decisions extending over near a quarter of a century and finally ratified and confirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. In short, it is in harmony with justice and good policy.

The plan further proposes to allow the miners who have and who may hereafter occupy and improve mines in good faith, and according to the local rules, to purchase at the rate of five dollars per acre and receive a patent therefor in such a form as shall grant the mine with its dips, spurs, and angles to any depth, with such reasonable amount of surface as the miners shall determine by local rules to be necessary for the working of the same.

It also provides, in case of dispute as to the right of possession, for the determination of that question in the local courts where the miners' laws are understood and fairly administered. It makes the public surveys conform to nature, not nature to the surveys. It requires the payment of three per cent. of the net proceeds into the Treasury until the national debt shall have been paid, which is to be in lieu of the stamp tax now levied. It furnishes the means to actual settlers of acquiring title to their homesteads by segregating the agricultural from the mineral lands, and confirms the rights to the use of water and the right of way for ditches as established by local law and the decisions of the courts. In short, it proposes no new system, but sanctions, regulates, and confirms a system to which the people are devotedly attached, and removes a cloud of doubt and uncertainty which recently has depressed and retarded the growth and prosperity of our mining communities.

In my opinion this bill will furnish homes to thousands of families, give stability to mining titles, invite capital, and greatly increase the production of the precious metals. The proposed tax is not large and will not be oppressive, but it is all the subject will bear, and is just three per cent. more than the farmer pays on the net product of his farm, but those who have net product have money with which to pay, and the miners never refuse to pay as long as they have money. Any tax upon the gross proceeds, however light, is oppressive and unjust. In the forcible language of the Senator from California, "it is a tax upon effort." Nearly all the mines through the various stages of their development produce more or less gold and silver, but until they commence making dividends the assessments usually exceed the product, and sometimes a hundred to one. Any further burden under these circumstances tends to break down the effort before the mine is proved. It is like the tax on crude petroleum imposed last year and removed this by a special act. It would be much better policy for the Government to offer a reward for the discovery and development of a mine than to embarrass the prospector who has realized nothing but loss and privation. The fact that the explorers and pioneers of a mining region are usually poor is no reason why the Government should not encourage mining, for we owe a large debt, and while it exists a dollar's worth of gold or silver dug from the earth is much more serviceable to the Government than a dollar's worth of cotton or any other product.

The increase of the precious metals serves a double purpose. A dollar in gold or silver adds as much to the wealth of the nation, is just as good an export, and will stimulate commerce and enterprise as much, as the choicest products of any country. If used as an export it costs less in transportation than any other product, and the article which it buys pays the same duty (which is not less than fifty cents on the dollar) as an article purchased with cotton or wheat. But after we have compared it and find it performing all the functions of any other commodity, and with more ease and facility, we have not yet taken into the account its most beneficial agency in relieving a nation burdened with debt. Its great office is to enhance values by cheapening metallic currency, the measure of values. Previous to the war we had no national debt. Our financiers were not interested to inquire how the burdens of the nation could be lightened by large and increasing yields from the mines, but war has changed our situation and incumbered us with three thousand millions of debt, with accumulating interest, which, before it can be paid, will reach the enormous sum of not less than six thousand millions, principal and interest, all to be paid in gold or its equivalent. Our financial circumstances are now entirely similar to those of the nations of Europe, encumbered with vast pecuniary obligations. Their experience and investigations have become subjects of living interest. While labor is the real standard of value and the ultimate source of wealth, gold and silver are the universal measures of value, not only of the value of every other commodity, but they are the test by which every other circulating medium is estimated, thus educating the popular mind in the erroneous belief that a piece of gold of a given degree of fineness retains a fixed and permanent value.

The fallacy of this is exposed by the fact that in every country a certain amount of labor, the true standard of value, commands different prices at different times. And this result does not follow so much from the varied productiveness of the labor as from the changeable supply of the current coin, thus clearly establishing that the cheapness of gold depends upon its abundance. And this theory is strongly fortified by historical facts. At the commencement of the sixteenth century, and anterior to the discovery of the gold and silver mines of Mexico and South America, the commercial world was limited to about one hundred and sixty-five millions of metallic currency. As an evidence of the high price of gold and the comparative low estimate of labor, there was no silver coin even sufficiently small to offer in recompense for a day's toil. At the termination of the sixteenth century the increased supply from Mexico and South America raised the metallic currency to near seven hundred millions, proportionately enhancing the value of labor fourfold and quadrupling the price of land and every article of produce and commerce. The gradual advance of the metallic currency during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, keeping pace to much extent with the increasing supply of other commodities, failed to reveal the wide disproportion so marked and characteristic of the first hundred years that followed the opening of the gold and silver fields upon the western continent. The current metal of Europe and America of the year 1809 is estimated at $1,800,000,000. Then began those revolutionary throes in the Spanish American provinces which almost paralyzed, for near half a century, the production of the precious metals. The meager supply of that revolutionary period scarcely transcended the consumption for manufacturing purposes and the deficit occasioned by wear and loss and exportation to Asia.

The failure of the metal crop taxed every energy and resource of the financier and provoked inordinate issue of bills of exchange and paper money. The time was prolific in financial crashes, and still the price of labor and the value of property remained comparatively stationary, with a disposition to decline. The nations of Europe, heavily encumbered with debt, were exhausting their ingenuity to relieve the people from oppressive and ruinous taxation. Their debt was gold, and the material requisite to defray it was daily becoming scarcer and dearer. English financiers have candidly conceded that but for the discovery of gold in California, the struggle would have terminated in general ruin and convulsion—a discovery that suddenly revolutionized the commercial world and removed a burden from labor which was fast becoming too grievous to bear. It is a pregnant fact, and completely illustrative of this position, that in 1850 the amount of metallic currency had not advanced beyond the eighteen hundred millions of the year 1809. It was reserved for California to awaken the latent energies of the entire mining world. This youthful and proud and vigorous State is already enrolled in the history of the monetary world as the valorous leader that headed the forlornest of hopes and rescued the drooping nations of Europe from pecuniary ruin and national dissolution; for I need not assure the Senate that money is the sinew and safety of modern government. It was California that aroused the spirit of discovery in Australia and New South Wales and breathed a revival in mining enterprise in Mexico and South America and awoke the slumbering mining energies of Europe and Asia. This astonishing vigor and impulse, originating upon the placers that border upon the American river, have resulted in doubling the metallic currency of the commercial world, and increasing in equal proportion the prices of labor and property in the brief space of fifteen short years. It has enabled England, our emulous rival in commerce and the arts and amenities of civilization, that was shuddering upon the brink of a pecuniary abyss, to extricate herself from a moiety of her enormous debt; because the property of that country at this moment commands double the amount of gold it could realize fifteen years ago. The same beneficial result is developed upon the soil of the United States.

In every section of our land labor secures twice the quantity of gold that could be obtained previous to the settlement of our people upon the Pacific coast. The farms of the Atlantic States unenhanced by additional improvements, have duplicated their gold value. The assessed estimate of the property of the United States in 1850 exceeded but little the sum of seven thousand millions, while in 1860 it exhibited an advance of over nine thousand millions. Is it wisdom to contemplate this increase as sincere and actual? That in the short period of ten years the labor of our country produced more value by nine thousand millions than the accumulated labor of the long period that has elapsed since the first emigration to the wilds of this continent? The explanation is found in the increased supply of the current coin—the measure of value. The same property previous to 1850 was represented by less gold. And this computation will satisfactorily account for at least seven thousand millions of the estimated increase, leaving the remaining two thousand to be absorbed by additional products of labor. Upon these premises, as a basis for calculation, I will suppose the United States, in 1850, involved in a debt of one thousand millions. Such indebtedness would have amounted to one seventh of the assessed value of the entire property of the country; whereas in 1860 it would have diminished to one sixteenth; and, relying upon a proportionate increase of our national wealth, the same debt in 1870 would descend to one thirty-fifth part, and in 1880 to one ninety-eighth—thus becoming the very trifling and inconsiderable burden upon the national property of about one per cent. By applying the same numerical principle to the actual debt of the land, which varies but little from three thousand millions, and the present large and appalling incubus of twenty per cent. upon the pride and prosperity of the country will sink to the small figure of three per cent. in twenty-five years, and at the commencement of a new century to less than one and one half of one per cent. And this pleasant consummation may be attained without any diminution of the principal debt.

Alison, the historian, records in glowing language the effect of the new discoveries upon the civilization and material prosperity of the nations of Europe, and I will avail myself of his forcible language. He says, in his History of Europe:

"It will belong to a succeeding historian to narrate the wonderful spring which the country made during the five years which followed 1852 under the influence of the gold discoveries in America and Australia; but a brief notice of them is here indispensable in order to explain the main causes which were in full operation in that year when the general election took place, and free trade was finally adopted as the system of the nation. It is well known that in consequence of the extension of the American dominion over Texas in 1848, and the war with Mexico which ensued, California was ceded to the United States, and became a part of the Union. The Spaniards, thirsting for gold, had been there for three hundred years, and the gold was mixed with the alluvial sand under their feet, but they never found it out. Before the Americans had been there six months it was discovered, and the face of the world was changed, miners speedily flocked to this El Dorado from all parts of America and many of Europe, and the progress which ensued was so rapid that it would be deemed fabulous if not ascertained by authentic evidence. In February, 1849, the population of Europeans in the State was two thousand; in June, 1852, it was already one hundred and eighty-two thousand; and in 1856 it had risen to five hundred and sixty thousand. Soon after this great discovery had been made a similar vein of prosperity was opened in Australia. Gold was there discovered in 1849, in the alluvial plains near Ballarat, and this led to a general search in the vicinity, and the precious article was soon found in great quantities. The effects were immediately the same as they had been in California. Population and wealth enormously increased, and the emigration to it in 1854 rose to eighty-seven thousand persons; the exports turned £14,000,000, being about twenty-eight pounds a head; and the gold obtained amounted to the enormous value of £15,000,000.

"The annual supply of gold and silver for the use of the globe was, by these discoveries, suddenly increased from an average of £10,000,000 to one of £35,000,000. The words of poetic genius were more than realized. Methinks, as I gaze around, I see the scheme of the all-beneficent Father disentangling itself clear through the troubled history of mankind. How mysteriously, while Europe rears its population and fulfills its civilizing mission, these realms, which have been concealed from its eyes, divulged to us just as civilization needs the solution to its problem: a vent for feverish energies, baffled in the crowd, offering bread to the famished, hope to the desperate, in very truth enabling the New World to redress the balance of the Old. Here the actual Æneid passes before our eyes. From the hearts of the exiles scattered over this harder Italy, who cannot see in the future—

"A race from whence New Albion's sons shall come,
And the long glories of a future Rome."

"Most of all did Great Britain and Ireland experience the wonderful effects of this great addition to the circulating medium of our globe. That which for five-and-twenty years had been wanting—a currency commensurate to the increased numbers and transactions of the civilized world—was now supplied by the beneficent hand of nature. The era of a contracted currency and consequent low prices and general misery, interrupted by passing gleams of prosperity, was at an end. Prices rapidly rose; wages advanced in a similar proportion; exports and imports enormously increased, while crime and misery as rapidly diminished. Emigration itself, which had reached three hundred and sixty-eight thousand persons a year, sank to little more than half the amount. Wheat rose from forty shillings to sixty-five shillings; but the wages of labor of every kind advanced in nearly as great a proportion; they were found to be about thirty per cent. higher on an average than they had been five years before. In Ireland the change was still greater, and probably unequaled in so short a time in the annals of history. Wages of country labor rose from fourpence a day to one shilling sixpence or two shillings; convicted crime sank nearly a half; and the increased growth of cereal crops, under the genial influences of these advanced prices, was as rapid as its previous decline since 1846 had been. At the same time decisive evidence was afforded that all this sudden burst of prosperity was the result of the expanded currency, and by no means of free trade, in the fact that it did not appear till the gold discoveries came into operation, and then it was fully as great in the protected as in the free-trade States."

Ten years have elapsed since this record was made, and the yields of gold and silver are still increasing. What historian shall record the marvelous progress of the civilized world during that period? The United States has just emerged from the most tremendous civil war recorded in history, and the world still marvels at the enormous resources disclosed in that struggle for national existence; but the stimulating influence of this abundant yield of the precious metals upon the vast products of our extended domain, when properly appreciated and understood, will explain much of this astonishing exhibition of wealth and reveal something of the importance of a full and complete development of our mines. Gold must be cheapened by abundance; industry must be excited by the expansion of metallic currency. And here arises the vital inquiry, whether our country embraces the mineral fields from which to drain the requisite supply to double once more within the coming fifteen years, or perhaps a shorter period of time, the metallic currency of the world, whereby to virtually extinguish the one half of our national debt. From the plains of the Missouri to the Pacific ocean stretches an area exceeding a thousand miles square upon American soil of mineral region unparalleled in richness. It would almost seem that the knowledge of this vast and exhaustless wealth had been especially withheld through the long ages of the past as a fitting boon and priceless legacy for the present exigencies of the great American Republic. The wild space formerly designated upon our maps as the "unexplored region" or the "Great American desert" has been revealed to the startled world, laden with purer and more abundant ores than were attributed to the ancient Ophir. But whatever exaggerated ideas may exist elsewhere, I need scarcely inform the Senate that the mere knowledge of its locality accomplishes but little toward its attainment; for it would appear as if nature, peculiarly jealous of her treasure, has encircled it with most formidable barriers. It has imbedded it in deep vaults, walled in by rocks of primitive formation; it has cut off the access of navigable rivers by lofty and snow-capped mountains, and refused, to much extent, the appliances of water and timber and productive soil.

The primary conditions upon which the development of our mineral wealth depend are, first, transportation; second, a scientific knowledge of mining; third, security of titles; and fourth, abundance of capital.

The first question of transportation is involved in the speedy completion of the Pacific railroad. The importance of this enterprise, in view of the political, commercial, and financial condition of the country, cannot be overestimated. Politically it will be a new bond, uniting the interests and destinies of the Pacific and Atlantic and consolidating the power of the nation against foreign enemies and domestic foes. Commercially, it is the agent whereby the advantage of occupying a central position between Europe and Asia can be fully realized, and is the only means of combining the innumerable benefits of a free interchange of the products of our interior domain with our commercial cities on both sides of the continent, and with foreign lands across both oceans. Financially, it is the key with which we will unlock the rock-bound vaults of nature, and seize the untold millions of gold and silver hoarded by Providence from the creation of the world, for the purpose of furnishing the means of accomplishing the great destiny he has ordained for us. The liberal donations of the Government to this grand enterprise will mark the progress of the present age, add new glory to the American name, increase the wealth, and lighten the burdens of the people.

Much has been done by the inventive genius of the American people to acquire a practical knowledge of mining and the complicated machinery necessary thereto. Millions have been expended by the miners themselves in experiments and inventions, and a laboratory of art may be found in the mining region of the West where the students of the Old World may learn new lessons, but Americans are not yet educated in the science of mining. All the nations of Europe of any importance have well-endowed mining colleges, supported to a great extent at public expense, where thousands of young men are educated in this important branch. The few Americans who pretend to scientific knowledge of this subject have been educated in Europe. Every year young men go from the Pacific States to Freiberg, Paris, or other European cities to learn how to mine in their own country. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are paid annually to foreigners for that scientific knowledge of mining which Americans do not possess. But our eastern schools are beginning to realize the importance of this subject. Columbia, Yale, Harvard, and other colleges are making laudable efforts to supply the defects; but we need mining colleges in the mining districts where the youth of America may study the science of mining with the laboratory of nature before them as a guide, and where theory and practice may be combined. We want some means of disseminating useful information on this subject among the people at large. To this end Congress may do much.

We want a law of the character of the bill under consideration to establish and secure mining titles. While these are in doubt a feeling of insecurity will paralyze all our efforts:

"Known mischiefs have their cure, but doubts have none;

And better is despair than fruitless hope
Mixed with a killing fear."

Let a just, liberal, and definite policy be adopted toward the miners. Add to their possession the absolute right of property, and you will have laid a solid foundation for large and increasing yields. In the language of Blackstone, "There is nothing which so generally strikes the imagination and engages the affections of mankind as the right of property; or that sole and despotic dominion which one man claims and exercises over the external things of the world in the total exclusion of the right of any other individual in the universe." The feeling of security and independence produced by the right of property in the soil is the real foundation of our stability and prosperity as a people. A nation of freeholders is a nation of sovereigns, but a nation of tenants is a nation of slaves. Let not our free system of mining be degraded into miserable monopolies or disastrous confusion, but let it be confirmed, enlarged, and perfected, and the great national bank of redemption in the West will never refuse specie payment.

In conclusion, I maintain that the facts of history furnish abundant proof that large yields of the precious metals are the best and strongest incentives to industry, the accumulation of wealth, and the advancement of society. Rich mines, good titles, free labor, railroad transportation, modern improvements, and the light of science will dispel at once the hideous phantoms of gloom and despair that have floated before the public vision, and affix the indelible stamp of infamy upon that timorous or wicked class who would raise the dishonest cry of repudiation. Our national debt is the legitimate price entailed upon us by the protracted and fearful and final struggle for the integrity of our glorious Union and vindication and permanent establishment of the republican principle upon the globe. And the argument I have endeavored to pursue, while elevating the precious metals—the essential product of the western half of our extended confines—into the true and controlling kings of trade and finance, the indispensable element of our future national wealth and greatness, equally enforces the necessity on the part of the Government as well as the individual to stimulate our mineral resources to their full and complete development.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out in the nineteenth and twentieth lines of the second section the words "until the national debt shall have been paid;" so as to read, "the owners and occupants of the mine so appropriated and held shall pay into the Treasury of the United States, in each and every year, three per cent. of the net product," &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. In the twentieth line of that section I move to strike out "three" and insert "five;" so as to leave the rate of percentage to be paid by the miner the same as in the original bill, five per cent.

Mr. STEWART. I hope that amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was the rate fixed in the original bill, which was carefully prepared, and I believe was satisfactory to the mining interest. Five per cent. is a very liberal rate indeed. Five per cent. is about the same tax now placed on all kinds of manufactures. Surely when we give the land at a very low rate and only reserve this royalty, it is not a very high one, and that not on gross income but on net income. It is a very small tax, and it is important to retain it, I think.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the rate will not be increased. The amount here fixed is just three per cent. more than is imposed on any other product of the country except cotton. It is just three per cent. more than farmers pay on their farms. We pay all the other taxes, and where there is net product our income taxes are exceedingly large. We are a consuming people; we pay taxes on everything we consume.

Mr. GRIMES. On whisky?

Mr. STEWART. We pay a great deal of the whisky tax, perhaps not greater in proportion to our numbers than others, but more in amount, because we drink a better quality, probably. [Laughter.] Three per cent. is a heavy tax upon the net product of the mines. The man who has found a mine has paid for it four times as well, before he pays a dollar into the national Treasury, as the man who goes and improves a farm. You allow the man who goes upon land and improves it to have a homestead, and require him to pay nothing. It takes him five years, under your law, to acquire the title. It takes on the average fifteen years of labor and even more to find a mine. Taking the aggregate labor engaged in finding mines, it costs at least fifteen years of actual labor to find a mine, and I believe I should not exaggerate if I said twenty-five years of actual labor for every mine found. You say to a farmer that if he will go and live upon a tract of land for five years he shall have a farm. You say to the miner after he has spent most of his life hunting for a mine and he has found one, that you will encumber him beyond a reasonable amount. The farmer after he has lived five years upon his land and got it free, is not taxed on the net product. He pays simply an income tax. This adds to the income tax paid by the miner a tax upon net products. It is an additional tax clearly beyond that paid by other producers, and an additional tax on a class of men whose property costs them more than any other class of men who hunt for property; an additional tax on that product which you need more than you do any other; an additional tax on property, one dollar of which is worth at least two dollars, and I think three or four dollars of a perishable commodity; an additional tax upon that which will relieve your national burdens by increasing the amount of metallic currency. There ought to be no tax even upon the net product, and it is very much for us to consent to be discriminated against to the extent of three per cent., when our property has cost us ten times as much as the property of any other class of the community has cost them. If you would tell the miner before he prospects the history of what he has got to encounter, if you would lay it all plainly before him, nobody would think of prospecting; but because there are occasional gains, because there is occasional success, a large number of enterprising people have traversed this desert and found these mines, at the cost of almost everything, so that there is no reason why you should discriminate against them.

Mr. POMEROY. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio may be an economical one looking at it from the point of view entertained by the Committee on Finance; but looking at the subject from the point at which I have looked at it, I do not believe there is any public policy in taxing the production of gold. The gold deposits on the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains I know have not been productive enough, so that in not one case in a hundred, perhaps not one in a thousand, is there any net profit. Possibly in California and the older mining States, where they have mined longer, there may be net profits; but when you take into consideration what it costs to get $100 in gold, I think it is fair to say that every $100 obtained has cost $300. That I think is the experience on the eastern slope, if you take into account what is spent in getting to the mines, in developing and exploring, in labor and anxiety. Then to tax the production, small as it is, five per cent. seems to me to be unreasonable. I believe it would be more according to public policy to offer a premium upon the production of gold. I would rather give a premium upon gold than upon fish. There certainly ought to be a higher bounty paid to those who produce gold than to those who catch fish; I am sure of that. If we enter upon the taxing of gold that is brought out by the sweat, blood, and sinews of our people who go out there, one half of whom die in getting it, I believe it is an act to discourage the production of gold rather than otherwise. I feel no personal interest in the matter, but I am certainly opposed to increasing the taxation from three to five per cent. Three per cent. is surely high enough.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not know anything about this bill, but I desire to be informed by the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Nevada on what principle of financial statesmanship it is that we are to stimulate the production of gold, if it really, as they say, costs us three dollars for every one that is produced. If that is the general result—and they both tell us that it is—I do not see that the country is going to be advantaged much.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think I made that estimate.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator from Kansas did.

Mr. STEWART. But I will state that I think that every dollar of gold that is taken out costs on the average about one dollar, and perhaps a little more. Now, I will answer the question of the Senator from Iowa. I thought I made that point clear before. A dollar's worth of gold will buy just as much of any article as a dollar's worth of wheat; it is just as good to send to Europe as an export as a dollar's worth of wheat. Its immediate effect is just the same as a dollar's worth of anything else. But it has another office which is much more important to this country in view of its national debt. If we could just double the amount of metallic currency we should double the estimated value of all property. Then, instead of our property being estimated at $16,000,000,000, it would be estimated at $32,000,000,000 at once, because then there would be just twice as much gold in the country to buy with, and things would be twice as cheap; property would represent twice as much. This would be the effect of doubling the metallic currency. Then, instead of your public debt being twenty per cent. of the whole property of the country, it would be only ten per cent.

English financiers understand this. They admit that they could not have carried their debt but for the increase of the metallic currency. Almost all of them who have written on the subject have admitted that they would have been bankrupt but for our discovery of gold. By the expansion of the metallic currency Europe was relieved from the pressure under which she was laboring in 1850, and that saved her from general bankruptcy. That is the conclusion to which the writers on the subject have come. We did not feel its importance at that time, but now we see it very plainly. We have a public debt of $3,000,000,000, which is twenty per cent. of the estimated value of our property. If we can double the estimated value of that property in a few years by fostering this production we shall relieve the whole country and stimulate enterprise everywhere. Our enormous advance during the last fifteen years is owing to that cause more than any other, because in these particular localities poor men were willing to go into the mines and take their luck. They do not all succeed. Why should we not foster mining? Why should we tax them heavily and cut off those resources which would make us rich and soon make us free from burdens? Because they are benefitting us it is a reason why we should pile additional taxes on them? It seems to me the whole of this tax is wrong, but we have to submit to something, I suppose, and I trust at any rate it will not be put higher than three per cent.

Mr. CONNESS. This is a bill in which I take a great deal of interest, necessarily. We considered the question involved in it with some considerable care in the Committee on Mines and Mining, having there some of the best minds of the Senate; among them my honorable friend from Kentucky, [Mr. GERRARD.]

Upon the question of taxation, it was with a good deal of difficulty that I was brought to the consideration of favoring any amount of tax to be imposed upon the mining industry. Senators will remember that two years since it was proposed by the House of Representatives to impose a gross tax of five per cent. upon mining, which alarmed the entire mining industry of the nation. That tax would have destroyed it; but it was during the war, at a period when our friends, such as the honorable Senator from Ohio, than whom there is none who so seriously considered the question of providing funds for carrying on the war, were looking to every possible source from which revenue might be derived. At that time we finally arrived at a compromise on the subject, agreeing to a tax of one half of one per cent., to be collected by stamping bullion at the United States mints and at the assay offices in the country. That tax was increased last year by the Finance Committee, without my knowledge, to five eighths of one per cent. They added an eighth of one per cent. without my knowing anything of it. I think that additional tax should not have been put on without calling the attention of the Senate to it. I must have been in my place, but it was done in such a manner as not to challenge my attention.

Now, sir, for the representative of a mining constituency to agree to any tax upon the product of the mines is a pretty serious proposition. I will not undertake to extend this debate or the consideration of this question by entering into an estimate of what the production of gold costs. It would be mere guessing at best, and consequently time not wisely spent; but I undertake to say that there is no commodity which the enterprise and commerce of our own country and of the world requires so much as the addition to our circulation of the precious metals. I need not waste a word in stating how it incites the trade and commerce of the country and of the whole world; and therefore any tax imposed upon its production is necessarily a drawback upon that production, and particularly when it is borne in mind, if it can be, by Senators that all effort at mining is not profitable, that only a small proportion of the effort directed at mining is profitable, and that notwithstanding but a small proportion of that effort is profitable, yet the sum total of the product of the precious metals tells largely in favor of inciting every other industry belonging to and growing out of civil society. To have agreed to any tax then was to me at least a disagreeable proposition; and I should far sooner vote to strike out the three per cent., leaving out at the same time the five eighths of one per cent. charged upon the production of gold and silver, than agree to substitute five for three, as now moved by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. President, we recently repealed the tax imposed upon crude petroleum. Why did we do it? We did not do it carelessly. We did it after an experience which convinced the entire country and ourselves that its production was a business so problematical, requiring so much of effort, attended with so much want of success, that a tax upon the product, crude petroleum, was a tax upon the effort engaged in producing it and a restriction consequently upon its production; and the Senate by unanimous consent agreed to repeal that part of the internal revenue law. Certainly, crude petroleum is not more needed to this country and its industries than gold and silver. If my friend from Ohio lived where I do and had the practical acquaintance that I have with the production of gold and silver, no inducements to put money in the Treasury from taxation would get him to agree to tax the production of gold and silver. I am quite satisfied of that. I hope that this amendment will not be made and that my friend from Ohio will not persist in it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There is a special reason, which I have not yet heard assigned, why there should be no tax on this production. A tax upon the production of gold would be a tax upon labor and enterprise, not upon capital or wealth. It is now some sixteen or seventeen years since mines of great wealth were first discovered in this country. Mining even in California to-day is still in its infancy, requiring the present expenditure of large capital with reference to prospective results. Mining there, being better organized, is at present more successful than elsewhere; but it is the result of a series of experiments which have been going on from the first discovery of the mines, and those experiments have demanded the expenditure of a vast amount of capital. I am confident that more capital and labor at the common price have been employed there than has resulted from the productions of the mines; and yet every year places the mining interest upon more stable foundations. In Colorado the amount expended is triple what has resulted by way of production; and it is only within the last year or two, when experienced California miners came in there, that they have been to a considerable degree successful—those who understood the science of procuring the metal from the mine.

This production is not in a politico-economical sense a legitimate subject of taxation. It is a production to be promoted. There is no country possessed of large mining interests in Europe that has not its colleges where young men are educated to the science and art of mining. It has been everywhere promoted for the advantage and profit of the Government. The wealth that results, the moment it does result in the form of wealth to the individual, becomes the subject of taxation, like every other form of wealth; but as a rule those who first embark in these enterprises are the victims of enterprise. Hundreds and perhaps thousands of handsome fortunes have been lost in trying to develop the wealth of the sierras. We need their development and we need to promote them. They are yet in their infancy. Nations are not made in a day, nor great systems or policies. In Sweden you find mining understood as a science, studied as a science, by the most cultivated men. So it is in Russia and in Austria and in nearly all the States of Europe. It is promoted at the expense of the Government. Why? Because if made successful wealth is produced which when achieved is the legitimate subject of taxation, and it gives strength and power to the Government.

The wealth our mines have achieved has not gone to the miner and adventurer in California or in Colorado or in Idaho or in Montana. I remember very well when I first returned to this side from my coast in 1853, having been absent three or four years, I found the city of New York a different city. The productions of California had stimulated her commerce and enterprise so that palaces had sprung up. There were no palaces, though, in San Francisco or on the Pacific coast. In the city of Chicago it was the same, as I had occasion to observe, and so throughout the country. The wealth went to those who supplied the mines and mining enterprises, those who built the machinery, those who furnished the instruments, those who manufactured the powder for blasting, those who furnished the provisions that supported the miners. So it is at this day; and to-day the Atlantic States derive much the greater part of what is the true wealth derived from the mines of the West.

The policy of the Government should be to promote and not to oppress the mining interests. I am against the three per cent. or the five per cent. I do not mean that I am going to oppose the bill merely because it may contain a provision for a three per cent. tax; but the policy is wrong. At this early period of that enterprise, in its infant condition, it is not policy to tax it; and then in its most prosperous condition it is not the legitimate subject of taxation. What results and becomes wealth is taxable, like the wealth that is won by the merchant by his enterprises; and that is the wealth upon which the nation must depend. As for expecting to derive revenue of importance to the Government by such legislation, I can assure you, Mr. President, and the Senate, that it will cripple enterprise and instead of being to the advantage of the country at large, which is always an advantage to the Government, it will be to the disadvantage of both. Therefore I object to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio. I trust it will not be adopted. It will be looked upon as a very oppressive act on the part of the Government by the people upon the western coast engaged in this enterprise, as also in all the mining districts of the country. I should think it an unjust act myself, and I am sure an impolitic one.

Mr. NYE. I desire to present two or three considerations to the Senate with regard to this amendment of the Senator from Ohio. I was in hopes that some person having this bill in charge would have moved to strike out the three per cent. I have had almost five years' observation—

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator permit me to explain?

Mr. NYE. Certainly.

Mr. CONNESS. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that there is at present levied by the internal revenue law a tax of five eighths of one per cent., which is collected by stamping all the bullion that is produced at the mints and assay offices, and that the committee have agreed to this tax of three per cent. on the net product to be paid hereafter in lieu of that tax, and for that reason alone.

Mr. NYE. Perhaps that is wise on the whole; but I think that persons who produce gold and silver should not be taxed for that production. The reason, I suppose, why this tax is sought to be secured is that they take the metal from the land of the Government, and this is supposed to be a remuneration for that privilege. Now, a gold or silver mine is worth no more to this Government than a granite mine, unless it is improved, worked, and reduced in the expensive way the miners of the West have to do. A reason why this product should not be taxed and this burden laid on the labor that produces it is this: the Government never would have known that within the bowels of half this continent are treasured up these rich minerals, this rich material, if the enterprise of the individual, the daring and suffering of the individual had not developed it. An additional dollar when put into the circulation of the country is so much additional wealth to the country. Unlike almost all other kinds of manufacture, in mining there can be no such thing as cheating about it. Most of the producing mines are owned by large companies where monthly returns have to be made of the exact product and the cost of producing the gold and silver. Therefore each stockholder is taxed for the additional dollar that he acquires in that way as an income tax, and upon the substantial wealth of the country he is taxed upon this additional dollar that the miner produces.

A year ago, or a little more, I had the honor of submitting a few remarks in opposition to the imposition of a tax of this kind, wherein I tried to show that it was a direct tax upon labor itself. I look upon it in the same way now. I know that the imposition of that tax, small as it was, had an injurious effect upon the development of the great mineral region of the western coast. I have seen it with my own eyes. Towns that were flourishing are drooping. Miners who were vigilant, active, and vigorous in the prosecution of this work ceased their labors to some extent in view of this tax which they regarded as a tax upon their labor. If gold is to be taxed at the mine, it is taxed three or four times more by the several acts now in existence before it gets through being taxed. The stocks of each company engaged in mining are taxed. Persons who own them individually are taxed in regard to their wealth. This tax, then, upon the production, in my judgment, is an additional tax to that imposed upon any other product of the country or any other product of manufacture.

I beg the Senate to bear in mind the fact that every additional dollar of gold and silver that we produce lays the foundation of our financial structure on a more stable foundation. Let it be known that we can produce gold and silver to make our credit always secure and sure, that the interest will be paid in the precious metals, and our credit will stand as high, if not higher, than that of any other nation of the earth. If I only knew as much of finance as my friend from Ohio does, I could be eloquent on this subject, but understanding only one branch of it, and that is disburbing, [laughter,] I cannot talk as eloquently as he does; but I have got a sort of crude idea that if I wanted to establish firmly the credit of our country I would encourage by every possible means the production of that upon which the credit of the nation rests. I would to-day, as a financial measure, rather pay a bounty upon the production of gold and silver than tax it in any of its incipient stages. My judgment is that time will demonstrate that I am correct in this principle when I say that the true policy of this Government would be, instead of trammeling in any way the production of the precious metals, to pay a bounty to increase their production.

Sir, what has given England her credit above other nations? What has made this nation and its merchants go and buy bills of exchange upon London to trade with the Indies or with China? It is the fact that there in that kingdom concentrates the great mass of the precious metals of the world; that she by a wise course of finance has made herself the great lap of the wealth of nations into which all the precious metals have been so amply poured. If this nation at this moment will take a wide and comprehensive view of the policy and conduct of these minerals and these mineral lands, that great law of trade that has so long made us pay tribute to England will make New York the London of the world. Let us take such a course as will increase the production of the precious metals; instead of letting it be numbered by fifty, sixty, or seventy millions, as it is now, let our annual production be five hundred millions, as it will be when that great railroad binds our eastern and western shores together, and London will be London no more. Therefore I call upon those Senators who have this peculiar branch of our country's interests now in hand to see to it that they impose no taxation that will limit or cripple the production of the precious metals.

As I remarked, Mr. President, there is no opportunity for any deception here as there is in most manufacturing business. Every dollar that is produced is known and every dollar is felt. With this daily drain now for the precious metals upon New York—for not a ship leaves that port that does not count her treasure by millions, being taken to the great reservoir of the precious metals, London—I ask the Senator from Ohio, and all other Senators who desire to see our credit established upon as substantial a basis as credit can be, to consider well before they attempt to impose a tax upon the production of gold and silver, which is the life-giving power of this nation at this moment.

The Senator from Iowa, [Mr. GRIMES,] always careful and vigilant, wants to know how it is, if each dollar costs so much, that the business is pursued. I can answer him very well, I think, and my friend, the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. SPRAGUE,] who is au fait upon all manufacturing interests, will bear me witness that I answer truly. Everything in its infancy costs all that it is worth to produce. This mining interest broke upon the United States as a great wonder; and as a parallel, for long years, (and I am prepared to vote for it now, reversing the whole teachings of my political life,) the manufacturing interests have been in their infancy ever since they were born, and God knows how long they will remain so, and every year we help them. While we tax them on the one hand we give them advantages of market and trade by a tariff on the other. The production of gold and silver is nothing but a large scale of manufacturing. It penetrates the mountain; it assorts the ore; it brings it out; and the clatter of the stamps is heard from morning until morning again; and when what they technically call in mining the clean-up comes, very often the clean-up exhibits the lofty sum of nothing, while thousands have been expended in the effort. Would you stop there? Would the Senator from Ohio have it stop there? Not at all. Try again. The next clean-up gives something, and so on until it begins to be remunerative. They ask nothing in this great scale of manufacturing that other manufacturers have not possessed and always enjoyed in this country.

But, sir, this is gold and silver, and the fee to the land belongs to the United States, I am told. I glory in that; and I might as well say here as anywhere that I would rather it would stay there. I think they are the best owners, but I am not going to quarrel about that. But, sir, these precious metals would have slumbered there till the resurrection horn was heard if it had not been for individual enterprise and daring skill; and more hardships have been endured in it than in the establishment of all the manufactories whose million spindles are twirled with a velocity that makes you giddy to watch them. It has not been in your maris or towns, but it has been upon the mountain-side and mountain-top. They have had to take their machinery there, and by the greatest possible exertion the means of reducing ore obtained.

I hope, sir, that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio will not prevail. I received from warm supporters of this Government, a few days ago, a telegraphic dispatch signed by a number of miners of the State of Nevada, men whose integrity, energy, and skill are not to be questioned, and whose fidelity to their country and its best interests is not to be questioned by any one, in which they say that the present tax is onerous, and any higher or further tax will greatly retard the development of the mines of that region of our country. Sir, in behalf of those toiling miners, in behalf of that class of men who are doing to-day as much as any class of men in this country to uphold its credit, to lay a golden basis upon which it can stand, I appeal to the justice of this Senate whether they will tax them further or higher upon that laudable and just effort.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, a year ago I felt it to be my duty to oppose any tax whatever upon the production of gold, and I am not able to see that the considerations that governed me at that have passed away. I think, instead of taxing the production of gold, we ought rather to encourage its production, especially while we have a public debt upon our shoulders. The increase of the circulating medium of the country, especially of that which is the standard of value the world over, makes the payment of our debt and the annually accruing interest easier as we continue to increase. Upon this view of the subject, I shall move to strike out all that portion of this section which relates to a proposed tax from and including the sixteenth line to the close of the section. If I had a view to revenue I should not advocate this particular measure. I think that very little revenue will be realized from this mode of taxation. It proposes a tax upon the net production. I presume that means the profit which the miner makes. How is that to be ascertained? I submit to the authors of this bill whether it can be satisfactorily and certainly ascertained what is the net production of a mine. As is stated by the Senator from Nevada, some of the mines are managed by large companies who keep an account of their expenditures as well as their incomes, with the view of ascertaining the dividend of each stockholder. If we had entire confidence in the books of all these companies, perhaps we could ascertain the net production of a particular mine; but certainly there are very large productions of gold by persons acting in their individual enterprises and not in the form of companies. Who is to ascertain, then, what is the net production of the mines of the country, and what machinery are we to adopt by which this shall be ascertained?

The present tax, as I understand, is five eighths of one per cent. upon the gross productions. I should like to see that repealed. I think it is very undesirable to tax the mines at all, but if we are to tax them we had better have it upon something certain. I submit to the Senate whether a tax on the gross receipts, in regard to which there can be no evasion or fraud, is not much more desirable to the Government than a tax upon the net production of the mines? The one is ascertained at the assay office, the other on information to be communicated by the miner. One miner is an honest man, he gives an account of all the expenses which he has incurred in the production of a certain amount of gold; another miner, not so scrupulously honest, will give a very different account of his operations during the year. And when is this tax to be collected, and how collected? I think it proper to strike out all of this bill that relates to a tax upon the net production, and I offer that amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to inquire whether a motion to amend that portion of the section will not be first in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY.) The motion of the Senator from Ohio is first in order, as it is in the nature of perfecting the clause which the Senator from Indiana proposes to strike out.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to obviate delay in the matter, I would much prefer the proposition of the Senator from Indiana than to have the bill stand as it is.

Mr. CONNESS. I will agree to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. And for this reason: the last clause of the section as it stands repeals the stamp duty, which I have no doubt will yield more than five per cent. on the net income. It would be impossible, at any rate, to enforce the section as it is, because it would be impossible in the assay office to distinguish between the bullion taken from the public domain and the bullion taken from the mines, the title to which was in private individuals, and I am therefore willing that the tax should be as at present.

Mr. CONNESS. You withdraw your amendment, then?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall move to amend this bill at the proper time, and as the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is withdrawn, I suppose it will be in order for me to make a motion now to amend the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have one or two other amendments inserted, to which I think there will be no objection, and then the Senator will have an opportunity to offer his.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will state my amendment. I shall move to amend the bill by striking out sections two, three, four, five, six, seven, and eight—all of the bill that relates to the sale of the mineral lands. I am very sorry that I cannot agree with my friends from California and Nevada as to the necessity and expediency of this part of the bill providing for the sale of the mineral lands, or any part of the mineral lands upon the Pacific coast. I am opposed to this part of the bill upon several grounds. I have some personal knowledge of the mining business, living in a country where it is to some extent prosecuted, and that, with what I have derived from my association with those engaged in that business, satisfies me that it is unwise for the Government to enter upon any system of selling the mineral lands upon the Pacific coast. I am also instructed by the Legislative Assembly of the State which I have the honor to represent in part upon this floor to oppose any proposition to sell the lands; and although perhaps I should not implicitly follow those instructions upon a subject of this kind if they did not accord with my own judgment, still as they do agree with the opinions which I entertain I propose to follow and obey them. Other gentlemen may possess different information on the subject; but so far as I am advised, the men who are engaged in mining, the practical miners of the country, are almost, if not quite, unanimously opposed to any proposition of this kind. I think they not only understand their own interests, but they understand the interests of the country; and I would rather take the opinion of a practical miner upon this subject than any opinion of any man, I do not care how profound he may be in wisdom or philosophy, where that opinion is formed upon speculation or theory.

Mr. STEWART. You have in this bill the opinion of two or three practical miners. I think we can claim to be such.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Sir, it is possible that if these gentlemen were at work at this time in the mines they might not have the same opinion which they now have upon that subject. I may be misadvised, and there may be those in the mines who are in favor of this proposition. I do not profess to know the opinions of all the individual miners; but I do profess to know that those engaged in mining in that part of the country in which I reside are opposed to any scheme for selling the mineral lands.

I suppose, sir, that this part of the bill has in view two objects: one is to promote the interests of the Government by increasing its revenue; and the other is to protect the interests and rights of the miners. I find that this bill, like all others that I have seen on the subject, contemplates the extension of the surveys of the United States to all that portion of the country where minerals are found, including the barren, extensive plains, and the rugged and precipitous mountains upon the Pacific coast. I find a provision in the fourth section of the bill to the effect that certain things may take place or be lawful "after the extension thereto," that is to the mining districts, "of the public surveys;" and in other parts of the bill there is an assumption that the public surveys are to be extended to all parts of this mining country. Who can estimate the expense to the United States of undertaking to survey this vast region of country? I will not undertake it; and I suppose nobody will venture to estimate the amount of that expense. If anybody could approximate to the sum it would be found to be enormous, and frightful in the burdens it would impose upon the Treasury of the United States.

Moreover, this bill provides that persons taking claims such as are described in the bill may enter those claims in the land office; and of course it will be necessary to create land districts in all parts of the country where this business is prosecuted. Land offices must be established; and those land offices must be established where they will be convenient and accessible to the miners; otherwise the system cannot be operative; it will be a perfect failure. There is the vast Territory of Washington, in which at this time there are two land offices; there are two in the State of Oregon; there are none in Idaho; none in Montana; none in Utah; one, I believe, in Colorado; and one in New Mexico. This vast region of country, thousands of miles in extent, in every part of which the business of mining is now, or probably will be, prosecuted, must be divided into land districts, and those land offices ought to be located where they can be reached by the miners without any great trouble or expense. The consequence, of course, will be that a very large number of land offices must be established; numerous officers must be appointed; and there will be in such a country very many outlays of money in the undertaking, besides the ordinary expenses which attend the creation and management of such offices.

Moreover, there must be a surveyor general. This bill contemplates that each one of these claims is to be surveyed by the surveyor general appointed by the Government, and paid either by the claimant or by the Government; and I am not able to wholly determine from the terms of this bill upon whom such expenses are to devolve; for in addition to the ordinary surveys it is provided that "the surveyor general shall receive for such service"—that is, for surveying each one of these claims—"such compensation as is allowed by law, with mileage not to exceed at legal rates the amount chargeable from the county seat of the county in which the claim may be situated to the said claim." Is it wise for the Government to engage in a scheme that will be attended with such enormous expenses? When you take into consideration the amounts that must be expended in the establishment of these numerous land districts, in the surveys of this vast and broken country, and in the other expenses that are incidental to the issuing of patents, I think it is worse than folly for the Government to undertake any system of this kind with a view of increasing its income, for instead of adding anything to the revenues of the Government, it will only impose new and grievous burdens upon it.

Mr. STEWART. I will inquire of the Senator whether it is not necessary in that country to survey the land in order to bring that which is agricultural into the market. Is he not in favor of segregating the agricultural from the mineral land, so as to give homes to those who have settled in the interior? There are at least three hundred thousand living in that country settled upon lands where they would like to make their homes. They are to be found in the upper portion of California, in portions of Oregon, and in Idaho, Montana, Utah, Arizona, Colorado, and Nevada. We cannot extend the surveys unless we have a system of segregation. We have not yet extended the surveys. There are thousands of people in all the States and Territories on that coast who are now without any title to their homes. You cannot well have a stable community there until we have this segregation of the agricultural from the mineral lands. That involves about all the surveying that the Senator complains of.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I believe there has been no departure as yet from the rectangular system of surveys established by the Government, and so far as these agricultural lands are concerned they generally lie in bodies where they can be surveyed without much difficulty. It is not generally necessary to survey the whole country in order to survey bodies of agricultural lands. Public surveys for agricultural purposes are generally made by running straight lines at right angles; but this bill contemplates, if I understand it, that each claim taken by a miner is to be separately surveyed by the surveyor general, no matter how inconvenient its location or irregular its shape, and the public surveys are to be made to conform to the size and shape of the claims taken by the miners, so that whatever may be the expense growing out of such surveys of the country as are necessary for agricultural purposes, certainly the extension of the surveys to all the mineral lands will add very much to the expenses of the Government. Such lands as are described in this bill are generally found in mountainous districts, where it is exceedingly difficult to make surveys, or in portions of the country worthless for all purposes except for the purposes of mining. I am simply seeking to show that the sale of the mineral lands will be an immense expense to Government, I care not what system may be devised for their sale. It will be enormously expensive to establish the necessary offices, to pay the necessary officers, and to defray all the other expenses which must attend the system. I am answering the argument that is used in favor of selling the land by those who say it will add to the revenues of the Government. I say it is demonstrably certain that it will add immensely to the expenses of the Government, and that no income tax that is not burdensome and crushing to those engaged in mining will equal the amount of the expenditures of the Government in undertaking to sell these lands after they have been surveyed at the Government expense.

This bill provides that these lands shall be sold at the rate of five dollars per acre, and it did provide that "three per cent. of the net product of a mine, vein, or lode" should be levied "in lieu of the stamp tax;" but I believe it is generally agreed that this clause, which was particularly objectionable in my opinion, shall be stricken out; so that this bill will only provide, to meet these numerous expenses to the Government, for the sale of mineral lands at five dollars per acre. Anybody can readily see what the amount of revenue derived from the sale of these lands at five dollars per acre will be, compared with the cost of their survey and sale according to the provisions of this bill.

If it will do the Government no good to sell these lands, what advantage will it be to the miners? I shall speak particularly of the features of this bill. I do not intend to discuss the subject in a general way, but only to call attention to the provisions of this bill. If the suggestions which I make can be satisfactorily answered, then of course I shall be content with what may be said in favor of this measure. I will remark, in the first place, that this bill differs from all other laws relating to the pre-emption of the public lands. I should like to know whether the intent is to make it permissive or imperative on the miner. It provides—

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to know what feature of the bill that inquiry is directed at.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will point out the particular feature. The second section of the bill provides—

Now, when a man takes a mining claim according to the customs and law of the mining district in which it is located, he is allowed by this bill to file a plat and enter that claim in the land office. Suppose, however, he does not choose to do it; what then? The pre-emption laws at this time require a man when he pre-empted an agricultural claim to give notice within a certain time that he claims it as the pre-emptor, and within another given time he is to pay for the claim to the Government; but if he omits to give the notice or make the payment as required by law, then his right to the land ceases, and it is subject to sale by the Government.

Mr. STEWART. I will tell you exactly why that was done in this bill. We required, in the first place, that he should file his plat, giving notice for ninety days, so as to allow no advantage to be taken; and we thought we would leave it to another session before forcing him to enter his claim. Whatever legislation may be necessary to limit the time within which, after they locate, they must enter their claims, is a subsequent consideration. It would not be well to fix any time now. But this bill is so guarded that the party must file his plat, give notice, that notice must be published for ninety days, and then there must be a survey by the surveyor general; and if, after that, there is no opposing claim, he is to receive the patent. If there is an opposing claim, the question goes back into the courts. The reason for not going any further than that was that we did not propose to force these people to lose their mines or come in before they could get to understand the operation of this law. It simply allows them to purchase; and next year, if the system works well, we can fix a time within which they must file their claims; but there is nothing compulsory about it now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The statement of the Senator satisfies me that I am right in my opposition to the bill, for he acknowledges that the bill is imperfect and contemplates future legislation. I say to the Senator now, that if this bill should pass, it simply opens the door to all sorts of legislation injurious to the miner. If this legislation would stop with the enactment of this law, then, perhaps, my objections would not be so well founded as I think they are; but this is simply a stepping-stone, or an initiatory step, as I understand it. I do not suppose that is the intention of those who bring forward the bill, but it is necessarily a stepping-stone to other and further legislation. My judgment is, that when Congress undertakes to legislate generally for the mines of this country it will do to those mines an irreparable injury. Congress, when it once commences, will be compelled to tinker with its legislation from time to time until the whole system of mining regulations which has grown up from time and experience, and which is now well adapted to the wants and interests of the miners, will be thrown into inextricable confusion and made the means of endless controversy and litigation.

Now, sir, I suggest that this bill provides that a man who takes a mining claim may enter it, or he may not. Suppose A takes a mining claim, and files a plat and enters it according to the provisions of this bill; and B, who has an adjoining claim, prefers not to enter. A holds his claim by one title; B holds his by another. What is the relative condition of the parties? Is B's right as good as the right of A; or is he to be dispossessed if he does not proceed and obtain title as required by law? Will not such a conflicting system of titles introduce discord and confusion into the rights and interests of the mining people of this country, some holding under the provisions of this bill, and some holding under the laws, customs, and usages of the mining community in which they live? This provision, no doubt the best that can be devised, only illustrates that it is impossible for Congress to undertake to legislate for these mines in any way without producing trouble and confusion. It is manifest that no system can be adopted that will be complete and perfect in itself, that will embrace all the interests and rights and claims of all mining communities. So long as a system cannot be devised that is perfect in itself, like the preemption law of the country, which will apply to the case of every miner alike, and put them all upon an equal footing, and operate equally everywhere in the mining country, it will be unwise, in my judgment, for Congress to enter upon this sort of legislation.

I have examined this bill, and I wish to direct the attention of the Senate to the defectiveness of its several provisions; and I do so because I do not wish to have Congress act inconsiderately or hastily upon a subject of this kind, in which a very large proportion of my constituents are deeply interested, and in which I believe the whole country is interested. The bill provides that when any person has occupied and improved a claim according to local custom or rules of miners, in regard to whose possession there is no controversy or opposing claim, that person may file a plat and enter under the provisions of this law; but no provision is made in this bill for claims about which there is a controversy or to which there is an opposing claim.

Mr. STEWART. Read on.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have read the bill, and I undertake to say there is no provision in this bill as to claims about which there is a controversy pending at this time. It is known, I presume, to many Senators that some of the most productive and valuable mining claims upon the Pacific coast are in litigation or controversy at this time; and yet this bill omits to make any provision whatever for such claims.

Mr. STEWART. Let me call the Senator's attention to the sixth section, which is in these words:

And be it further enacted, That whenever adverse claims to any mine located and claimed as aforesaid, shall appear before the approval of the survey, as provided in the third section of this act, all proceedings shall be stayed until a final settlement and adjudication in the courts of competent jurisdiction of the rights of possession to such claim, when a patent may issue as in other cases.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That shows that the honorable Senator has not read his own bill as carefully as I have read it, for that applies not to controversies existing when the plat is filed, but to controversies that arise before the approval of the survey, as provided in the third section of the bill, and the third section provides that upon the filing of the plat and survey, as provided in the second section, notice shall be given in a newspaper, and notice shall be posted up in the land office, and then if after the expiration of ninety days no opposing claimant appears, the party shall be entitled to a patent; but if after the plat is filed—and the second section, it will be noticed, does not allow a plat to be filed where there is any controversy about the claim—and this notice is given, and during the pendency of that notice any party appears to contest the right of the claimant, then the proceedings are to be suspended until this controversy can be determined in some court in the country. I object also to the section referred to by the Senator, because, instead of allowing the land department to adjust controversies between conflicting claims growing out of land titles, this adjustment is transferred altogether to the judiciary of the country; and that, as every man I think will readily see, will introduce great confusion into the land system of the United States.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him where those questions are settled now at this time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. They are settled in the land offices of the United States.

Mr. CONNESS. I beg the Senator's pardon; that is not correct. Those questions in regard to mining claims are settled in the local courts of the State or Territory. I thought the Senator was in favor, and had asserted that he was in favor, of the present system.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am well aware of that; but I was not speaking about the adjustment of claims to mineral lands. At this time Government has nothing to do with those questions; they are private matters. But now the Government proposes to put these mines upon the same footing with the other public lands of the United States; and I say that so far as the settlement of questions growing out of controversy between different claimants as to such lands is concerned, it is adjusted in the land offices of the country.

Mr. STEWART. Let me ask the Senator a question. Would you, if you were going to invent any system of sale, require the miners to come to Washington to settle disputes in regard to titles under the mining rules? Would you, if you were going to adopt any system, devise any other plan for having these local difficulties settled except the courts in those places, as provided in this bill? Is not that the only way in which the sale can ever take place, to allow them to be settled where they are now settled by law?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not advising any system of sale; I am opposing every system of selling the mineral lands. I say that no system can be devised, and I defy any man to devise any system of selling the mineral lands of the United States at this time that will be found to be wise and just in its practical operation. I say, however, if the land system of the United States is to be extended to the mineral lands of the country, then these preliminary questions as to a conflict of claims should be settled in the local land offices in the first place, and then in the land department at Washington if the decision there is not satisfactory; otherwise there can be no perfection or harmony in the system. Now, two conflicting claims are filed before the land office of a certain district. That land office cannot proceed and examine and adjust those conflicting claims according to the provisions of this bill, but the litigation goes on in some local court, before some justice of the peace, or before some district or circuit court, or other courts of the State or Territory, and there the question is settled; so that the muniments of title partly remain with the courts and partly in the Executive Departments of the Government when it is necessary, as it seems to me, that all evidences of title should remain of record in one Department, as they do at this time.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not like to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection, and am willing to be interrupted.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator is making a very serious error in forgetting that the class of disputation proposed to be settled in the local courts and judiciary, as it is now settled by the local courts and judiciary in the mining States and Territories, relates to possession, and to possession alone. This bill does not propose to transfer the disposition of the title to the property of the United States to the local authority, but proposes simply to confirm the title that the people themselves have established everywhere. I thought the Senator was in favor of that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Section six of this bill provides—

That whenever adverse claimants to any mine located and claimed as aforesaid shall appear, before the approval of the survey as provided in the third section of this act, all proceedings shall be stayed until a final settlement and adjudication in the courts of competent jurisdiction of the rights of possession to such claim, when a patent may issue as in other cases.

If I understand that language, it provides that all controversies between conflicting claimants shall be conducted in the courts of the country, and when the court decides, upon that decision the patent is to issue, and not to issue upon any decision by the land department of the Government.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator permit me to say a word right there for the purpose of a clear understanding?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly; I have no objection to any interruption.

Mr. CONNESS. This, as I said before, contemplates the determination of the question of possession, the question of who has the right to enter. Two parties make their appearance at the local land office of the United States, and profess each to have the possessory title, that is, the right of possession to the land under the local mining law. We do not propose to occupy the register of the land office by determining that question. Why? Simply because it would be changing the entire system that the people themselves have established. They are to be remanded back to settle that question of possession according to the system established by the people themselves; and when that is settled, then the party in whose favor it is settled makes his reappearance in the land office and proceeds to deal with the United States in every step necessary to obtaining title.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that the register can as well decide according to the local customs and usages of the mining community as a court. He would be bound so to decide according to the provisions of this bill. I do not undertake to say that a register is more competent than the courts of the country to decide such questions; but I apprehend that if this system is introduced of adjusting these controversies, procuring titles partly through the land department and partly before the courts of the country, confusion will be carried into the system of giving titles by the Government to persons upon the public lands; and I think that is a serious objection to this or any such plan of selling the public lands of the United States, whether they be agricultural or mineral lands.

Now, Mr. President, whenever a person has previously occupied and improved a mining claim, according to the local customs or rules of miners in the district where the same is situated, he is to be allowed to file a plat and survey. I ask if that does not devolve upon the register and receiver necessarily the power and duty of deciding as to whether that person has or has not occupied that claim according to the rules and customs of the miners.

Mr. STEWART. That section has been amended so as to require the improvements on the land to amount to not less than a thousand dollars. After the ninety days of publication, then the surveyor general goes upon the land, makes a survey, and certifies as to the amount of the improvements.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that. After the plat is filed and the notice is given, then the surveyor general makes the survey; but before a person is entitled to file his plat he must make his claim in conformity with the usages and customs of the mining district where he resides. Now, I desire to know what security this bill provides for claimants. Suppose A takes his plat and goes one hundred miles to a land office and says, "I have taken this claim; here is the plat; I desire to file it." Does this bill provide that he shall make an affidavit that he has taken and occupied that claim? Does this bill provide that he shall furnish the register with any evidence on that subject? Can any man, anywhere, simply by making a plat upon a piece of paper and going to a land office enter any claim he sees proper? I say he can, according to the terms of this bill; and there is no security for men who have honestly located mining claims, but every man who is unscrupulous enough can, in this way, involve in controversy the claims of those who honestly occupy and improve the land. There ought to be some provision here requiring this man when he files his plat, to show to the register that he has settled and occupied and improved the claim according to the rules and usages of the mining community in which it is located.

Mr. STEWART. What good would that do? What hurt does it do to permit a party to file a plat? He gets no title with the plat. After the notice has been given, the surveyor is to go there to survey the land, and if it turns out that the party has no mine, he gets no certificate. There is no danger of one person intruding on anybody else, because he has to file a plat and give ninety days' notice, and then the surveyor is to go there to survey it. Filing a plat gives no title; and what would be the use of inserting a provision here requiring him to swear to it? The filing of the plat does no living person any hurt.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I differ with the honorable Senator on that subject. I think a plat will do harm, for it is provided that when this plat is filed, the party filing it shall give notice, it does not say of what, but he is to give some notice in the nearest newspaper, and he is to post up a notice in the land office that he has taken a certain claim. Every man knows that upon the head waters of the Columbia and along the northern boundary of the United States, and in Idaho, in Montana, in Colorado and New Mexico, there are many mining localities where newspapers do not circulate, where men could know nothing about such notices. I wish to call the attention of the Senator particularly to that point, because he has affirmed that the filing of the plat does no one any harm. I say that the filing of the plat gives the person who files it a title to the claim described in that plat, provided no one appears to controvert his right within ninety days. But no one can know that the plat is filed unless he happens to go into the register's office, which may be located one hundred or two hundred miles from the claim, and sees there the notice posted up, or unless he sees a notice of it in some newspaper which may be published at the distance of three hundred miles; for it is true that there are mining localities upon the Pacific coast which newspapers rarely reach, and from which the nearest newspaper is hundreds of miles away.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose he does not; suppose he is one hundred miles off, and does not know anything about it. After the plat is filed, the surveyor has got to go there, and if he finds another man in possession, he will not certify to the land. The bill provides that there shall be $1,000 worth of improvements, and it contains every precaution that is necessary. These miners are very vigilant, and the ninety days' notice I think is ample. The miners are not caught in that way very often. I do not think there will be any swindling in that way. No danger need be apprehended from that source.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think there is danger in allowing a man by filing a plat, without any evidence that he is entitled to file it, to take the initiatory step for the attainment of title, because the plat itself becomes a cloud upon the title of the miner who may rightfully occupy the claim. The Senator says there is no danger. I am sure he is acquainted with the fact that in these mining localities men are constantly jumping each other's claims and devising every scheme and expedient to obtain the rights of each other; and here it seems to me is a chance for such a man, even if he does not succeed in obtaining the title, to involve the owner of a claim in a controversy and litigation which may redound to the advantage of the wrong-doer.

I do not undertake to say that this is not the best scheme that can be devised. I am, perhaps, willing to admit that no better plan can be projected; but I am simply undertaking to show that no scheme for obtaining titles in the mining country, situated as the people of that country are, can be devised that will not work injustice and hardship to the miner and be a disadvantage to the Government.

I wish to invite the attention of honorable Senators to another provision of the bill. I desire to understand the bill, at any rate. I find here that a person is allowed to enter a tract "and receive a patent therefor, granting such mine, together with the right to follow said vein or lode with its dips, angles, and variations to any depth, although it may enter land adjoining, which land adjoining shall be subject to this condition." Now, I desire to know if it is intended to allow the claimant to follow this vein with its dips, angles, and variations longitudinally as well as laterally?

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to inquire of the honorable Senator if he ever resided in a mining community or has had experience in connection with mines. I beg him to believe that my inquiry is simply to get to a clear understanding of the point he raises.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I presume the honorable Senator knows where I reside.

Mr. CONNESS. I believe the Senator resides at Portland, and I do not think there are any veins there. I did not know, however, whether or not the honorable Senator had ever resided in the interior and become practically acquainted with the mining country. I desire to say to him, in this connection, that vein mines do not enter the earth by perpendicular lines; but, on the contrary, have what are called dips or slants running by oblique lines into the earth; that they follow each other regularly in that respect; and that the custom now and the habit everywhere and the law, first determined by necessity, by the fact, next by the population obeying that necessity, next by the local courts affirming that necessity by their decisions, is that the miner is authorized to follow every vein according to its dips and angles and variations. This whole bill is based upon the principle of confirming what has grown out of necessity, the wisest system, perhaps, that could possibly be devised, which is the work of those people themselves. Would the Senator want to enter the earth by perpendicular lines so that a man who owned a claim to-day, after he had descended fifty feet after it, should leave it to the ownership of another man to-morrow?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not understand that the Senator has answered the question which I propounded upon the terms of this bill. I did not inquire as to the law of the mining country at this time, but what does this bill provide upon that subject. Does it provide that these dips and angles and variations may be followed longitudinally, as well as laterally, or only laterally?

Mr. STEWART. No man living can make it clearer than the language of the bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I was aware, and have been for the last three quarters of an hour, that the Senator from Oregon did not understand this bill, and I am rather impressed with the belief that he cannot be made to understand it. I see that this remark excites merriment; but I assure the honorable Senator that I say it with all respect. It is not because of the want of understanding of my honorable friend, who has so high a standing in my own estimation, certainly as high as he could possibly wish to have, but the want of an acquaintance, in all probability, with a mining country. It is clear that the Senator does not comprehend the exigencies that belong to a mining country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The honorable Senator has not answered my question.

Mr. CONNESS. No; I do not intend to answer it just as you put it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know—

Mr. STEWART. Allow me to answer. The fourth section contains this provision:

Provided, That no location hereafter made shall exceed three hundred feet in length along the vein for each locator, with an additional claim for discovery to the discoverer, with the right to follow such vein to any depth—with all its dips, variations, and angles, together with a reasonable quantity of surface for the convenient working of the same as fixed by local rules.

Not to any length—

Dips and angles and variations do not go longitudinally.

Mr. CONNESS. That simply is no change; it is the law of the mines now.

Mr. STEWART. Just the same. While I am on my feet, I must say that I am really astonished that any man from the Pacific coast should object to a confirmation of our mining titles when the bills that are daily introduced into these Halls are destroying the people of that country. Day after day I receive telegraphic dispatches announcing that this man has broken and that man has broken; "the introduction of JULIAN'S bill has knocked stocks, and your friend A B is broken; he is destroyed." I want to get a permanent peace, so that our people shall be let alone; and if we can reach that consummation, I shall never disturb it. The utter impossibility of having any stability to our titles while this agitation lasts, and the ruin that it is bringing on my State, make it necessary that the agitation should be stopped. I am astonished at opposition to this measure by a man from the Pacific coast who ought to have some knowledge of the ruin that is being wrought by the bills which are being introduced into Congress, which in their practical operation would amount to a general system of confiscation. They are not so designed, I know, but they are so understood there. During the last year there have been more failures in mining enterprises, in consequence of the fluctuations caused by agitation here, than during the whole period since the first discovery of the precious metals in that country. We must stop the agitation of this question, if it be possible; but neither the gentleman nor myself have the power to do it; we cannot stop thirty million people from agitating the question. That being the case, let us have fixed rights, so that A, B, and C cannot come into Congress, and for the mere purpose of getting a little temporary popularity, propose to pay the national debt out of our mines, and have that fact telegraphed over the continent, causing fluctuations which involve the ruin of forty or fifty companies of enterprising men. We cannot and must not hold our titles upon such uncertainty. If this can be stopped, let it be stopped; but the gentleman has no power to stop it.

All there is in this bill is a simple confirmation of the existing condition of things in the mining regions, leaving everything where it was, indorsing the mining rules. It simply adopts and perfects the existing system, allowing these people to enjoy their property without being subject to the fluctuations created now by the agitations in Congress. It has been a matter of serious consideration for years before I brought myself to believe that there was an absolute necessity for action by Congress. Since this agitation has come up it is now a necessity. While it lasts there is no title, no security, no prosperity in your mines. The gentleman would do well to investigate this bill carefully. The objections to the bill, it seems to me, are as frivolous as could possibly be made. The objections that have been urged to the bill, one after another, would be answered by reading the bill through. I do hope that this question may be put at rest that our miners may have their titles confirmed, and that is all there is in the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the honorable Senator from Nevada for his admonition to me as to the manner in which I shall perform my duty here, and for the very polite intimation, not only from that Senator but from the Senator from California, that I know nothing about this bill or about the subject that I am discussing. Now, I will simply say that about the last thing I did in the State of Oregon before I left there to come to this body, was to try a mining suit involving many hundred thousand dollars, in which there was a great number of witnesses, and in which all the questions, geological and otherwise, growing out of veins and dips and angles and variations were elaborately discussed, so that I am not so entirely ignorant upon this subject as the honorable Senators assume.

The Senator from Nevada professes to be astonished because I am opposed to this bill. I venture to say that nine tenths of the men who are to-day engaged in mining are opposed to this bill or any other bill of a like nature contemplating a sale of these mines. The gentleman says that it is not in my power to prevent agitation upon this subject; but his own admission here to-day is that this bill in itself is imperfect and additional legislation will be required to make it perfect in its working.

Mr. STEWART. I beg your pardon. I stated that the bill did not compel a man to lose his property or buy; it left it optional with him. I guaranty that there is no miner who will not avail himself of it. It is not imperfect in that. I said that if legislation should become necessary to require them to buy—which I was opposed to now—that would come hereafter. The bill is perfect in that particular, and any man who is honest and will comply with the conditions can get his title. It holds out easy conditions so that this apparently interminable strife may be ended. The bill leaves it optional with the miners to buy. It is such a bill as they want; I have talked with hundreds of them and know it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I submit that the mere passage of this bill, which is as imperfect as it is represented to be and must to a great extent be inoperative, is not going to satisfy the people upon this subject, and it will commit those who represent the mining interests of the country in Congress to the sale of the mineral lands. When Senators and Representatives are once committed to the doctrine of selling these lands, then I insist there is no place where they can stop; but those persons who expect that the Government will derive an immense revenue from the sale of these lands will continue the agitation, will enter the door which this bill proposes to open, and will produce or cause legislation that will be destructive to the mining interests of the country. I say, sir, upon this subject it will not do to despise the day of small things; and I regret—I will not say that I am astonished, but I regret—that Senators and Representatives who are here to represent the mining interests of the country should open this door and should invite those who are in favor of taxing these miners and loading them down with every sort of legislation to enter in for that purpose.

Mr. President, I made an inquiry as to the effect of this bill. Senators have made answers to that inquiry as they saw proper. I think I understand the law as it now stands, and I desire to have the law remain unchanged, because I am satisfied that it operates to the advantage of the miners. They are content with its operations, and I do not wish that any bill should be brought forward here and passed that will interfere with the operation of that law. I shall not undertake upon that point to explain this bill; but I will let the bill stand with the explanations given by the Senators who advocate its passage.

It may be, sir, that my objections to this bill are "frivolous;" but that is a matter of opinion. I have stated my objections to the Senate, and I have submitted the reasons upon which those objections are founded, and if they are frivolous, as the Senator asserts, then of course they will be decided to be frivolous by the Senate and by those who examine them; but I am satisfied that I represent my constituents upon this question in opposing the passage of this bill or any other of a similar nature, and I know I act in accordance with the dictates of my own judgment, and I must beg pardon if I follow my own judgment and not the suggestions of the honorable Senator from Nevada.

It is said here that the object of this bill is to give the miners a title, a permanent, absolute title to their property. I ask Senators to look at the terms of this bill and see what sort of title the miners obtain under its provisions. It provides that the miner "may enter the land adjoining, which land adjoining shall be sold subject to this condition, and upon the further infeasible condition, both to be fully expressed in the patent, that the owners and occupants of the mine so appropriated and held shall pay into the Treasury of the United States, in each and every year, &c., three per cent." I believe that objection is obviated by the consent of the honorable Senators. Notwithstanding this bill, as they say, has been so carefully considered, it appears that upon the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Ohio this important feature has been stricken out of the bill. This was one ground upon which I objected to this portion of the bill, that it did not give the miner a title, but simply gave him a conditional right to the land. If he performed certain conditions then he was to have the land; if he did not perform those conditions then his right to the land was to cease; and if Senators consent to have that stricken out, of course, so far as my objection goes to that portion of the bill, it is entirely obviated.

Under the terms and provisions of this bill, as it seems to me, a person may take a claim according to the local usages and customs of a mining district, and he may file his plat and obtain a patent; the title becomes perfect in him, and then he may cease operations upon the claim and he may hold it for an indefinite length of time. He may proceed in the same manner on another claim, and so in this way claims may be acquired by individuals, not for the purpose of mining, but for the purpose of holding until they shall be increased in value by the operations of miners in the immediate neighborhood and vicinity; and in this way this property may accumulate in the hands of individuals or in the hands of companies, the business may come to be a monopoly in the hands of corporations or of capitalists, while under the present system, as a general rule, a man must remain in possession of his mine, he must work it, he must hold it, he must make it productive; otherwise he forfeits his right to the claim.

I have not made this motion, and sustained it by these remarks, with any view of opposing this bill upon any grounds not substantial in themselves, but because I think that this part of the bill which provides for the sale of the mineral lands is exceedingly defective. While I admit that it is the most unobjectionable bill of the kind that I have seen, and perhaps is as perfect as any such bill can be made, yet it is in the nature of things imperfect, and it is not because the honorable Senators who have framed it are not wise, but it is because in the nature of things you cannot pass a general act of Congress that will be adapted to the varied circumstances and conditions and interests of the different mining localities upon the Pacific coast; but if you have a rule that applies to one it may operate with injury and injustice in another. I came here instructed, I took pains to ascertain from men who were engaged in the business of mining as to what they wished on this subject and as to what was best for the country, and I satisfied myself that it would be unwise for the Government to undertake any system of sales of the mineral lands of the United States. I have read this bill carefully; I have read the report that has been made accompanying the bill; I have heard the speeches made in its favor, and I am satisfied to-day that whenever this Government enters upon a general system of selling the mineral lands, that day those who see its operations will regret the legislation. If you begin now, next year there will be applications for amendments, alterations, and changes, and so from year to year the legislation of Congress will be modified and changed, confusion introduced, and things that are now settled in these mining countries, and are understood by miners who are practical men, will be unsettled and disturbed, and the whole interests of the mining region and the country will be embarrassed and injured.

Mr. CONNESS. The question immediately before the body, I believe, is the motion of the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS.] I hope that we shall proceed with the amendments and act upon them, and I regret that the honorable Senator from Oregon [Mr. WILLIAMS] did not allow us to do that before he made his speech on the general merits of the measure. I wish to say to the honorable Senator that in this measure I aim but at the best results, and nothing would have given me more satisfaction than to have the benefit of his wisdom in connection with it, and notwithstanding all the care and attention with which he appears to have read it, it does not seem to have been with a disposition to amend it, for he has presented no amendment and no proposition to perfect it, but has rather evinced a disposition to find fault with it. Now, I submit that we cannot build up anything by simply finding fault. I submit also in this connection that the bill in no respect whatever attempts to change anything that now exists in any section of the mining country. It simply adds the fee-simple to the title according to the present system established by the people themselves.

I will not extend remarks on the subject. Before a final vote is taken perhaps I shall have something to say in answer to some of the statements of the honorable Senator. I am perfectly willing that this amendment shall be made; I think it is an improvement to the bill. The Senator from Oregon has given as an evidence that it is not a perfect bill the fact that we express a willingness to accept an amendment. Why should we not? We do not mean to say that we know all about this subject. We have tried to come to the wisest conclusion with the knowledge that we have; I wish we could have had what the Senator from Oregon knows also, which I am not at all willing to restrict or say anything about. It will be seen by the honorable Senator from Oregon that the tax we agreed to was to be in lieu of the present tax, and, as was very correctly stated by the honorable Senator from Indiana, the existing tax is greater than the one we proposed. He understands it to a dot. Nevertheless, as the present tax is borne, and it may be corrected hereafter, we agree to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to strike out in the second section of the amendment of the committee the following words:

And upon the further infeasible condition that the owners and occupants of the mine so appropriated and held shall pay into the Treasury of the United States in each and every year three per cent. of the net product of said mine, vein, or lode, which shall be in lieu of the stamp tax now levied upon bullion extracted from the public domain.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair. The Senator from Oregon proposes to strike out several of the sections of this bill. Suppose the proposition of the Senator does not prevail, will it then be in order to move to strike out one of the sections which he proposes to strike out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not understand that the Senator from Oregon has made any motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly. I made a motion to strike out from the second to the end of the eighth section, including all relating to sales.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not wish to debate this question, but as I introduced the original bill, and my attention was called to the subject somewhat at the last session of Congress, I will state generally the impression the bill makes upon my mind. I think it is the interest of the United States to get rid of the mineral lands of the United States, to get them into the hands of private individuals; to give them the title by patents in the ordinary way, so that the United States will be divested of all proprietary right over the mines. It is not necessary for me to discuss that question, because the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] has to some extent done so; but I might produce the opinions of Mr. Benton, Mr. Clay, and many of the most eminent statesmen of America to show that the title to the mineral lands is of no benefit to the United States. From time to time the principle of disposing of mineral lands, salt lands, iron lands, &c., has been adopted, so that now I believe we have no proprietary title in the United States to any but the gold and silver mines.

Mr. GRIMES. We have some saline lands.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought we had sold all the saline lands; but whether so or not, I think it is the policy of the United States to get rid of them. This bill gives the mineral lands to the people where they are in Nevada and in the other mineral States, for five dollars an acre, nothing more and nothing less. It gives them the lands for probably less than it will cost to lay them out, survey them, locate them, plat them, and sell them, so that it is substantially a grant of the mineral lands to the settlers in the mineral regions, and that policy I am in favor of adopting; while on the other hand, if you should adopt the proposition now made by the Senator from Oregon the United States would retain possession and control of these lands, would be subject to expenses, and there would be no legal right, no legal title to the improvements made on these lands. A settler going upon a claim and building his improvements upon the land there has no title whatever; the title to the improvements is in the United States; he has nothing but a possessory title, a customary right which the United States at any time may destroy; and it seems to me that nothing could be more injurious to the people who go to our mineral lands than this system of affairs—no title, no right, a man's improvements at any time subject to the legislation of Congress, no inducement to make improvements, no fixed and permanent settlement. One objection, and the strongest objection made to the admission of Colorado was that her population was so changeable that four or five years ago it was more than it was the last two or three years. The reason of that is that no man can get a title to land; their title to their lands is simply possessory, it may be destroyed at any time by the United States or even by their local laws.

It seems to me that under the circumstances all the gentlemen from that region of country should be in favor of divesting the United States of its title and reposing it in some way in the people who may live there. I am therefore in favor of the general principle of the bill. The bill introduced by me, upon which the debate is pending, was framed carefully at the Treasury Department, having also before them a bill framed at the Land Office, and all the various bills were combined together, to carry out the general idea of divesting the United States of its interest in these lands upon such terms as would substantially pay the expense of laying out and surveying them. The great body of the lands, even in the mineral districts, are agricultural lands. They are subject to entry and sale precisely like any other agricultural lands, while the mineral lands may be divided into small tracts and the title may be conveyed by patent. The conveyance of the surface conveys the lode or lead, whichever way it may lead. This is reversing the ordinary effect of a patent to land, the title of which descends to the center of the earth, and does not follow the lead or lode.

The original bill framed in the Treasury Department carried out the general idea of disposing and getting rid of the title to mineral land and vesting it in the occupier of the soil at just about the rate that would pay for surveying and laying down and patenting, no more and no less. The amendment reported by the Committee on Mines and Mining does not vary the essential features of the bill. It makes them still more liberal to the miner by reducing the rate of taxation, and containing some other provisions in regard to the manner in which occupying claimants of mines may get a patent and title. That is the principal material difference. Under the circumstances, it seems to me, with very limited knowledge of the profession of mining, and with no knowledge of the subject-matter except that derived from knowledge of our land laws, it would be better for Congress to adopt either the original bill or the substitute, and thus dispose and get rid of the mineral lands of the United States. I believe it would do more to encourage the settlement of the mining regions, to induce people to go there to make permanent improvements if they can get a good title, than any other measure that can be proposed. It seems to me that no man with our ideas of prudence and care would be willing to build expensive improvements upon lands the title of which he does not possess, and that that general idea is sufficient to induce all of us to vote for this disposition of the mineral lands.

I shall therefore vote against the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, and vote either for the original bill or for the substitute. I do not see any objection to the substitute, and shall vote for it, and hope the subject may thus be got rid of. I do not suppose that any scheme can be devised that will make this system for the sale of the mineral lands very much like our other system for the sale of the public lands, which was changed very much from time to time, until finally the present land system was adopted. I may say that the whole history of our public lands was a system of change. It is only within the last four or five years that the homestead principle has been adopted, which has disposed of the great body of the public land. Formerly it was sold at two dollars an acre, and legislation varied from year to year, until finally it became the settled policy of the United States to encourage the occupation of land by the actual occupier, and to give him a title, for nothing, to a limited quantity of the public land. This bill applies to the mineral lands the same system that has been applied to the other lands of the United States.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Before the question is put I should like a little information in regard to the third section. It provides that the lands sought to be located shall be paid for at the rate of five dollars per acre, and that the surveyor general shall receive for his services the compensation allowed by law, with mileage. Is that compensation to be paid by the United States?

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir; by the party. There is a law now in existence, passed in 1862, which provides that surveys of the public lands in certain cases shall be made upon the deposit of the cost by the party requiring the survey to be made. That is the "law" referred to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. If the section is not stricken out, it can be looked into afterward. I was going to remark that these claims were generally very small, perhaps not more than an acre or two.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to my friend from Iowa that I had already prepared an amendment to offer to the third section, covering the very point, to insert after the word "acre," in the twelfth line, the words, "together with the cost of such survey, plat, and notice." I suppose in some cases where a valuable mining claim covered but an acre, the sum of five dollars would not really pay the cost of surveying. I wish to make it clear that the person receiving the title is to pay actual cost of the survey, though that, perhaps, will be the legal effect of the section as it stands.

Mr. CONNESS. That is the legal effect of the section as it is. The terms used here, "such compensation as is allowed by law," refer to the law of 1862, under which parties wanting surveys made deposit the money in advance before the work is performed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend the section as I have stated. Before the question is taken on striking out it is in order, of course, to move to amend the section; and I move to insert after the word "acre," in line twelve of section three, the words "together with the cost of such survey, plat, and notice."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move further to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out all of section three after the word "thereupon," in line fourteen. The words which I propose to strike out are:

And the surveyor general shall receive for such service such compensation as is allowed by law, with mileage, not to exceed at legal rates the amount chargeable from the county seat of the county in which the claim may be situated to the said claim.

The compensation of the surveyor general is fixed by law, and he is not presumed to receive any fees for particular surveys that he may superintend.

Mr. STEWART. There is only one idea in this provision which is at all important. It was that there should be a deputy surveyor in every mining county, and the only object of the clause is to limit the mileage which may be charged.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The surveyor general does not execute the work himself.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not rise for the purpose of moving any amendment, but only to make a remark as to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon. I think I was one of the first that advocated the policy of giving titles to the mineral lands, and to the mountains of our country, for the reason that it was important that miners should have established, permanent homes for the health of the community. The idea that is sought to be accomplished by this bill I think would meet my full approval if it were placed in a shape in which it was at all practicable. Notwithstanding the eminent skill and the great learning in the mining interests of my friend from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]—and I know him to be one of the most skillful in all those departments—this might be called "a bill to promote litigation, create controversy, and occasion difficulties." No system yet has been matured for disposing of the mineral lands in fee, except as they are occupied in present possession under the customs of the country. Here is a bill providing a policy full of machinery very ingenious, but which, like some of those machines that are intended to secure perpetual motion, will run but a short time. I think, without entering into this debate, having given for years my attention to this very subject and considered it when a member of the other House, as well as ever since I have been in the Senate, that we are not prepared here at the present time to provide a plan for the disposition of the mineral lands of the country. Those portions of the bill that would remain were the amendment of the Senator from Oregon adopted would be making as great an advanced step as I think sound wisdom now justifies. I agree with the Senator from Oregon. I make no argument; I merely desire to express an opinion.

Mr. NYE. In the third section, line fourteen, after the word "thereupon" I move to insert:

But said plat, survey, or description shall in no case cover more than one vein or lode, and no patent shall issue for more than one vein or lode, which shall be expressed in the patent issued.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to make a report from a committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive it by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEWART. Let the pending bill be laid aside informally.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 492) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House agree to the first, second, third, fifth, seventh, eighth, and ninth amendments as made by the Senate.

That the House agree to the sixth amendment, with the following amendment, that is to say, by inserting in section one, page 1, line twenty-one, after the word "aforesaid," the words, "and all other works provided for by this act."

That the House agree to the tenth amendment with the following amendment, that is to say, by inserting after the word "Manistee" in said amendment, the words "South Haven."

That the Senate recede from the fourth amendment.

Z. CHANDLER,

L. M. MORRILL,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

THOMAS D. PLIOT,

J. M. HUMPHREY,

JOHN W. LONGYEAR,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WADE. I should desire to have a little information from the Senator from Michigan in regard to these amendments.

Mr. CHANDLER. The amendment striking out the prohibition against spending money except upon the new plans and surveys is agreed to. The provision as to Michigan City is stricken out. These are about the only material amendments.

Mr. WADE. The provision first referred to by the Senator is left as the Senate left it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes.

Mr. GRIMES. Stricken out?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes; stricken out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to inquire whether the amendment providing for the improvement of the Willamette river has been stricken out.

Mr. CHANDLER. Not at all; no change has been made except what I have stated. The first section is changed so as to include all the works provided for in the bill in that section, and the other clause which was stricken out by the Senate is left stricken out.

The report was concurred in.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 85) for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida;

A bill (H. R. No. 492) to incorporate the Howard Institute and Home of the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 57) for the relief of the heirs of Lieutenant Joshua D. Todd, late of the United States Navy, deceased;

A bill (S. No. 202) for the relief of Elisha W. Dunn, a paymaster in the United States Navy;

A bill (S. No. 307) authorizing the restoration of Commander Charles Hunter to the Navy; and

A bill (S. No. 360) to regulate the appointment of paymasters in the Navy, and explanatory of an act for the better organization of the pay department of the Navy.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the United States be requested to transmit forthwith to the Executives of the several States copies of the article of amendment proposed by Congress to the State Legislatures to amend the Constitution of the United States, passed June 13, 1866, respecting citizenship, the basis of representation, disqualification for office, and validity of the public debt of the United States, &c., to the end that the said States may proceed to act upon the said article of amendment; and that he request the Executive of each State that may ratify said amendment to transmit to the Secretary of State a certified copy of such ratification.

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee, on the 16th instant, presented to the Secretary of State, to be deposited in the archives of the State Department, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 127) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask the Senate to take up the resolution which has just been received from the House of Representatives for the transmission of the constitutional amendment to the Executives of the States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It requires unanimous consent to take it up at this time. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan to waive his motion for a moment in order to enable me to correct a gross error that appears in a public document printed and laid on our tables this morning in connection with my name.

Mr. HOWARD. Let this resolution be passed first. It will take but a single minute.

The Secretary read the resolution of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was concurred in.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I find on my table this morning a House document which purports to be, and is no doubt, a printed copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in response to a resolution of the House of Representatives, calling upon him to report "the respective amounts drawn by the several members of both branches of the Thirty-Eighth Congress as salary and as mileage, separately, together with the number of miles for which each one was paid." Opposite my name I find it stated that during the last Congress I was paid for mileage $651 20, that I received as compensation $8,983 56, and the total is given as $6,634 76. There is an error in the amount of compensation received of $3,000. It is evidently a printer's error, as the additions show it to be; but as I do not know for what purpose this information has been called for, or what use is likely to be made of it, I have thought it due to myself to state that it is an error.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 25th ultimo, a report from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, furnishing information touching the transactions of the executive branch of the Government respecting the transportation, settlement, and colonization of persons of the African race; which, on motion of Mr. WILSON, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 13th instant, a communication from the Secretary of State, with accompanying documents, furnishing information in relation to the departure of troops from Austria for Mexico; which, on motion of Mr. TRUMBULL, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 18, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

BILLS ON LEAVE.

The SPEAKER stated the first business in order to be the call of States for bills on leave to be referred to the appropriate committees, and not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill to establish in Germany a repertory for furnishing information in regard to the resources of the United States; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

CLAIMS OF LOYAL CITIZENS.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE introduced a bill to establish a commission for the settlement of claims against the Government of the United States held by loyal citizens of East Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A. SUTRO.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada, introduced a bill granting to A. Sutro the right of way, and granting other privileges to aid in the construction of a draining and exploring tunnel to the Comstock lode, in the State of Nevada; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

RESOLUTIONS.

The SPEAKER stated the next business in order to be the call of States for resolutions in an inverse order, commencing with the State of Pennsylvania, where it rested last Monday at the expiration of the morning hour.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, leave of absence was granted to his colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS.

On motion of Mr. BUCKLAND, leave of absence was granted to his colleagues, Mr. DELANO and Mr. HUBBELL.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR, leave of absence was granted to his colleague, Mr. HUBBELL.

EDWARD SPICER AND JOHN BAILEY.

Mr. MORRIS submitted the following resolution; on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the compensation of Edward Spicer, superintendent of the folding-room, be made equal to that now paid to the first assistant doorkeeper.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his demand for the previous question, so that I may add an amendment in reference to Clinton Lloyd, Chief Clerk of the House, to make his pay equal to that of the chief clerk of the Sergeant-at-Arms. These are permanent officers, who are required to stay here all the year round to do the business of members.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the Committee of Accounts has not yet reported in respect to increasing the pay of the chief clerk of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. WINFIELD. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the demand for the previous question to allow me to offer an amendment making the salary of the superintendent of the speech-folding department and book-keeper of the folding-room equal to that of the enrolling clerk of the House.

Mr. MORRIS. I will state that while I would be willing to accommodate the gentleman, I prefer that each case should stand on its own merits.

Mr. WINFIELD. I desire to state that these gentlemen remain here during the whole year at a salary, I believe, of $1,200 a year, and there are no employés of the House by whom members are more faithfully served than by them. Their salaries are really inadequate to the service they render. I hope while others are provided for these will not be overlooked.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is necessary that these persons should be here at their post always. We have to write for documents, books, and special laws, and they get them and send them to us.

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire to move to amend the resolution.

Mr. MORRIS. I see that each gentleman wishes to amend. As I stated before, I prefer to let each case stand on its own merits.

Mr. ROLLINS. If the previous question is voted down, I wish to refer the resolution to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. MORRIS. I insist on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. ROLLINS. I hope it will not be sustained.

On seconding the demand for the previous question, no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Messrs. MORRIS and ROLLINS.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 48.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. ROLLINS. I now move to amend by adding the following resolution, which has been agreed upon by the Committee of Accounts, and on this I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That the compensation of John Bailey, assistant disbursing clerk, be, and the same is hereby, increased and made the same as that of the Journal clerk, beginning with the present Congress.

Mr. WINFIELD. I desire to make an inquiry. What has become of the resolution of my colleague?

The SPEAKER. It is pending with this as an amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment offered by Mr. ROLLINS was agreed to.

The question recurred on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. TAYLOR. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. ROLLINS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYÉS IN FOLDING DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WINFIELD. I offer the following resolution, and demand the previous question upon it:

Resolved, That until further order the salary of the superintendent of the speech-folding department and the book-keeper of the folding-room of the House of Representatives shall be equal to that of the enrolling clerk of the House, to commence at the beginning of the present fiscal year.

If the House will allow me I will make a brief statement in reference to this resolution.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have no objection if I can be allowed a word when the gentleman is through.

Mr. BALDWIN. I hope we will have no debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BALDWIN] objects.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I would like to ask what the pay which these officers receive is now, and what it will be if this proposition prevails.

Mr. WINFIELD. Their pay at present is, I understand, $1,200 for a full year's service. This proposition is to increase their pay to $1,800.

On seconding the demand for the previous question, no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Messrs. WINFIELD and PRICE.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 40.

So the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WINFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. COBB. On the motion to lay on the table I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to reconsider was then laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 57) for the relief of the heirs of Lieutenant Joshua D. Todd, late of the United States Navy, deceased;

An act (S. No. 307) authorizing the restoration of Commander Charles Hunter to the Navy;

An act (S. No. 202) for the relief of Elisha W. Dunn, a paymaster in the United States Navy; and

An act (S. No. 360) to regulate the appointment of paymasters in the Navy, and explanatory of an act for the better organization of the pay department of the Navy.

DISCONTINUANCE OF A POST ROUTE.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill to repeal an act entitled "An act to establish a post route from West Alburg, Vermont, to Champlain, in the State of New York, and for other purposes," approved May 21, 1865; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

VENTILATION OF THE HOUSE HALL.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be requested to inquire into the expediency and practicability of improving the ventilation of the Hall of Representatives.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

PAY OF A MESSENGER.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Accounts be instructed to inquire into and report upon the expediency of increasing the pay of the assistant messenger connected with the House post office, so as to make it equal to the pay of the Capitol police, after January 1, 1866.

PAY OF CHIEF CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. HOLMES offered the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That until further order the salary of the Chief Clerk of the House be fixed at $3,000 per annum, beginning with the present fiscal year.

Mr. STEVENS. To whom does that refer?

Mr. HOLMES. To the Chief Clerk, Mr. Lloyd.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ROSS. I move to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask what is the effect of the resolution; when the increased salary will commence.

The SPEAKER. According to the terms of the resolution it will commence with the present fiscal year.

Mr. HALE. At what date will the increased salary commence?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman knows when the fiscal year will commence as well as the Chair does.

Mr. FINCK. I wish to inquire what the present salary is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot answer the question.

Mr. HOLMES. The salary is $2,150, a salary less than the other clerks receive.

The question was taken on Mr. Ross's motion, and there were—ayes 30, noes 32; no quorum voting.

Mr. PIKE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 33, nays 73, not voting 76; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Baker, Baldwin, Boutwell, Brownell, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Defrees, Glossbrenner, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Ladin, Niblack, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Ritter, Ross, Sawyer, Spalding, Taber, Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, and James F. Wilson—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boyer, Broomall, Buckland, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Denison, Donnelly, Driggs, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Johnson, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Longyear, McClure, McKee, McRuer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Nicholson, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Rollins, Sitzgreaves, Stevens, Stillwell, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Upson, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, Winfield, and Woodbridge—73.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, James M. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Bergen, Blow, Brandegee, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Goodyear, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hart, Hall, Hogan, Hotchkiss, James R. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Jones, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, William Lawrence, Lynch, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, Mercier, Neill, O'Neill, Patterson, Phelps, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Rousseau, Schenck, Seagriff, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Strouse, Thayer, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Williams, Windom, and Wright—76.

So the House refused to lay the resolution upon the table.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ROSS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The resolution was then agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ABOLISHING THE MARINE CORPS.

Mr. BALDWIN submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be directed to consider the expediency of abolishing the Marine corps, or transferring it to the Army, and of making provision for supplying such military force as may at any time be needed in the Navy by details from the Army.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

INVASION OF VERMONT.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a joint resolution to pay the State of Vermont the sum expended for the protection of the frontier against the invasion from Canada in 1864; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MORRILL called the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The joint resolution authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the State of Vermont the sum that may be found due, after the same may have been audited by the proper officers of the Treasury Department, expended by the State of Vermont for the defense and protection of the frontier from invasion from Canada in 1864; provided that the amount to be so audited and paid shall not exceed the sum of $16,463 81.

Mr. LE BLOND. We are unable on this side to know any good reason for the passage of this joint resolution.

Mr. BINGHAM. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not, the previous question having been seconded.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question was taken; and there were upon a division—yeas 40, noes 21; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MORRILL and LE BOND were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—yeas fifty-five, noes not counted.

So the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The joint resolution was then read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. MORRILL. I call the previous question.

Mr. ANCONA. This joint resolution authorizes the payment of money, and therefore makes an appropriation, and should go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is an appropriation bill, and had the question of order been raised in time the Chair would have ruled that it should go to the Committee of the Whole. But the point cannot be made upon the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, which was upon the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. ANCONA called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 83, nays 21, not voting 78; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Baker, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Cook, Culham, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, DeForest, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Kerr, Ketchum, Ladd, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McKee, McKuer, Miller, Morrill, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Spalding, Stevens, Upson, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Stephen B. Wilson, and Woodbridge—83.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Boyer, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grider, Aaron Harding, Humphrey, Le Blond, Niblack, Nicholson, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Sitgreaves, Taber, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, and Trowbridge—21.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Barker, Bergen, Blow, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Goodyear, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hart, Hill, Hogan, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Kuykendall, William Lawrence, Lynch, Marshall, McCullough, McIndoe, Mereur, Moorhead, Morris, Neill, O'Neill, Patterson, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Rousseau, Scofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Strouse, Taylor, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Williams, James F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Wright—78.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ST. ALBAN'S BANK.

Mr. MORRILL. It is not often that Vermont asks any special legislation from Congress. But I have one more favor to ask of the House in relation to a bank that was robbed at the time of the raid from Canada. The bank has not paid any tax since that time, and the Government of the United States is making an effort to recover the amount stolen from the British Government. In the mean time I ask the passage of a joint resolution to suspend the collection of taxes from that bank until further orders.

Mr. STEVENS. I wish to ask my friend from Vermont whether there has not been before his committee for two years a resolution proposing the non-collection of tax upon property in Chambersburg which was burned down, and the refunding of tax which had been paid after the property was burned, and whether the committee has acted on that resolution.

Mr. MORRILL. That subject is in the hands of a sub-committee, of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] is chairman. That sub-committee has as yet made no report.

Mr. STEVENS. I am afraid it is a sub-soil committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. If I am correctly informed, a part of the money of which this bank was robbed was recovered.

Mr. MORRILL. Some of the robbers were captured and a portion of the money was restored by the Canadian authorities. The bank lost $73,525. The Canadian authorities restored $30,955 80, leaving a loss to the bank of $42,560 20.

Mr. DAVIS. Was there only one bank robbed?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Vermont whether this is the bank that was released by the Vermont Legislature from the payment of its debts.

Mr. MORRILL. This bank has not refused to meet a single dollar of its obligations. Its bills are as good as those of any other bank in the United States.

Mr. HALE. I desire to know whether this is the bank, which, by an act of the Vermont Legislature, was permitted to wind up its affairs and escape the redemption of all bills which were not presented within six months after the publication of notice in some country newspaper.

Mr. MORRILL. I am not aware of any such legislation, so far as it relates to this bank.

Mr. HALE. There was such an act; and I desire to know whether this is the bank to which it applied.

Mr. MORRILL. It was not this bank. This is the St. Alban's Bank.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask the gentleman from Vermont why this bank should be relieved from the payment of taxes any more than banks that have been robbed by others than those engaged in the service of the rebels. Quite a number of banks in different parts of the country have had their vaults entered and bonds and notes carried off, amounting in some instances to quite as much as the sum lost by this bank. Shall we not, by the passage of this resolution, establish a precedent for extending similar relief to all other banks that may have met with losses of this kind? Will not the same principle require us to go still further and relieve from taxation every man in the country who may have been robbed of his money or had his property destroyed? If we establish this principle, it occurs to me we shall have about as much as we can do to sit here as a board for the relief of persons who may meet with these losses from day to day and from year to year. It may be that there are some features in this case which make it an exception to the general rule; but unless that be so, I certainly think the resolution should not pass.

Mr. ROSS. I would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that as this bill is for the benefit of a corporation it stands on a higher ground than if it were for the advantage of an individual. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I know that is the idea of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Ross;] but I differ with him.

Mr. MORRILL. I think this stands on a different ground from the cases mentioned by the gentleman from Iowa. This money was lost by an unlawful invasion from Canada; and I believe that our Government insists upon its right to claim from the British Government entire indemnity for the loss.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Vermont, if this bank is to receive indemnity at the hands of the British Government such as he has indicated, then, of course, there is no reason why it should be exempted.

Mr. MORRILL. If the bank receives any indemnity from the British Government, it must be through the hands of the United States Government.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It will make no difference from what source the indemnity is received, whether from the British Government through the hands of the United States Government, or directly from the British Government; if the bank be made whole, of course it ought not to be relieved from taxation.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Vermont whether the object is to relieve this bank from taxation altogether, or only on the portion they have lost.

Mr. MORRILL. It only asks a suspension for the time being.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Does it cover the entire bank and its capital, or only that portion which the bank has lost?

Mr. MORRILL. It suspends the entire amount from October 18, 1864, to July 1, 1866.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I see no reason why that bank should not pay on the real capital it has. It seems to me the remark of the gentleman from Iowa is applicable, and if this be adopted any man who has lost anything in any way should be relieved from taxation.

Mr. HALE. I hope the gentleman from Vermont will answer the question I have put to him. I wish to call his attention, of which he seems to be ignorant, to an extraordinary piece of legislation on the part of Vermont in regard to one of the St. Alban's banks, allowing it to wind up in six months, and absolving it from the payment of any bill not presented within that time. Is that the bank sought to be relieved from taxation? If it is it strikes me it has no claim to congressional favor.

Mr. MORRILL. I am not aware of any such law in reference to this bank. I know it continues in existence. I think the gentleman refers to another bank in the same town and county.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Is debate in order? The SPEAKER. It is. The gentleman from Vermont has the floor for an hour.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say such legislation has been had in reference to one bank in St. Alban's. I wish to ask whether this is that bank. I understand the gentleman from Vermont is ignorant that any such legislation has taken place. I know that such legislation has taken place, and I wish to know whether this is the bank.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I will state for the information of the gentleman from New York that no legislation in Vermont has been had in reference to the loss of this bank; but that the legislation he refers to was in favor of another bank, a State institution, entirely disconnected and separate from this. Whether that law was wise or unwise it is not for me to say. A law was passed giving time to a certain bank in Franklin county to close up its matters, imposing certain conditions on the bank, on the performance of which, unless its bills were presented within a certain period for redemption, it was under no obligation to redeem them; but that legislation has nothing to do with this bank.

This bank comes here asking for relief, a bank situated upon a frontier, undefended in time of war by troops of our Government against men decided to be connected with the confederacy by the Canadian government, and who have been relieved by the Canadian government on that and other grounds—men, I say, who robbed the bank. The Government admitting, as I believe, it may eventually succeed in getting this money back by demand on the English Government, and not yet obtaining it the bank asks this tax may be suspended until further orders. It means undoubtedly until the time when the question shall be decided whether the English or the Canadian Government shall return to the United States the property seized by these raiders who ran over our northern frontier. It does seem to me to be an eminently just proposition. If, having lost this money, they go on in spite of the loss and make their bill-holders secure, redeem their money, and continue their business, it seems to me the Government at least ought to suspend the tax until such time as a different state of circumstances may arise, inasmuch as the money was taken through the remissness or fault of the Government.

Mr. MORRILL. As there seems to be some opposition I will withdraw it for the present for the purpose of modifying it.

TELEGRAPH FROM CALIFORNIA TO IDAHO.

Mr. ROLLINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to encourage the construction of a telegraph line between the State of California and the Territory of Idaho; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

EXPORT TAX ON COTTON.

Mr. STEVENS. In pursuance of unanimous consent previously granted, I introduce the following concurrent resolution:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the following article be proposed to the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of the States, shall be valid:

ARTICLE.—Congress shall have power to lay an export duty or tax on cotton exported from the United States.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, and the question was on ordering it to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. STEVENS. I demand the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. How does this come in?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent granted during the morning hour. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] and his colleagues [Mr. ANCONA and Mr. MILLER] asked unanimous consent to offer resolutions. The Chair stated that it was unusual; but unanimous consent being given the gentlemen reserved the right to offer their resolutions at any time during the day.

Mr. ROGERS. I think the same resolution has already been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STEVENS. This has never been referred before.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. LE BLOND. I hope the gentleman will not press this to a vote at this time. It embraces a very important feature in the exports of the country.

Mr. STEVENS. In answer to the gentleman I will state that five months ago I offered such a resolution, and it has gone to the tomb of the Capulets; and now I want to take the sense of the House on this question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to state, in answer to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania says, that he did some five months ago introduce a resolution similar in its terms to this, but not confined to an export duty on cotton. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the committee were not able to agree on reporting it. But some time since the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] introduced a resolution in terms, I believe, the same as the one now pending before the House, and that was referred to the same committee. Since that time the committee have had no opportunity whatever to report. It has not been called for some three or four months, and therefore we have not been able to report anything to the House on that subject or any other.

Mr. STEVENS. I am finding no fault with the action of the committee. I know the first resolution which I offered was not confined to cotton. I therefore desire to confine it now to that single article and see whether the House will concur in it.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. This proposition, as I understand, affects the export duty on cotton alone. Now, sir, it is a question worthy of consideration whether we are prepared at this time to tax an article of this kind.

Mr. STEVENS. This is an argument, and I do not propose to debate it.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish to make a suggestion in regard to an amendment. In every constitutional amendment that we have yet passed or introduced there has been a provision for referring it for ratification to the Legislatures of the several States. Now, I suggest that this be amended by providing for a convention of the States for the express purpose of ratifying or rejecting the amendment. The reason is obvious why this should be done. This Congress was elected at a time when our country was in a state of war.

Mr. STEVENS. I understand the gentleman—

Mr. LE BLOND. Will the gentleman allow me one moment?

Mr. STEVENS. I will insert the words "when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States."

Mr. LE BLOND. That is not the point. That is just what I do not want.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has a right to modify his resolution before the vote is taken.

Mr. LE BLOND. Of course; very good.

Mr. STEVENS. As the gentleman and myself cannot agree, which is very strange, there is no necessity for further delay.

Mr. LE BLOND. It is not at all strange.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to yield further.

Mr. LE BLOND. Well, Mr. Speaker, the previous question having been seconded, I shall object to any modification being made.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has not yet been seconded, and the gentleman has a right to modify it previous to action.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he intends to allow any debate on this resolution after the previous question shall have been seconded, or whether he intends to bring the House to a vote without any debate whatever.

Mr. STEVENS. If the House agrees with me, I shall ask a vote upon the resolution. I do not believe anybody wants to debate it except for purposes of delay. I shall, therefore, ask a vote.

The question was put on seconding the demand for the previous question; and there were—ayes 43; noes 39; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STEVENS and LE BLOND were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 43.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put, being upon agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Are not the yeas and nays required on that vote?

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays must be taken. It requires a two-thirds vote to amend the Constitution.

The concurrent resolution was again read.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled the following bills; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 85) for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida; and

An act (H. R. No. 482) to incorporate the Howard Institute and Home of the District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. COOPER, his Secretary, communicated to the House sundry messages in writing.

The message further informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 11) to facilitate commercial, postal, and military communication among the several States;

An act (H. R. No. 106) to provide for the settlement of accounts of certain public officers;

An act (H. R. No. 621) to regulate and secure the safe-keeping of public money intrusted to disbursing officers of the United States; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 134) relative to appointments to the Military Academy of the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate (S. No. 230) to reimburse the State of West Virginia for moneys expended for the United States in enrolling, equipping, and paying military forces to aid in suppressing the rebellion.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had adopted a resolution providing "that there be printed for the use of the members of the Thirty-Ninth Congress the reports of Major Generals William T. Sherman, George H. Thomas, John Pope, J. G. Foster, A. Pleasanton, and E. A. Hitchcock, made to the joint committee on the conduct of the war, together with such other reports as may be received by the commencement of the next session of Congress, the same number and in the same style as were printed of the reports heretofore made by said committee;" in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed a joint resolution and bills of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 104) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue American registers to the barks Marget and Golden Fleece;

An act (S. No. 283) for the relief of Edward St. Clair Clarke; and

An act (S. No. 873) releasing to Francis S. Lyons the interest of the United States in certain lands.

EXPORT DUTY ON COTTON—AGAIN.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to offer an amendment to strike out a few words from his resolution?

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been seconded, and the main question ordered, the resolution can only be amended by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent, then, to strike out the words "on cotton." I think we ought not to single out one article, but either add others or leave it open entirely for the action of Congress.

Mr. LE BLOND. I object.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded.

The question was put; and there were—ayes 27, noes 40; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SCHENCK and ELDRIDGE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 40, noes 55.

So the motion to reconsider was lost.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon agreeing to the concurrent resolution. A two-thirds vote being required by the Constitution, the question will be taken by yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 59, nays 61, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Blaine, Bromwell, Broomall, Bundy, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eliot, Ferry, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Larkin, George V. Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, McClurg, McKee, Miller, Morrill, Moulton, Myers, Orth, Perham, Plants, Price, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Spaulding, Stevens, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Arnam, Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—59.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Bingham, Boutwell, Boyer, Buckland, Coffroth, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Defrees, Denison, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Hale, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Hogan, Hooper, Hulburd, Humphrey, Kasson, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Latham, Le Blond, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McRuer, Morris, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, Paine, Pike, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Schenck, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Stilwell, Taber, Taylor, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Robert T. Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, and Winfield—61.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Barker, Bergen, Blow, Brandegee, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hart, Hill, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, William Lawrence, Lynch, McCullough, McIndoe, Mercer, Moorhead, Neill, O'Neill, Patterson, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ross, Rousseau, Scofield, Shanklin, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Strouse, Thayer, Burt Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Whaley, Williams, Woodbridge, and Wright—62.

So (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the concurrent resolution was not agreed to.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. STEVENS. After consultation with the friends of the measure, I desire to give notice that the question will be called on Friday next upon the bill to restore to the States lately in insurrection their full political rights, unless the House shall see proper to extend the time for debate upon that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that when the House last week granted unanimous consent for the Army bill to be taken up tomorrow after the morning hour the Chair then stated that if the debate upon the reconstruction bill should not be closed by that time the Army bill would take the preference, as it was made the special order by unanimous consent, while the reconstruction bill was made the special order by a suspension of the rules.

Mr. STEVENS. Very well; then I will give no notice at this time of closing debate.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move that the rules be suspended to allow any member who was absent last week when the vote was taken upon the proposed amendment to the Constitution to record his vote to-day upon that question.

No objection was made, and the rules were suspended.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a privileged question. I submit, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, the following report:

To the House of Representatives:

The Committee on Enrolled Bills respectfully report that on the 16th day of June, 1866, they presented to and filed with the Secretary of State of the United States a joint resolution of the following title, namely: "House Resolution No. 127," a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. AMASA COBB, Chairman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would add that the constitutional amendment is published officially by the Secretary of State in the Washington Republican of this morning.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following concurrent resolution, for action at this time:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the President of the United States be requested to transmit forthwith to the Executives of the several States of the United States copies of the article of amendment proposed by Congress to the State Legislatures to amend the Constitution of the United States, passed June 13, 1866, respecting citizenship, the basis of representation, disqualification for office, the validity of the public debt of the United States, &c., to the end that the said States may proceed to act upon the said article of amendment, and that he request the Executives of the States that may ratify the said amendment to transmit to the Secretary of State certified copies of such ratification.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to introduce the resolution.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I ask for the yeas and nays on that question.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and there were twenty in the affirmative.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. ELDRIDGE called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ELDRIDGE and BINGHAM were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas twenty-three, nocs not counted.

So (one fifth voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 92, nays 25, not voting 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broome, Buckland, Bundy, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Defrees, Donnelly, Driggs, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Lallin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McKee, McKuer, Miller, Morrill, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stilwell, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—92.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Boyer, Coffroth, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Humphrey, Kerr, Le Blond, Marshall, Niblack, Nicholson, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Sitgreaves, Taber, Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, and Winfield—25.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, James M. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Bergen, Blow, Brandegee, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Culver, Darling, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Hill, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kelso, Kuykendall, William Lawrence, Lynch, McCullough, McIndoe, Mercer, Moorhead, Morris, Neill, O'Neill, Patterson, Phelps, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, John H. Rice, Rousseau, Scofield, Shanklin, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stevens, Strouse, Thayer, Burt Van Horn, Elihu B. Washburne, Whaley, Williams, and Wright—65.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended to allow the introduction of the resolution.

During the roll-call,

Mr. MYERS said: I have been requested to announce that my colleague, Mr. O'NEILL, detained from the House by indisposition, is paired with my colleague, Mr. RANDALL.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. BINGHAM. I call for the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to, there being—yeas 87, nocs 20.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF 1812.

Mr. MILLER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

"Whereas on the 22d of January last a bill entitled 'A bill to grant pensions to soldiers of the war of 1812 with Great Britain,' was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, on which no report has yet been made; and whereas the bill provides for giving pensions only to those who are in indigent circumstances; and as many of these old soldiers are now in abject poverty; and inasmuch as it is due to them as well as the credit of the country that speedy action should be taken thereon: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be, and are hereby, requested to report said bill with an affirmative recommendation with as little delay as possible.

Mr. PERHAM. I hope the previous question will not be seconded. That committee have a report ready on this subject, and have been waiting for some time an opportunity to present it. I have no doubt that the report will be presented next Friday, when the committee will be called.

Mr. MILLER. Very well; I am willing that the resolution shall lie over till next Friday.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolution will lie over informally.

There was no objection.

AMERICAN CITIZENS IMPRISONED IN IRELAND.

Mr. ANCONA, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Whereas it is alleged that peaceable citizens of the United States, engaged in no unlawful act, have been arrested and are held as prisoners by the British Government in Ireland: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to inform this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, what information he may have as to such arrests, and what steps, if any, have been taken to protect such persons in their rights as citizens of the United States.

The SPEAKER. This being a call for executive information, unanimous consent is necessary for its consideration on this day.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

MILEAGE OF MEMBERS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution, of which I gave notice on last Saturday:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mileage be directed to examine and report what discrepancy, if any, there was between the amount of mileage claimed by members and the amount allowed by the Mileage Committee of the Thirty-Eighth Congress, and that the Mileage Committee of this House be directed in no case to allow more mileage to any member than is claimed by him.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the rules be suspended.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 58, nocs 26; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER ordered tellers under the rule; and appointed Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. HUMPHREY.

The House was again divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 58, nocs 26; no quorum voting.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the House takes no interest in the matter I withdraw my resolution.

MORNING HOUR OF SATURDAY.

Mr. MORRILL, by unanimous consent, moved that the morning hour of Saturday be set apart for the consideration of bills of a public nature.

The motion was agreed to.

RECONSTRUCTION.

The House then resumed, as the special order, the consideration of bill of the House No. 543, to restore to the States lately in rebellion their full political rights, upon which Mr. RAYMOND was entitled to the floor.

Mr. RAYMOND. Mr. Speaker, I regard the action which this House may take upon the bill now before it as of very great importance. The bill embodies principles which touch very nearly the fundamental principles of our Government; and it proposes measures which must affect in a very serious manner the peace and welfare of the country. I venture to hope, sir, that every member of this House will bring to its consideration a mind unbiased by prejudice and uninfluenced by passion, and that he will act upon it with sole and exclusive reference to its probable effect upon the prosperity and welfare of our common country. I know how difficult it is to withstand the influence of habit and association, personal and political, upon our action here; but if there ever was an occasion when it was incumbent upon each one of us to do all in our power thus to emancipate ourselves from undue and improper influences, I think, sir, that occasion is offered by the bill which now awaits our action.

When this Congress met, sir, now seven months ago, the war against the rebellion had been closed for half a year. The President of the United States, exercising what he believed to be his rightful authority as the chief Executive of the nation and Commander-in-Chief of its armies, had set in motion the machinery of government in the States where it had been suspended by rebellion, had appointed provisional governors, by whom, under his authority, conventions and Legislatures were summoned, elections were held, and those governors, Legislatures, and conventions took steps to bring the States back to their normal condition, so far as exercising the power of self-government was concerned. When we met in December last but little remained to be done to complete the work of restoration. The temper of the people in the southern States was that of submission and loyal acquiescence in the results of the war. All that remained was to heal the wounds the war had made and embody in proper form the principles it had established. At an early day of the session, as early as was proper and convenient, I stated, in the course of some remarks on the general subject, what I thought Congress ought to do, the specific action it ought to take, to complete the work of restoration; and with the leave of the House, as it is very brief, I will read the paragraph in which that statement was embodied:

"In the first place, I think we ought to accept the present status of the southern States, and regard them as having resumed, under the President's guidance and action, their functions of self-government in the Union.

"In the second place, I think this House should decide on the admission of Representatives by districts, admitting none but loyal men who can take the oath we may prescribe, and holding all others as disqualified; the Senate acting, at its discretion, in the same way in regard to representatives of States.

"I think, in the third place, we should provide by law for giving to the freedmen of the South all the rights of citizens in courts of law and elsewhere.

"In the fourth place, I would exclude from Federal office the leading actors in the conspiracy which led to the rebellion in every State.

"In the fifth place, I would make such amendments to the Constitution as may seem wise to Congress and the States, acting freely and without coercion.

"And sixth, I would take such measures and precautions by the disposition of military forces as will preserve order and prevent the overthrow, by usurpation or otherwise, in any State, of its republican form of government."

Nearly all of these points have been covered by the action which Congress has already taken. The status of the southern States has been substantially recognized by both Houses in their action and their recommendations. No one in either House proposes to change or disturb it. We have provided, not only by law, but by an amendment of the Constitution, for giving to the freedman of the South all the rights of citizens in the courts of law and elsewhere and for protecting him in their enjoyment. We have also provided by an amendment of the Constitution for excluding from office the leading actors in the rebellion. We have adopted such other amendments to the Constitution as seemed to us wise and essential, and we have now just passed a resolution directing them to be submitted to the several States for their ratification.

Congress adopted those amendments because it believed they ought to form a part of the Constitution, and I voted for them for that reason, and for that reason alone. I discussed them on their merits. I declined to discuss them otherwise. I voted for them on their merits, and not as part and parcel of any scheme of reconstruction or restoration, except to this extent: that I believed their adoption here would promote the tranquillity of the country, and that their embodiment in the Constitution would restore harmony to the Union and secure the future safety of the Republic. Those amendments have now gone to the several States, and if adopted by three fourths of all the States—by three fourths of the thirty-six States that compose this Union—they will become valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution of the United States. I deem it highly important that these amendments should be acted upon in all the States, by Legislatures chosen by the people with reference to this very subject. I do not hold that this is necessary to their validity; but I do think that justice to the people, justice to the country, and a true and wise regard for the requirements and spirit of the Constitution demand that it should be submitted to Legislatures not elected without reference to it, but to Legislatures chosen by the people for the express purpose of acting upon it. We must remember that we who have voted upon these amendments were elected to Congress without the slightest reference to the important question upon which we were thus called to act. The question of amending the Constitution was not then before the public. The people have had no opportunity to act upon it, either directly or indirectly. It does not seem just that important amendments to the Constitution should be proposed by a Congress and ratified by Legislatures while not a member of either was elected with any reference whatever to that subject. Certainly, great moral force would be given to the amendment if it were adopted by members chosen by the people with special reference to this point.

But, sir, in my previous remarks, from which I have already quoted, I insisted that the States, in voting upon these amendments, should "act freely and without coercion." I regard that, sir, as of vital importance. Amendments to the Constitution forced upon an unwilling people will never command the respect essential to their full validity. They will always be regarded as badges of injustice, as permanent and indelible marks of inferiority, and whatever acquiescence they may command will be reluctant and constrained, not the cheerful obedience which a free people will always yield to constitutions and laws they have freely made. This bill, sir, violates that fundamental condition. It seeks to coerce the States lately in rebellion into the ratification of these amendments. It denies them representation unless they do ratify them. The first section of the bill, after reciting the amendments adopted by Congress, enacts—

"That whenever the above-recited amendment shall have become part of the Constitution of the United States, and any State lately in insurrection shall have ratified the same, and shall have modified its constitution and laws in conformity therewith, the Senators and Representatives from such States, if found duly elected and qualified, may, after having taken the required oaths of office, be admitted into Congress as such."

Here are three things required as conditions without which no southern State shall be admitted to representation in Congress: first, the above-recited amendment must first "have become part of the Constitution of the United States"—that is to say, it must first have been ratified by three fourths of all the States; second, it must be ratified by each of the States lately in rebellion seeking representation; and third, that State must have "modified its constitution and laws in conformity therewith." Now, sir, the first of these conditions is not within control of the States upon which they are imposed. Suppose every southern State should ratify these amendments and enough northern States should refuse to defeat them; must southern States be denied representation for the default of others? This provision, sir, puts it in the power of the New England States with three others to exclude the southern States from representation forever. I am sure Congress can never sanction so gross a wrong.

But my objection to this bill goes further than this. I hold that we have no right, no power, under the Constitution of the United States to impose such conditions of representation at all. We sit here as a Congress to exercise, not unlimited powers, but only such powers as are delegated to us by the Constitution of the United States. We have none of the sovereignty, the omnipotence, that is claimed for the Parliament of England. It is one of the distinctive features of our Government that we live under a written Constitution, by which the powers conferred upon the Government and upon each of its departments are expressly defined. All the power we have comes by express grant; it is conferred upon us by the Constitution. The Constitution says Congress shall have power to do certain things, which are enumerated and distinctly set forth, and then it is expressly declared that the powers not delegated are "reserved to the States or to the people thereof." We can, therefore, do nothing which the Constitution does not empower us to do, either in express terms or by necessary implication from the terms employed.

Now, if I am right in this, I ask any one here to point me to the clause of the Constitution which confers upon Congress a right to say that Representatives from any State shall not be received into Congress until that State shall perform certain acts, make certain laws, or do certain things which we may dictate. Where is it in the Constitution? Is it embodied in any article? Is it implied in any clause, either directly or indirectly? I cannot find it. On the contrary, I find an express declaration in the article which empowers Congress to propose amendments to the Constitution, an explicit provision, that "no State shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate without its own consent," even by an amendment of the Constitution. This bill proposes to deprive States of such equal suffrage by a law. It proposes to do by enacting a law what Congress and the States together cannot do by amending the Constitution. I must maintain, until I am shown to the contrary, that we have no power under the Constitution of the United States to pass such a bill as this, or to enforce its provisions if it should become a law.

I am told, however, that the law of conquest is higher than the Constitution, and that we may, under that law, exercise over these States the rights of conquerors and dictate to them such terms as we please. I have at previous stages of this discussion, or of the discussion of this general subject, so fully expressed my opinion upon this point, and my reasons for it, that I will not enter into that argument again. In my judgment the war just closed was a war against rebellion. I hold that while it crushed the rebellion it did not impair, to any degree or extent, the validity, force, or binding authority of the Constitution of the United States, or the rights, duties, or obligations of the States under that Constitution. On the contrary, it reaffirmed and reestablished the authority of the Constitution in all its fullness over all the States and over every department of the Government of the United States. That Constitution is to-day for us, for Congress, for the President, for every State, and for every Legislature and for every court in every State, the "supreme law of the land." We have crushed the rebellion which disputed its sovereign authority, but we thereby only confirmed and reestablished its supremacy. We have achieved no conquest over that, and no law of conquest touches that in any particular. We are bound by its provisions, we are restricted by its prohibitions, now precisely as we were before the war.

I am told, furthermore, that the law of necessity requires us to impose these conditions upon the admission of representatives from the States lately in insurrection, and that the law of necessity supersedes all other laws. Certainly not the law of military necessity. No one pretends that any military necessity now exists. I am not prepared to concede that we have ever set aside the Constitution of the United States, even under the military necessity which the war was supposed to create. In my judgment the Constitution furnished us with power to carry the country through the war; and we have not violated its provisions; we have exercised no power not included within its permissions, even in the contest from which we have just emerged. But the war is over. Military necessity no longer exists. Is it, then, a matter of political necessity that we should exercise the power asserted in this bill? I am told that unless we do the South will gain by votes what it lost by arms. The joint committee of fifteen, in their report, assert that if members from the southern States be admitted into Congress the rebels will gain by votes on its floor, by legislative action, by taking part in the Government, what they lost on the field of battle.

Now, sir, I will not stop to remind Congress of what Congress seems much disposed to forget, that this is a Government of the people; that the people of the whole country and all the States of the Union are not only entitled but are bound by solemn obligations to take part in that Government; and that whatever the people gain by votes they gain legitimately and in accordance both with the Constitution and the principles that lie at the foundation of our Government. But, not dwelling upon this point, I deny the existence of any such danger. The apprehension is plausible perhaps. Judging from the past we may naturally fear that the political action of the South may again be hostile to the Government, but a very little reflection will show how small is the peril which is thus involved.

There was a time when there was reason to fear the ascendancy of the South in the government of the nation. There was a time when the South, as a separate section with institutions hostile to the general good, seemed likely to grasp the sovereignty of the nation and wield it with exclusive regard to its own ambition and its own interest. That time of real danger was when the Missouri compromise was repealed, and Kansas was likely to come into the Union as a slave State. If she had thus come in the number of free and slave States would have been equal. But then the South had elements of political power which made her formidable. She had wealth. She monopolized the best cotton of the world. Her cotton, sugar, rice, and tobacco swelled the vast volume of our commerce and regulated our exchanges with Europe. She had for political leaders men of great intellects, of iron will, of towering ambition, men fit to struggle for empire, and able to infuse their own bold and audacious tempers into the great mass of the southern people over whom their influence was absolute and unbounded. She had a numerous population, active, aspiring, and bold—a generation of young men trained in the school of Calhoun and McDuffie, nursed in the doctrine of State rights and State sovereignty, taught to believe in the right of secession, and educated in the faith that the South was the victim of northern tyranny.

The South had the institution of slavery, an institution powerful beyond conception, as a bond of union to the southern States. Menaced and assailed by the North, threatened with destruction from every quarter, obnoxious to the moral sentiment of the civilized world, slavery gave the South, as a political power, unity of action, compactness, force, energy, and influence in the national councils such as no other single instrumentality ever gave to any section of this country from the beginning of its history. It gave her, too, an alliance with the Democratic party of the northern States, a party powerful always by its traditions and its popular sympathies; powerful by the great men who had distinguished and controlled it; by what it had done and by what it had attempted. Slavery enabled the South to make an alliance offensive and defensive with this Democratic party of the northern States, and the two together wielded the power of the nation for a long series of years, and but for the overweening ambition of slavery would have continued to wield it for many years to come. Then, indeed, the southern States were formidable; then we had reason to fear their permanent ascendancy; the country felt the danger, and the people came up to the rescue. It was then, when that danger became imminent, when it pressed itself upon the feelings, attention, and fears of the whole nation; it was then the Republican party was formed and checked this aggression upon the freedom and liberties of the Republic. That party was formed in 1856, and it fulfilled its mission; it triumphed and checked the aggression of slavery. It turned back in its career of triumph, not only the institution of slavery, but the Democratic party, which had become its ally. It relieved the nation from the exacting sway which had been fastened upon it, and restored our country to the position where it could again exercise the rights of a free and independent people.

How is it at the present time? Has the South this power now? Suppose we assume that the old division still exists, that there are still two political sections in our country, one slave, the other free, still struggling for ascendancy; what are their relative numbers and strength? The South has been diminishing, while the North has been increasing. New States have been added to the North year by year, until now, while the southern States—while the slave States, if you choose so to designate them still—the former slave States, even counting among them Maryland, Kentucky, and Delaware, number but fourteen, the free States number twenty-two. In 1850, after California had been admitted, the free States were sixteen and the slave States fifteen in number. If this old division still existed, the slave States would have twenty-eight members of the United States Senate, while we of the North would have forty-four. In this House they would have seventy-three, while we should have one hundred and sixty-nine. Thus we should have more than two to one in this branch of the national Legislature. But I am told the South is to have an augmented strength here in consequence of an increased representation growing out of the emancipation of the slaves in the southern States. Well, sir, this is worth consideration. I am very glad that we have adopted a constitutional amendment which will remedy that inequality; for it is unquestionably an inequality, though it is one that has existed from the very foundation of our Government. But, sir, the southern States previous to the war had four million slaves, three fifths of whom were represented on this floor; that is to say, they were entitled to the full representation of their white population and of two million four hundred thousand more. The slaves of the South thus gave the South twenty additional members, taking one hundred and twenty thousand as the ratio of representation. How is it now? I take it to be universally admitted that the war has proved far more fatal to the colored population of the southern States than to the whites. The testimony of all who are familiar with the statistics of mortality during the war is to the effect that at least one fifth of the negroes of the southern States have perished during the rebellion. Many of those most familiar with the subject estimate the ratio at a still higher figure. General Grant, I believe, thinks that one fourth of all the negroes who were in the South at the opening of the war have perished. Governor Aiken, of South Carolina, testifies, from his personal knowledge, that of his own slaves, who were probably as well treated and as much protected as any portion of the southern people, more than one fourth have perished during the struggle from which the nation has just emerged; and Jefferson Davis, I see from the public prints, concedes that one million of the slaves, one fourth of the whole, have probably disappeared. I think it, therefore, a reasonable estimate to assume that one fifth of the four million slaves who were in the South when the war broke out are there no longer. This would leave three million two hundred thousand as the present aggregate of the freed slaves of the southern States, and they are to be represented man for man if this amendment to the Constitution be not adopted. That will give them, at the same ratio of representation, as any gentleman will ascertain by making the calculation, twenty-six members, where they before had twenty. The number of their Representatives, therefore, from this single source of power, is to be increased by the addition of precisely six. They will have six more members on this floor than they would have had if all their slaves had lived, and the three fifths ratio of representation had been preserved.

I do not think, sir, that this is very formidable. I do not think we need apprehend that, by the addition of those six members, the southern States will gain by votes what they have lost by arms. We must consider, too, that they have lost, by deaths among their white population, almost as largely—far more largely in proportion than the North. Their wealth has disappeared. They are utterly without resources. There is not a dollar in their treasuries. They have not a gun nor a bayonet nor a round of ammunition from one extremity of their land to the other. They have none of the elements of aggression. They have no power to make themselves formidable. They have lost all political influence and standing. Their leaders, who gave direction and power to their political councils, have disappeared before the breath of the terrible whirlwind which they themselves evoked. Their young men, who, trained in the school of secession, were ready and ripe for the contest, lie beneath the soil which they deluged with blood. Slavery, the great bond which kept them together, has disappeared before the same dreadful tempest. They have no longer that great bond and pledge of united action. Their industry is utterly disorganized; their lands lie waste and untilled; their railroads are torn up; the waters of their rivers overflow their lands and destroy the crops which alone can give them even the means of living. There is no longer reason or justice in speaking of the South as a section; as having separate interests or separate aspirations or the power to act as a unit for any special end. That which gave it power to act compactly has disappeared. It has lost, too, the power of allying itself with any party in the northern States, for in losing its unity it has lost everything that made such an alliance desirable or possible. And even if it should attempt such a union for purposes hostile to the general good, no party in the North would dare for a moment to give it countenance or support; for the moment that any party of the North should unite with those of the South who should aim at such a thing, that party would go down before the wrath of the northern people, as every party has done hitherto that lent its aid to designs hostile to the liberties of the Republic.

Now, sir, while they in that section are thus losing power constantly, having no resources from which to supply it, we of the North, on the contrary, are constantly augmenting our power by the growth of population; by immigration from the countries of the Old World; by augmenting wealth; by increasing activity and enterprise; by advancing culture; by everything that gives dignity and force and power to great communities of men. State after State comes into this Union, every one free and associated in sentiment, sympathy, and interest with the northern section of this great nation. Shall we, then, to-day fear the South? We have never feared it before. We did not fear it in the days of its power. We met it when the danger was imminent and apparent. We beat it here on this floor when it was ten times as powerful as it can be again within the next fifty years. And when, full of rage and unholy ambition, it fled discomfited from this Hall and rushed to the field of battle, we beat it there. Yet gentlemen stand here to-day saying that unless we have "guarantees" the existence of the nation will again be imperiled and the traitors and rebels of the South will "gain by votes what they failed to secure by arms!"

Sir, I cannot help feeling that this appeal to the fears of the nation savors somewhat of pusillanimity. I would far rather, sir, look in other quarters for the motives that are to guide my action. I sympathize rather with John Quincy Adams when years ago he replied to appeals of a kindred nature, "The Government of the United States never takes counsel of its fears; it consults only its courage and its hopes." Why may we not to-day take the same high ground, do what we deem to be wise and just and for the good of the nation, without being deterred by the paltry appeals—I will not call them paltry, for their motive may be good—by the unjust, the unfounded appeals which are made to our apprehensions lest we should lose that authority and control which we have never failed to hold when it was a question of votes, and which we have gathered again to ourselves and fastened here forever by the final appeal of differing nations, the field of battle?

The South gain what it has lost by arms! What did it seek by its appeal to arms? Its independence. It sought to overthrow the supremacy of the Government. Is it seeking that now? Is there any reason to suppose that the southern people dream of seeking it again? And is there the faintest shadow of discernible danger that, if they should seek it, they could ever under any circumstances accomplish it? Does any man here or elsewhere believe they can ever again make an appeal to arms, that they can ever again attempt to overthrow this Government under circumstances one half as favorable as those which surrounded the trial which has just been closed? They grow in strength, you say; they increase in wealth and population. Ay, sir, and for every step they take in that direction we stride leagues ahead of them. Moreover, sir, this fear, this appeal to apprehension, rests wholly on the assumption that if their Representatives do come again into these Halls they will come as rebels. We are constantly told that "the rebels" are seeking admission to Congress, and there is very great danger of their getting admission here, and then by alliance with other parties, seizing the power and wielding it against the public good; and the only way to prevent this catastrophe is to pass this bill for their exclusion. But, sir, the remedy is as futile as the apprehension is unfounded.

Every one knows that Congress can exclude them without this bill just as well as with it. This bill, if it becomes a law, can have no validity, no binding force. The Constitution gives to this House the right—absolute, unqualified—to admit all members whom it may judge to be duly elected, returned, and qualified. Pass this bill to-day, you may to-morrow, in spite of it, admit Representatives from every southern State if you see fit. The next Congress may repeal it as soon as it gets here. It is brutum fulmen. No man on this floor will contend that it will interfere with or obstruct the action of Congress one hour beyond the wish and will of Congress upon this subject of admitting members to seats upon this floor. Then what good can it possibly accomplish?

Another thing, sir. I know of none, except possibly the gentlemen who sit on the other political side of this House, who desire or would be willing to admit to seats here men who have been engaged in the rebellion. I do not know that our political opponents would desire this, though there is perhaps some reason for supposing that they hold the opinion that men should not be questioned as to their past conduct, but that they should be admitted to seats if they are loyal now. But whether this be so or not, I know no one else; I know no one who professes to belong to the Union party; I know no member of the political majority upon this floor who is in favor of admitting to a share of legislation here any man from any State who cannot take the test oath we have prescribed. That certainly is our position. And just as certainly is it the position of the President of the United States. It is common to attribute to him opinions on this point which seem to me wholly unwarranted. Both on this floor and through the public press it is asserted that his policy is to admit members from the southern States whether they can take the test oath we have prescribed or not. The President has neither said nor done anything to give a shadow or warrant for such assumptions. In all the language he has used he has always held that it was the absolute right of each House of Congress to judge of the qualifications of its members, to adopt such tests of loyalty as it chooses, and to exclude from its deliberations every man who cannot stand that test as disqualified.

Mr. WINFIELD. My colleague will allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. RAYMOND. Certainly.

Mr. WINFIELD. I ask my colleague whether he says there is any desire on this side of the House to introduce rebels upon this floor.

Mr. RAYMOND. I made no such assertion.

Mr. WINFIELD. I understood the gentleman to say that there are some reasons why he suspected a design of that kind. I had hoped that my colleague would go off the floor without a fling at this side.

Mr. RAYMOND. I did not intend to make any "fling," nor to attribute any improper designs to the opposite side of the House. I inferred that they might be less rigid than this side in judging of qualifications as based on past acts, because I was under the impression that they were not in favor of the test oath. Unless I am very much mistaken, gentlemen on the other side voted against it, and some of them, I am sure, favor its abolition. Does not that warrant me in saying or suspecting that they hold to the right of those States to be represented by any men they may send here? I am sure I did not travel beyond the record in what I said, nor did I mean to indulge in any sneer or fling. I trust I can discuss questions of this sort without descending to appeals of that kind; but if gentlemen on the other side, who are authorized to speak for the Democratic party, whether it be the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HARRIS] or the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] or the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] or any other, will say that they are in favor of maintaining the principle of that test oath and of excluding from this House every one who took any part voluntarily in the rebellion, I shall listen to them with very great pleasure.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from New York hold that because—

Mr. RAYMOND. I yield only for an answer; not for the purpose of being catechised.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I did not intend to catechise.

Mr. RAYMOND. If the gentleman has anything to say pertinent to the question I have put, I will yield.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I desire simply to say this: that because a person may be opposed to the test oath is not a reason in itself that he desires to have rebels on this floor. Supposing the Supreme Court, as it is intimated they have, should have come to the conclusion that the test oath, as it is called, is unconstitutional and void; is that evidence to this House or to the country or to the gentleman from New York that they desire to admit rebels on the floor of Congress? If that oath is in violation of the Constitution, and gentlemen on this side or that side see fit to oppose it on that ground, is that of itself any evidence that they desire to have rebels admitted to the floor of Congress? It seems to me not, and I therefore think the gentleman's argument is not sound or just, that even if individuals here are opposed to the test oath upon constitutional or other grounds, it is any evidence that they are in alliance with rebels or desire to ally themselves with them upon this floor or anywhere else.

Mr. RAYMOND. I have listened with attention to the argument of the gentleman. I shall allow it to pass without any attempt at reply, because I am not engaged in that particular discussion now. But I wish to ask him a question pertinent to the issue he has made, and shall be obliged if he will answer it. Is he personally, and so far as he knows are the members of the party with which he acts, in favor of admitting members who may come here from the States lately in insurrection, who voluntarily took part in the rebellion; or would he or they consider that fact as a disqualification for holding seats here?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I am not authorized to speak for those around me on this side of the House, but I have been willing to act with that gentleman, and I believe a majority of the Democrats here have been willing to act with him, in admitting the Representatives from the States by districts, considering their character as they present themselves and the character of their constituency. I believe that to be the feeling and opinion on this side of the House, so far as I have heard it expressed. In regard to the test oath, I frankly admit that I am as an individual in favor of its repeal, believing it to be unconstitutional and void.

Mr. RAYMOND. The gentleman has given quite as an explicit an answer as I expected from him.

Mr. MARSHALL. If the gentleman will yield—

Mr. RAYMOND. I do not yield at present. Mr. MARSHALL. I appeal to him to yield.

Mr. RAYMOND. Not yet. The gentleman from Wisconsin says that he is willing to act with me; but the question is, how far? I know that up to a certain point he is. For example, he is willing to act with me in favor of admitting Representatives by districts. Now, I want to know this: suppose a man presents himself here from a district in Tennessee, Georgia, Mississippi, or South Carolina, and is tested by this House as to his qualifications, and he is asked the question, under oath, "Did you take part in the rebellion; did you extend aid and comfort to it; did you make yourself by your voluntary action a responsible party to the rebellion?" and he says, "Yes, I did;" now, I would like to know if, assuming that in all other respects he is qualified to be a member here, the gentleman would vote for his admission or for his exclusion?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I will say for myself—and I hold no other man responsible for what I do say—that if any gentleman comes here elected by the people of any district of any southern State and has the requisite personal constitutional qualifications, I shall vote for his admission if I have the opportunity.

Mr. RAYMOND. Well, sir, the gentleman will excuse me for saying that that is an entire evasion of my question.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him if he would vote for the admission of any one coming from the southern States who has not the constitutional qualification as a member of Congress?

Mr. RAYMOND. I would not.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Then I would say to the gentleman more explicitly, that I would not either; but should any one come here having the qualifications which are required by the Constitution of the United States, (and I know no other test and would apply none other,) I would vote for his admission.

Mr. RAYMOND. The gentleman has not at all answered my question, and he is aware, I think, of that fact. Perhaps he did not intend or wish to answer it. If so I will not press it. But assuming that he has been trying to answer it, and has been unfortunate in his attempts, I again request him to say whether he would vote for the admission or exclusion of a member who had taken part in the rebellion, but who was in all other respects qualified.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I think I have answered the gentleman in the only manner it is possible. I can go on and state what qualifications a member should have. They are those prescribed in the Constitution and laws of the country. That test I would apply, and none other.

Mr. RAYMOND. The question is not what qualifications a man must have, but what, in the judgment of the gentleman, would disqualify a man from admission; whether the fact of having voluntarily participated in the rebellion would or would not, in his judgment, disqualify such a man from becoming a member of this Congress.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. If there is any constitutional authority to exclude him, then I would vote against his admission. If he has violated the laws of the country or the Constitution of the United States so far as to unfit him to be a Representative according to the Constitution and laws of the United States, then I would vote against him.

Mr. RAYMOND. Will the gentleman allow me to proceed a little further? Does the gentleman, or does he not, hold that voluntary participation in the rebellion is such a violation of the Constitution of the United States as would disqualify a man from membership?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I believe when a man has become infamous by the conviction of crime, that that does disqualify him unless he should have been fully and unconditionally pardoned.

Mr. RAYMOND. Then unless a man has been convicted by a court and jury of participation in the rebellion, the gentleman would not hold him disqualified. Is that his position?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I do not answer in that way. I answer that would be good evidence that he was unfit.

Mr. RAYMOND. His conviction?

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAYMOND. Suppose he was not convicted, but was known to the gentleman to have been a rebel.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. If it was testified to by some of the men on this floor, with the malignant spirit they have manifested here, I would not believe it. I think it should be properly proved to the House.

Mr. RAYMOND. Well, sir, as the gentleman evidently evades the question, I waive it. It is perhaps of little consequence. My own position upon that point—I will not say it is the opinion of the majority of this House, because I believe there is a difference of opinion among them upon that subject—but my own position and the position of the President, as I know from his public declaration, is this: that each House of Congress has the right to judge of the qualifications of the men who present themselves for seats as members. I do not mean that it has the right to dictate what those qualifications shall be; but it has the right to judge whether those men have the qualifications which are required by the Constitution of the United States. That right is absolute and exclusive, and is expressly conferred upon this House by the Constitution of the United States.

Now, sir, one of the qualifications absolutely requisite is loyalty; loyalty is an indispensable qualification to membership in this House. It is competent, nay it is necessary, for this House, therefore, to inquire whether a man is loyal or not before it admits him to membership. And it may inquire in any way that it sees fit, by prescribing a test oath or by taking testimony as to the fact. Now, sir, I hold that when a man presents himself here, submitting to that test, and is found qualified by that investigation, if he can take the oath we have prescribed, if he can abide any test of loyalty we may impose, then it is our duty to admit him if duly elected and returned to his seat in Congress. We have no right to say that his State, assuming that State to be in a loyal attitude, shall not have representation, and therefore to exclude him. We have no right to say that his State, though in a loyal attitude, though sustaining relations of true allegiance to the General Government, shall not be represented in the General Government except upon certain conditions, unless and until she passes certain laws and performs certain acts which we prescribe, and on that account to exclude him. We must exclude him, if we exclude him at all, because we deem him "disqualified." And while this is our duty, I hold it also to be for our interest, the interest of Congress and of the country. I believe it to be the true way to deal with this whole question, for by so doing we shall draw a line of clear and marked distinction between the loyal and disloyal men of the southern States; and we shall give an example, moreover, to those who remain disloyal as to what they must do to obtain admission here.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman—

Mr. RAYMOND. I decline to yield at present. I hold that it is not only our duty but our interest to admit loyal members from the southern States.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. RAYMOND. I decline to yield.

Mr. MARSHALL. I wish to say that the course of the gentleman is unfair to this side of the House.

Mr. RAYMOND. I submit to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSHALL] that it is a matter of personal discourtesy to persist in breaking in upon the argument of a member upon the floor when he has distinctly declared that he does not desire to be interrupted.

Mr. MARSHALL. Well, I repeat that the course of the gentleman—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. RAYMOND. I hold that it is our duty to set an example in this respect; to admit those who are qualified, if any, and to refuse to admit those who are disqualified, if any such present themselves. Suppose, for example, that two men present themselves here for admission, the one from Tennessee the other from Georgia. I name those States merely for illustration. One can take the oath we prescribe, the other cannot; the one presents himself from a State which stands in a loyal attitude and holds loyal relations to the Government, the other does not. Now, if we admit the one and exclude the other, we thereby declare what our purpose is and the principle upon which we act much more loudly and emphatically than we can possibly do in any other way.

Now that, I think, is what we should do. I have held from the beginning of the session that we should admit the members from Tennessee, because they are entirely loyal and can abide our test. They have had nothing to do with the rebellion, but have been thoroughly and actively loyal from the beginning of the war. And the testimony submitted to this House by the committee on reconstruction on the subject of Tennessee sustains the position I have taken as to the effect of such action. I will not detain the House by reading it, but I will state as the fact, which I can verify if desired by reference to the testimony, that every single witness who was examined by that committee, on being asked what in his opinion would be the effect of admitting members who were qualified and could take the oath, answered without hesitation that it would have a good effect, that it would encourage loyalty and discourage disloyalty, not only in Tennessee, but throughout the southern States. I think we ought to do that now; I think we ought to have done it at the beginning of the session, and the sooner we can repair our fault the better.

Now that I have finished what I had to say upon that particular point, I will with great pleasure listen to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MARSHALL.]

Mr. MARSHALL. I certainly intended no discourtesy to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] when I interrupted him a few moments since. A short time before that he had intimated that he had reason to believe that members on this side of the House were in favor of admitting rebels to seats on this floor as members of the House; and he said that he would permit any gentleman on this side to make his own statement upon that point. It was only in reply to that that I wished to call his attention, and that of the House, to the fact that some time ago, in a colloquy between one of my colleagues [Mr. KUYKENDALL] and myself, I said that I would not under any circumstances vote to admit any man to a seat on this floor whom I knew to be disloyal to the Government and to the Constitution; that I would not, for instance, vote to admit such men as Jefferson Davis, John C. Breckinridge, or any man who had deliberately aided in precipitating our country into all the horrors of civil war. I do not think that such men have rightfully any place here. I do not think that there is any gentleman on this side of the House who thinks or has been disposed to urge that any one should be admitted here at this time except those who can come here and conscientiously take the oath prescribed by the law as it now stands. We expect, of course, all to be governed by that as long as it remains on the statute-book as part of the law of the land.

We have held it to be an outrage to exclude men who were loyal to the Government, have risked their lives and all that is dear to them in the cause of the Union, and can take the oath prescribed by law, from seats upon this floor when they come here with evidence that they are elected as full and complete as that of any gentleman who has a seat here.

Now, in regard to the other point presented by the gentleman, I wish to say this: I do think, whether this test oath is held to be unconstitutional or not, that at some future time, and I hope at an early day, it will be proper, if not entirely to repeal, at least to modify that oath in such manner that if men who have been drawn into the rebellion, as thousands have been, but are now clearly shown to be true and honest men, faithful to the Union, loyal to the Constitution, and desiring and working for its preservation and perpetuity, when such men come here representing constituencies which are loyal, whatever may have been their errors in the past, if they come now with clean hands and loyal hearts, that they may be admitted to seats upon this floor. And I do not think that we should commit ourselves to the eternal disfranchisement of such men. It would be violative of every principle of sound statesmanship to do so. That, sir, is my position. I give it for no one else. I do not insist, nor do I think any member on this side of the House insists at this time, that any one has the right to come here and demand admission as a member of this House who does not come according to the law as it stands upon the statute-book. When they do so come, with all the qualifications prescribed by law, I say that it is an outrage upon their rights and a violation of every principle of justice and of the Constitution we have sworn to support to exclude them from seats upon this floor, to which, as I believe, they are as much entitled as the gentleman from New York or myself.

Mr. RAYMOND. I have nothing to say against that position. I share the gentleman's hopes and to a considerable extent the opinions he has just expressed. I have at all times been ready and willing to admit the fact, and I have considered it a matter upon which we may congratulate the country, that a considerable portion, at all events, of those who act with the Democratic party, have shown a disposition to be just and fair in their action upon this question. I will not enter upon any consideration of exceptions to this if any could be found. I am glad to see members of the Democratic party upon this floor and elsewhere giving the Administration their support in what I believe to be a just and proper way of healing the wounds of war and adjusting the difficulties which still divide one section in sentiment and in political action from the other.

I desire now to resume the line of my argument; and I advertise gentlemen in season, so that they may reflect upon the propriety of granting or refusing my request, that I shall be under the necessity of asking for an extension of my time. My opposition to this bill rests mainly upon this fact, that it prescribes conditions precedent to the admission of Representatives here which we have no right to prescribe under the Constitution of the United States. The bill asserts, as the principle on which it rests—it establishes as a principle and precedent this position—that Congress may, in its discretion, exclude any State from being represented, for a longer or shorter time, until that State shall comply with such conditions as Congress itself may dictate. That, sir, perhaps, may be deemed a broad statement of the general principle involved in this bill, but I see not how it can be narrowed in justice to the bill itself. We say to these States lately in insurrection, not, you must resume your attitude of loyalty; not, you must obey the laws and support the Constitution of the United States; not, you must send men here who have not been traitors; no, sir, we say to those States, recognizing them all the time as States, you shall not have Representatives upon this floor until you pass certain acts, until you do certain things, until you ratify certain amendments to the Constitution and embody the principles of those amendments in your own constitutions and laws. Now, sir, we are not acting in this matter for ourselves alone; we are not acting with especial reference to this particular year of our history; we are acting for posterity; we are laying down principles of which our successors may hereafter avail themselves. We prescribe certain conditions, dictate certain acts as the conditions precedent of representation. If we may prescribe these, we may prescribe others. We assert our own discretion as the only rule of our action in this respect.

Now, assume for a moment that your fears prove just, and that rebels and rebel sympathizers take possession of Congress within one, three, or five years from the present time. I say the very principle you establish by the enactment of this bill may be cited by them as a precedent, if they wish to take such action, for declaring to Massachusetts, Vermont, and New York that their Representatives shall not be admitted until those States shall pass acts which that Congress may prescribe.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Does the gentleman from New York mean to say that South Carolina and New York stand on the same footing in this respect?

Mr. RAYMOND. I see no difference in principle, none at all. You deny to South Carolina to-day the right to representation upon this floor because she has been in rebellion. What is to hinder the next Congress, if it should be of a different complexion, from denying the right to Massachusetts because she has not been in rebellion?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Allow me a word.

Mr. RAYMOND. Excuse me a moment. If the House is willing to extend my time I will yield cheerfully; otherwise I must proceed.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, we will extend your time.

Mr. RAYMOND. Then I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I merely want to say that there are some things so apparent that they do not need argument, and one of them is the difference between a State that has been in rebellion and a State that has not been in rebellion. No argument is required to show that the judgment of the country may wisely take precautions against people who have been in rebellion. It would be a monstrous usurpation, which nobody could support, for those who have been in rebellion to undertake to exercise the same rights as those who had not been in rebellion.

Mr. BINGHAM obtained the floor and said: I have no desire to cut off the gentleman from New York from an opportunity of concluding his speech. I hope it will be the pleasure of the House to extend his time, and I ask that it be extended.

Mr. WENTWORTH. If he will only let the gentlemen on the opposite side of the House speak out, he shall have the whole afternoon.

There being no objection made, Mr. RAYMOND's time was extended.

Mr. RAYMOND. I have no objection to a colloquy of that kind. I think it perhaps the best way to get at the truth. I am indebted to the House for its courtesy, though I am very much afraid I shall abuse it.

The gentleman from Massachusetts endeavors to escape from the specific point I made by taking refuge in general sentiments and declarations. He says there is such a difference between a State that has been and one that has not been in rebellion as to preclude all argument on the subject. He would draw the inference that we have a right to do with the one what we please, while with the other we can do only what the Constitution prescribes. I say that, while wide differences do unquestionably exist between them in very many most important respects, in their relations to the Constitution and in our relations to them under the Constitution they stand on exactly the same footing. I say that the powers conferred upon us under the Constitution with reference to one State must be exercised with regard to any other State, and that no other powers can be exercised rightfully, justly, and in accordance with the Constitution of the United States. I take issue, though I do not care to argue the question, with those who take refuge in the fact that a State has done wrong, has been in rebellion, has waged war upon the Government, as an excuse or as a reason for violating the Constitution themselves in dealing with that State. We are acting under an oath to obey, defend, and protect the Constitution of the United States. I will not judge the consciences of other men; but I do not feel at liberty to do anything toward South Carolina and Georgia which the Constitution does not authorize me to do toward other States in the Union—I mean by denying them rights in the Government which the Constitution in express terms confers upon them.

I admit that we have a right to take precautions and to secure ourselves against future rebellion; but we must do it in accordance with the Constitution. We cannot claim unlimited discretion. And my great objection to this bill is, that it establishes a principle, so far as our action can establish a principle, of which those holding secession principles, or principles opposite to us, may avail themselves to deal with us as we now propose to deal with them. There have been times in the history of the country when, if such a principle as this had been established by the previous action of Congress, the men in power would have applied it to Massachusetts, and you would have found men here, with all the power of the Government at their command, ready to deprive Massachusetts of representation upon this floor because that State did not and would not enforce the fugitive slave law.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The difference between the gentleman from New York and myself, undoubtedly, is that I do not admit that these eleven once States are for the present purposes of government to be recognized as States. The gentleman from New York in all his argument proceeds upon the idea that they are States clothed with full powers. Now, then, I ask him how he is to reconcile to himself, to his country, and to posterity the policy which he has supported, and which the President has inaugurated and maintained for the last twelve months, of dictating to South Carolina and other States terms and conditions precedent to their admission or to his recognition of their right to take part in the government of the country. I say that it would be the duty of the gentleman from New York—a duty from which I, myself, would not shrink, if I believed that South Carolina and Florida were States of this Union with all the same powers as Massachusetts and New York—to arraign the President of the United States for sending to those States such letters and telegrams as he has dispatched from time to time. I can excuse him only on the ground that they were not States of the Union with full powers, and that he dealt with them, outside of the Constitution to be sure, but in the extraordinary circumstances the country was placed, according to his own judgment, and that so far as he went in dictating to them terms and conditions, he did it; and that is all that Congress proposes to do. The power to be exercised is to be exercised not by the executive and judicial departments of the Government, but by the political department of the Government, Congress and the Executive combined.

Now, if it was right for the President twelve months ago to say that South Carolina and Florida would not be recognized by him unless they subjected themselves to certain rules and conditions prescribed by him, it is now right and proper for Congress and the President to prescribe other conditions.

Mr. RAYMOND. The gentleman from Massachusetts is a skillful strategist; he attempted to escape the point of my remarks first by taking refuge in generalities. Failing in that, he now seeks to divert my attention and that of the House from the point in issue by an attack upon the President.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I made no attack upon the President.

Mr. RAYMOND. Well, by raising an issue as to the policy of the President. I do not propose to follow him in that line of remark. It is not at all germane to this point. I should not hesitate, at the proper time, however, to assert that, in my opinion, the action of the President has been just and within the exercise of his constitutional authority from the beginning to the end, and to maintain that opinion by such arguments as I might. But at present I waive that. I think the gentleman states correctly the difference between himself and me. He says that I consider these States as States of the Union—as under the Constitution, entitled to the protection which it secures, and bound by all the obligations and duties which are imposed and guaranteed by its provisions. In that he is quite correct. I do so hold. He says he does not. Well, sir, I do not propose, at present, to argue the issue thus raised. I have argued it heretofore at greater length, I am afraid, than the patience of the House warranted me in doing. But I will merely say that the gentleman by this position comes in direct collision with the bill before the House.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not support the bill.

Mr. RAYMOND. Then, sir, I cannot press him upon that point. The gentleman is consistent. The bill recognizes these as States; it speaks of them in the title and in every section as "the States lately in insurrection." However, as the gentleman says he is not going to support the bill, I cannot hold him to that, and we must be content to differ. I believe these to be States in the Union. I believe that we have no right to treat them otherwise than as the Constitution warrants and authorizes us to treat them. In my judgment it does not warrant us in saying to them, "You must do certain things which we prescribe; you must ratify certain amendments to the Constitution and pass certain laws which we desire you to pass, or your Representatives shall not be admitted to this floor." I believe that principle strikes at the very foundation of our Government. For if there is anything fundamental in our Government it is the right, the absolute right of representation. Directly or indirectly it belongs to every State, and to all the people of every State. I cannot find any shadow of right for denying it, or for making it conditional, dependent upon their compliance with terms which we prescribe. Why, sir, it was out of the denial of that right that our independence grew. The great men who in the English Parliament vindicated the position of this country, and claimed in Parliament that we were right in our rebellion, based that opinion expressly upon the ground that the right of representation was denied to us, while we were subject to laws in the making of which we had no share. But I will not pursue that further. Mr. Burke declared this right to be the characteristic mark and badge of British freedom, and on the night when Parliament recognized our independence the Earl of Shelburne proclaimed that it had been won in vindication of a right which no free nation ever denied—the right of representation in the making of laws we are required to obey.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] allow me for a moment?

Mr. RAYMOND. I prefer not to yield now. I think these general principles will be admitted by nearly every one. I know that men are apt to think these principles may be waived or relaxed a little to suit particular emergencies. Surely, they are apt to say, no harm will come from a slight irregularity of action. True, the Constitution does not warrant this. But this is a peculiar state of things. The people are expecting something, and we must give them something of this kind. Now, I have never yet seen the time when I believed the people expected anything that was not just and right, or that they were ever inclined to exact any action not in consonance with the Constitution of the United States. But so many men have favorite theories of their own; every man has some peculiar ideas of what a Government should be, and he thinks that the political chaos which succeeds the war affords an opportunity for getting his ideas embodied in the Constitution, and thus make this the model Government he would have it.

I have never heard this general aspiration expressed more tersely or more frankly than it was by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] not now in his seat, in the remarks he made the other day in concluding the debate upon the proposed amendment to the Constitution. He then used the following language:

"In my youth, in my manhood, in my old age, I had fondly dreamed that when any fortunate chance should have broken up for awhile the foundation of our institutions, and released us from obligations the most tyrannical that ever man imposed in the name of freedom, that the intelligent, pure, and just men of this Republic, true to their professions and their consciences, would have so remodeled all our institutions as to have freed them from every vestige of human oppression, of inequality of rights, of the recognized degradation of the poor, and the superior caste of the rich. In short, that no distinction would be tolerated in this purified Republic but what arose from merit and conduct. This bright dream has vanished "like the baseless fabric of a vision." I find that we shall be obliged to be content with patching up the worst portions of the ancient edifice, and leaving it, in many of its parts, to be swept through by the tempests, the frosts, and the storms of despotism."

Now, sir, I take it there is scarcely a member on this floor who has not at some time or other indulged in dreams as high and hopeful as those thus expressed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] But I do not think that many of us, or that many of the people of this country, would concur with him in recognizing in the war through which we have just passed that "fortunate chance" which he seems to consider it, fortunate because it "broke up the foundations of our Government" and gave theorists an opportunity to try their experiments upon it. No, sir, the people of this country look upon this war as a calamity, one of the direst and most dreadful that God in His providence could send upon any nation; not unattended with compensations, it is true, for that same Providence that presides over the destinies of the human race, "out of evil still educing good," has given us many compensations for the terrible evils with which this war has been accompanied. It has given us, above all things, the opportunity which perhaps nothing else could ever have given us, of purifying this Republic from what was always the chief blot upon its escutcheon, and always poisoned its sources of liberty and power—the system of human slavery. But still the war itself was a calamity, a dire disaster, and if it had really broken up the foundations of our Government, if it had shaken in the least that grand temple of liberty which our fathers reared, it would have been tenfold the disaster that it really was.

But, sir, it did not. That temple still stands in all its grand and splendid beauty. We have not to "patch up the worst portions of the ancient edifice;" it was only those parts of the structure, its original defects, that were shaken and shattered by the storm. Not one of its corner-stones has been displaced. Not a single one of the grand arches has been in the least disturbed. Its towers still stand firm as the foundations of human freedom on which they rest. Nor, sir, will the people of this land agree with the gentleman in denouncing the Constitution of the United States for imposing "obligations the most tyrannical that ever man imposed in the name of freedom." That Constitution was the work of the noblest, purest patriots that ever adorned the annals of any age. It has done more to establish free government, to preserve and perpetuate the principles of human freedom, than any instrument ever framed, or any form of government ever established by the hand of man. Those who framed it did not attempt impossibilities. They did not sacrifice real good within their reach to dreams of distant perfection that was beyond their reach. Doubtless they, like other men of lofty spirit and noble aspiration, had their visions, their high ideals of a pure and perfect commonwealth, but they were too wise and too practical in their wisdom to yield themselves to such false though fair illusions. Alas! sir, how often have such dreams as have beguiled the gentleman from Pennsylvania filled the hearts and disappointed the hopes of noble spirits in all ages of the world! Every nation has had experience of their futility. Cromwell, in England, aimed to establish a model republic, and under his mighty sway the grand soul of the sightless Milton beheld, in lofty vision, a commonwealth arise which should more than realize the hopes and aspirations of the noblest spirits of the ancient and the modern world. With unrestricted power he forced reforms beyond the line where they could command the sympathy of the nation, and a reaction followed which, when Cromwell's head was beneath the sod, swept away the model republic which he had founded, and gave place to corruption such as England, in all her history, had never seen before.

The leaders of the French Revolution aspired to establish a model republic. They, too, had their visions and their dreams, brighter, brighter far, than the New Atlantis of Bacon or the Utopia of Sir Thomas More. Nowhere, sir, on the page of history or of literature will you find nobler sentiments, higher aspirations, grander reaches after political perfection than you will find in the writings of Robespierre, of St. Just, of Camille Desmoulins, and others among the great leading spirits of the French Revolution. They, too, aimed at the loftiest ideas of political perfection. Perfect justice, perfect truth, nothing short of absolute and entire perfection, was to bear unrestricted sway in the realm of their creation. Inequality of rights and of condition, all distinctions of rich and poor, were to disappear forever, and nothing was to have toleration for an hour but what arose from merit and conduct. But alas! sir, that bright dream, too, vanished "like the baseless fabric of a vision." That republic sank in a sea of blood, and out of that sea rose the red right hand of remorseless power which clutched all the rights of the people in its grasp and plunged France into a tyranny tenfold worse than she had ever felt before.

This, sir, is too often the sad consummation of attempts to enforce reforms upon an age and a people that are not ready for them. Model republics, noble and perfect commonwealths, where no wrong shall find toleration and no man lack justice, are the object of all good men's desires. But they are not let down by miracle from the vault of heaven. They spring not up like the prophet's gourd, in a single night, or if they do, like that prophet's gourd they wither and die with the first touch of the morning light. They come not on the heels of war. They can never be the birth of passion, they can only be the steady growth of time and the patient efforts of the good and wise. War may sweep away obstacles that obstruct their growth, as war with us has swept away human slavery, which is always and everywhere the foe of everything in character and society that is noble, just, and wise. And war may warm the soil swept by its bloody breath, so that seeds of reform shall the sooner spring up and ripen to maturity. We hear much said in glorification of men who are, in ideas and aspirations, in advance of their age. They are considered the prophets and the leaders of humanity; and so they are. But they are not the statesmen, the workmen, the leaders of their immediate time. They are not the practical men who bring to pass the glories they predict. I have found, sir, in my experience and observation, that, so far as practical results are concerned, it is just about as unwise for a man to be ahead of the age in which he lives as to be behind it. It is like a general marching a mile ahead of the brigade or the corps that he commands. He might just as well be a mile in its rear.

No, sir; to be useful to our age we must live with it, walk by its sides, sympathize with its wants, feel its necessities, bear its burdens, share its prejudices, or at least tolerate them, use the elements of power that belong to it, and not live in bright ideals of the future or dwell solely on the glories of the far advance. Work with the men of your day, and you will work to their best advantage, and will do all that man can do to secure and hasten the advent of that brighter time which is the goal and the guerdon of all our hopes. These reforms are growths, not mechanical creations. You cannot make a perfect Government as you would make a machine. Political institutions obey the laws of growth, and cannot be forced to follow any other laws. You must plant the seed and await its gradual ripening to maturity—"first the blade, then the ear; after that the full corn in the ear." Let not the gentleman from Pennsylvania then despair of the advancement, the purification, and perfection of our Republic. He has borne his part in the grand strife by which its advent is made possible. His eyes, now dimmed with honorable age and with long watching for the day which he so longs to see, may not witness its full meridian; but they have seen its dawning; and he may rest assured that the work he has so well commenced will not be left undone.

But let him not be too impatient to force it on, or he may turn the dial backward and ruin all. As to the specific reforms of which we are speaking, I believe the day will soon come when there will be no distinction of rights, civil or political, on the ground of color. That distinction grew out of slavery. In the early days of the Republic, before slavery had become the gigantic power it afterward grew to be, there was no such distinction of color so far as suffrage was concerned. It was the fruit of slavery, and it received its death-blow when slavery perished. The abolition of slavery swept away the very foundation of that cruel prejudice, and just as soon as the public mind, the mind and thought of those most directly concerned in the solution of this question, comes to realize this fact and is left free to weigh its meaning, just so soon will the great reform begin. I have no doubt that the people of the southern States will find it to be greatly to their interest in due time, in a very short time unless diverted from its consideration by hostile pressure from without, to establish political suffrage and civil rights on other foundations than those of color, and to do all we think necessary to perfect our republican institutions.

But by pressing such reforms before the summer has prepared the soil, we simply insure their being nipped by untimely frosts. By forcing them upon the people of other States, in advance of that public sentiment by which they can be sustained, we provoke hostilities which will outlive their cause and postpone for years, perhaps for generations, the very reforms we seek to promote. They must spring from another soil and be cherished by other culture. They must come from culture of the public conscience, from education, from experience of life, and that wise regard for the rights of others which the full and free enjoyment of our own never fails to teach. It is, and always must be, for the interest, the peace, the comfort, the prosperity, the safety, even, of the people in the southern States to give to all who live in the midst of their society all the rights and privileges to which, by virtue of their common humanity, they are entitled. We may safely trust to the influence of this all-pervading, ever-waking principle for the reforms which the South may need. The less we meddle with the operation of this law of social and political growth the more rapidly will it work out its own results. We may aid its development and stimulate its growth by promoting harmony of interest and of feeling between the two races thus brought face to face. But if we take such steps as shall tend to plant distrust between them and array them in hostility to each other, we shall only postpone, and perhaps defeat altogether, the consummation we so much desire.

But, sir, I will not follow this train of thought any further. I deem it unwise in policy, as well as unjustified by any just theories of the status of the southern States or of the effect of the rebellion, to attempt the "reconstruction" of our Government from its foundations. I believe the President takes a far wiser view of our interests and necessities when he seeks the "restoration" of our Union to its old integrity, and of our Government to its ancient normal operation under the Constitution of the United States. Our fathers laid the corner-stone of our institutions on the great principle of self-government. They held that all who are subjects of law should have a voice directly or indirectly in making the law. They held that the consent of the governed was the only just source of the power of rulers—not under some circumstances but under all. They did not believe Great Britain had a right to impose taxes upon two million subjects who were not represented in her Parliament, and they rebelled because they were thus ruled. They held that rebellion to be just. They earned praise and eternal fame, and won their independence and a national existence by that rebellion. Do you believe, sir, they would have deemed it right for the Government of the United States to make laws for eight millions of their people who were to obey those laws and have no voice in making them? Is that in harmony with our system? Is it not an open, flagrant repudiation of the only principle on which our Government rests? You tell me it is temporary, conditional. I care not. It asserts a right which cannot exist an hour without violating the fundamental principle of our institutions. You tell me these eight millions have forfeited their rights; that they have ceased to be States; that they are conquered provinces, subject only to the laws of war. I do not believe a word of it. The theory has no warrant in our Constitution or in the theory of our Government.

But I waive all that. If I were to grant it all it would make no difference in my action on this question. If we had the power asserted in all its plenitude I would not use it, because I do not believe it would be for the interest of the country that it should be used. I say with Edmund Burke, in his great speech in the English Parliament in 1775, on "conciliation with America"—which, by the way, I think is better adapted to the state of our public affairs at the present moment than nine tenths of those made on this floor, my own included—"It is not what a lawyer tells me I may do; it is what humanity, justice, and reason tell me I ought to do. The question is not with me whether we have the right to make our people miserable, but whether it is not our interest to make them happy." We are not seeking the settlement of a case in a county court; we are seeking the tranquillity of an imperial republic. We are aiming at the loftiest and highest results which it is permitted to man to aspire to anywhere or at any time—the peace, order, strength, prosperity, and power of America and the welfare of the human race. So that be wisely and conscientiously sought, I care not for technicalities.

I say that, in my judgment, the interest of this nation, the interest of every State in this Union, the interest of every man in every State of this Union demands that we shall consider this question upon a different basis, a different footing altogether. That interest demands we shall treat this question as we have treated all others hitherto, on the basis of the principles which lie at the foundation of our Government, with a wise regard to the impulses and weaknesses of human nature and a steady reference to the circumstances and general character and condition of those with whom we have to deal. You tell me these men are not fit to share in the Government; that they are sullen, resentful, defiant; that they still cling to the right of secession. Grant it. How are we to make them better fitted? Will coercion, will exclusion do it? Will they change their opinions because we refuse them representation? Will they love us with all their hearts because we deny them all participation in our and their affairs? Will they become converts to our principles because we deny their right to hold any others? Will they deem us models of courage because we brand their dead sons who perished in their cause as cowards, and denounce as felony the courage and devotion which led them to death? We can know little of human nature if we dream of such results.

You admit that during the first six months after their surrender their demeanor was unimpeachable. You say they have changed and become defiant, and you attribute this change to the leniency they received at the hands of the President. Are you quite sure you have hit the right reason? Is it not barely possible that your own action may have had something to do with this alleged change of the public mind in the southern States? I think I shall not be contradicted in point of fact when I say that during the summer of last year, from the time the rebels laid down their arms until the meeting of Congress, the feeling of the southern States toward the national Government was one of submission, of acquiescence, and of readiness to renew, in sincerity and in truth, their allegiance to the Constitution and Government of the United States. Now, what, sir, has changed that temper, so far as it has been changed at all?

I think there is fair reason for believing that, when Congress assumed a hostile attitude, when it began to declare that the people of the South were not fit to take part in the Government, that they had forfeited all their rights and could not be admitted to representation, that they were conquered subjects, and fellow-citizens no longer; when we began to give currency to hostile and mischievous reports from the South, magnifying every instance of violence and of crime, charging them wholly to political causes, and on the strength of those allegations entering upon hostile legislation; I think it not at all impossible that the effect of this action upon the southern mind was first to arrest its loyal tendencies and then to make it sullen, defiant, and hostile. I think I have some warrant for this opinion in a knowledge of what would take place in my own or in the mind of every one of us under similar circumstances. Is there a man here, I care not what may be his opinion on this general subject, who does not feel in his heart that hostility and distrust toward him from others would engender hostility in his own mind toward them? Is there anything in human nature to controvert this general statement? Can any man point me to an instance in history in which any society or any nation, great or small, was ever coerced into sympathy of sentiment with the dominant power by measures of force? I have hitherto so often referred to historical precedents on this subject that I am unwilling to refer to them again; and yet they cannot be cited too often. Did coercion bring Hungary to sympathize with Austria, to acknowledge Austrian rule or yield prompt and cheerful obedience to Austrian decrees? For fifteen years, under this discipline, Hungary was defiant and maintained a haughty and sullen independence; and Austria, feeling more and more the need of her sympathy and aid, was finally forced to concede everything that Hungary had claimed, an independent parliament and the right to crown her own kings.

Has the hostile feeling of Ireland been assuaged by the treatment she has experienced at the hands of England? Has Poland become less hostile by reason of her treatment by Russia? The greatest example ever afforded in the history of the world of the attempt on the part of a ruling power to coerce opinion and make men think like their oppressors is furnished by the Inquisition. Force was never applied so directly and so sharply upon the object sought to be accomplished, and what was the result? We are not using the machinery of the Inquisition, it is true; we are not employing "Luke's iron boot or Damien's bed of steel;" but we are acting upon the identical principles which were then avowed. Now, sir, nations are like men. Communities are but aggregations of individuals. If you treat them kindly you make them friends. If you treat them with hostility inevitably and by a natural law they become enemies.

In my judgment, sir, if there is anything established by the law of human nature, by what we know of the elements of influence on societies and States and by the experience of nations in all ages, it is that the people of these States can never be made more loyal, more heartily attached to our Government and better fitted to share its councils by excluding them all, loyal and disloyal alike, from all participation in them. Every year of such exclusion will only make them worse. I do not say we have not the physical power to enforce obedience upon them, to govern them by force and not by consent, but I do say that if we continue that system three, five, or seven years longer, we must quadruple our armies and double the taxes we impose upon the people to-day.

And now, sir, before I close my remarks, already much too long, I desire to say a few words upon the relation of the action we may take here to the Union party—that party which is to-day in possession of all departments of the Government and which is responsible for the conduct of public affairs. I speak not of party in any narrow sense, nor as an agency for procuring patronage, place, and power for selfish reasons or for selfish ends, but as an agent of political reform, as a means of promoting the public good. The Union party has carried this country through the war.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] made the remark the other day that "we have saved the Union," and, as at that moment the discussion was of a somewhat partisan character, I, perhaps rather hastily, drew the inference that he intended to say that the Democratic party had saved the Union. A little reflection, however, satisfied me that this was a misapprehension of his meaning; because neither he nor anybody else will deny, I think, that what is known as the Union party has carried the country through the war by which the rebellion has been quelled. That party grew out of the necessities which the rebellion created. The party in opposition to the Democratic party at the commencement of the war was the Republican party. That was formed for the purpose of checking the aggressions of slavery. It had done that effectually. But, its success furnished the occasion and the pretext for the rebellion, and out of the necessity of crushing the rebellion grew up the Union party, composed of the bulk of the Republican party, and of accessions—large accessions, I am proud to say—from what had been known as the Democratic party of the northern and western States. There were to be found in the Union party thousands of men who, the moment the country was in danger, abandoned party organizations and joined those who sustained the Administration upon which devolved the duty of suppressing the rebellion. The Democratic party, as an organization, did not assume that position. Its attitude was one of continued opposition. The Union party was then left to carry the country through the war, and its labors were crowned with success, and it gained what any party which renders great services will always gain, a strong, powerful hold upon the sympathy, the attachment, the confidence, and the gratitude of the people of the United States.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to inquire if the gentleman from New York intends to create the impression that the Union party has done all the work as a party, and to exclude the idea that men of all parties have contributed to the work in their humble way.

Mr. RAYMOND. By no means. I know and have already said that men of all parties contributed their aid, but I repeat that as an organization the Democratic party did not sustain or aid the Government in prosecuting the war by which the rebellion was quelled.

Mr. NIBLACK. I concede that the Union party appointed the generals, held the offices, and controlled the political power of the country, but I insist that, in proportion to numbers, the Democratic party did quite as much in furnishing men and means to carry on the war. It is untrue—I say it in no offensive sense—that the Union party is entitled to all the credit. It was the work of the people, although they had to do the work under men of the Union party, under the Administration that happened to be in power as their representative for the time being. We had no representatives in power, and we had, therefore, to work under the banner of that party. But I repudiate the idea that the great portion of the people engaged in the work had any connection whatever with the Union party. The appeal made to the country was that in this matter there was no party; that we must come forward as a people and sustain the Government, and sustain the Administration as a matter of course; and that when the war was over we could again resolve ourselves into our original elements, and go back to our party. I say, therefore, that all this talk about the Union party being entitled to all the credit is unfair and illiberal, and in violation of the published speeches and pledges made to the country during the war by men of the Union or Republican party. It is calculated to make an unfair impression on the country, and if it goes into history, it will be unfair and untrue in history. I regret that the gentleman, in arguing this question, should indulge in these partisan and illiberal remarks, which, with all respect to him, I say are unworthy of his position.

Mr. RAYMOND. The gentleman seems to be under the impression, or seeks to convey the idea, that the suppression of the rebellion was a voluntary work on the part of the people, acting as individuals, and in that sense he claims, and perhaps justly, that members of the Democratic party did quite as much as members of the Union party.

Mr. NIBLACK. I say that in proportion to our numbers we did quite as much as the Union party.

Mr. RAYMOND. I wish to state one respect in which they did not do as much. I acknowledge that the voluntary efforts of individuals entered largely into the suppression of the rebellion.

Mr. NIBLACK. I claim that in the section of country from whence I come the Democratic party did more than any other party in that respect. And that is the case with many others on this side of the House. It was held that it was the work of the people, and neither the Democratic party nor any other party should claim the entire credit for it now.

Mr. RAYMOND. If the gentleman is done, I hope he will not again interrupt me when I begin to reply to his remarks.

Mr. NIBLACK. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not intend to interrupt him in an improper manner.

Mr. RAYMOND. I say again that I wish to point out one respect in which the Democratic party, as an organization, did not do as much as the Union party did toward suppressing the rebellion. I concede that to a great extent the efforts of individuals, in contributions of money, in volunteering for the Army, and other things of that sort, contributed very largely indeed to the suppression of the rebellion. I am not prepared and I am certainly not disposed to deny that members of the Democratic party in that way did their full share. But this was a public war; it was a war waged by the Government against a rebellion seeking its overthrow. Of course the war was carried on by the Government, and it could have been carried on in no other way. That Government organized war upon the rebellion, raised the money by which that war was carried on, and thus incurred a debt of three or four thousand million dollars. It passed such laws as the necessities of the case required. Without those laws, without those measures, which gave vigor, force, and effect to the operations of the Government, the rebellion would have been a success; and if the Government had not been supported by votes, by public confidence, and by acts of Congress in carrying on that war, the rebellion would have triumphed, and the Government would have been overthrown.

Now, I say that instead of supporting the Government in carrying on that war the Democratic party, as an organization, opposed and resisted it from first to last. That statement I believe to be literally correct. Its votes in this House were hostile to the Government. It did not vote for men; it did not vote for money; it did not sustain the Administration by its confidence or its aid; it opposed its measures, and sought to vindicate its action by denouncing the war as unjust, or by claiming that if just it could not succeed in what it had undertaken to do, namely, to restore the Union; and the last act of the Democratic party, as it was dragging itself slowly and painfully to its grave, was to declare in a national convention that so far as restoring the Union was concerned the war was a failure.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYMOND] allow me to say a few words in response to the sentiment he has just uttered?

Mr. RAYMOND. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have not troubled the House much during this session on account of sickness, which has confined me to my room. But when the gentleman who comes here this session, and after the war is over, while I have served here from the time of the commencement of the war to this hour, when he undertakes to assert here that there was a Democratic party on the floor of this House which steadily opposed the war during that time, I tell him to examine the record and he will find his statement to be false. When Congress met here on the 4th day of July, 1861, under the call of Mr. Lincoln, that gentleman ought to know that his own party cry was, "A truce to all parties." He ought to know that the Democrats met here and made no nomination for any office of this House whatever. Not till last December did they attempt to indicate a party nomination. He ought to know, further, that while the Government, or the Administration if he will, was carrying on the war in the field, it also carried on a war against the people. It knew no man for any office within its gift unless he voted for Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Hamlin in 1860. Go through your whole list of offices. Look at your foreign ministers; look at the men in the offices around here; look at the offices created by the very necessities of the war; look at the postoffices; look at the positions in the field. Where is the Democrat who was appointed to a single office, even a cross-roads post office? Yet the gentleman from New York admits that, in furnishing material for the field, in furnishing money and men, the Democrats did their duty and their whole duty. I ask him, in God's name, what was it that crushed the rebellion, if it was not men and money? We are talking now about crushing the rebellion.

Yet the gentleman says now that the Democratic party, in its dying agonies, declared that the war had failed to restore the Union. I ask him whether he says that the war has restored the Union to-day. Where is your restored Union? It is in the hands of your committee of reconstruction. Does the gentleman accept the word "reconstruction" for his platform? Does he not understand the difference between "reconstruction" and "restoration"? Had the war restored the Union on the 29th day of August, 1864, when the Chicago convention sat? Has it restored it now? It has crushed the rebellion. The Army in the field has done its duty. The Commander-in-Chief of the Army and every subordinate under him have done their duty. They crushed the rebellion a year ago. But is there not a political party here in Congress to-day that refuses to restore the Union, a party that seeks not its restoration? The gentleman from New York plays between the two. He is opposed to reconstruction and does not stand by restoration.

Now, sir, I say that it comes with an ill grace from the gentleman, who knows so well what the history of this country has been during the war, to make this general and sweeping charge. I know it has been repeated from time to time. I will tell the gentleman where the line was drawn. As to all the party measures brought up in this House, the Democrats voted against them as they had a right to vote, even if they were not particularly conscientious about the matter, if they were party measures and nothing more. Upon those we divided. But look at your appropriation bills? Who were the men that voted against them? Who were the men that called the yeas and nays? Even Mr. Vallandigham never voted against the appropriation of a single man or a single dollar.

[Cries of "Oh!" "Oh!"] Gentlemen may say "Oh!" "Oh!" but Mr. Vallandigham and I sat near to each other, and I know that he did not vote either way. [Laughter.] I challenge gentlemen to the record. They are able to read; let them read it for themselves. What I say is that there was no Democratic organization here in this House. Gentlemen ought to know that.

Mr. RAYMOND. I am a little surprised to hear the gentleman say that there was no Democratic organization through the war. Did I understand him to say that there was no Democratic organization, no attempts of the Democratic party to maintain an organization during the war?

Mr. JOHNSON. There was no Democratic organization in this House. I was speaking of this House.

Mr. RAYMOND. I was not in this House at that time; and as the gentleman was he ought to know its history better than myself. But if the votes of members as they stand on the record, with which record I was at the time somewhat familiar, indicated anything they indicated a purpose to maintain that organization, and to vote against the Government at every point where they could do so without being held to a rigid and troublesome responsibility by the country. I certainly did not know that that party disbanded as a party.

I was under the impression that, in the different congressional districts, it ran candidates against the Administration party; that in the different States it ran candidates for Governor against the Administration party. I know that this was so in my own State; and I know the grounds which that party took in that State. It took ground against the Administration, against the conduct of the war, and against the principles of the war, on which the war was waged. I know that the Democratic Governor in our State proclaimed that the real enemy of the liberties of the country was the Administration which was carrying on the war; that its overthrow was even more important than the defeat of the rebels in the field; that certainly led me to believe then, as I believe now, that the Democratic party maintained its organization throughout the country all through the war, and that, as a party, while many individual members of it acted otherwise, it resisted the Administration, opposed its measures, denounced its policy, and threw the whole weight of its action and influence against the efforts it was making to quell the rebellion.

I think the country regards this as having been the attitude of that party through the war, though I am glad to know the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not now by any means the only member of that party who would disavow and escape the responsibility of its action. The gentleman asks me if the Union was restored when the Chicago convention met. Certainly not; but that convention pronounced against the only means by which its restoration was possible—the quelling of the rebellion by force. It demanded a cessation of hostilities and the abandonment of the war. Suppose the Democratic party had succeeded in that demand, would the restoration of the Union have been as near as it is now? The gentleman asks me if the Union is restored to-day. I am sorry to say it is not; but it is certainly nearer a just and safe restoration than it would have been if the Democratic party had succeeded in the last election. It is in the hands of those who will restore it, as I trust and believe, on just principles and on the basis of the Constitution. I beg gentlemen not to misunderstand me. I do not denounce the mass, the individual members of the Democratic party as disloyal or as having opposed the war. While I render full tribute to the mass of that party and acknowledge the aid they gave the war, I must still insist that the action of the party as an organization was not in support of the Government or in aiding the prosecution of the war. It complained then, as the gentleman complains now, that it did not get its share of patronage and of office. Yet it had two members of the Cabinet; it had, I believe, a majority of the officers of highest grades in the field, and a far greater share of other official places than under ordinary circumstances is ever given by any Administration to its opponents.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. RAYMOND. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman understands very well the position which I occupy and which I maintain.

Mr. RAYMOND. I beg the gentleman to understand I do not speak of him individually. I do not speak personally of any one. I speak of the organization.

Mr. JOHNSON. From the position which the gentleman has assumed, from the fact that the Democratic party existed in the country, does he tell me and this House that the organization of the Democratic party in a time of war is deleterious to the purpose of carrying on that war?

Mr. RAYMOND. That depends on its action. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman assumed that the Democratic party existed here as an organization. I say, speaking of the Representatives on this floor, that they were not here, as the gentleman alleges, opposing the Administration in "crushing out" the rebellion. I say, so far as "crushing out" the rebellion is concerned, the members of the Democratic party did not stand together as a party. There was no Democratic party on that point. The Democracy of the country in the organization took the position of "crushing out" the rebellion.

But there is one thing which the gentleman himself is now voting for which places obstacles, now that the war is over, in the way of restoring the Union until the great abolition maw of the country may be filled and satiated; and that one thing is the proposition to postpone the restoration of the Union until 1870. The gentleman will recollect the Crittenden resolution of July 22, 1861, declaring that when the rebellion was crushed the war should end.

Mr. RAYMOND. The gentleman must excuse me.

Mr. JOHNSON. My distinguished colleague from Lancaster [Mr. STREVE] voted "no" on that proposition.

Mr. RAYMOND. I desire to finish what I have to say some time to-day, and I shall not be able to do it if I yield the floor for a general discussion of past party relations to gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON. I want the gentleman to answer me whether the Union is restored to-day, and whether it can ever be restored until all the people are represented in the law-making power of the Government?

Mr. RAYMOND. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether—

Mr. NIBLACK. Will the gentleman yield one moment?

Mr. RAYMOND. Just for a question.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to inquire whether or not the great majority of the party to which the gentleman belongs does not oppose the present Administration, and whether in doing so they are disloyal to the Government or not.

Mr. RAYMOND. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to enter into a discussion of all the new issues which the gentlemen on the other side seek to spring upon me just now. The present Administration, so far as I am aware, is not conducting a war, nor is it seeking to quell a rebellion; therefore opposition to that Administration, however unwise and injurious it may be, cannot be confounded with disloyalty to the Government.

I repeat what I said before, in spite of all that has been urged against it, that the Democratic organization as such did not aid the Administration in carrying the country through the war. The Administration, I repeat, had the conduct of the war. It did not exclude members of the Democratic party from participation in its councils, but admitted them and invited their cooperation. It strove in every possible way to get them to act with it, or in any way so as to give vigor to the war. It took its members into its Cabinet and placed eminent Democrats in the field. And yet I believe that wherever a prominent Democrat anywhere undertook to sustain the Administration in the prosecution of the war that man was read out of its organization just as soon as they could reach him. I might cite individual instances to prove this, but it is not worth while to prolong this discussion.

Now, sir, as to restoring the Union, we are on the way to it. We ought to have done it sooner, I admit. The gentlemen on the opposite side will admit, as gentlemen on my own side will allege against me, that I have done all in my power to complete that work. It is not my fault that loyal men who have been sent from the southern States lately in rebellion are not in their seats here to-day. I have been ready at any time to act upon the question of their admission, from the day I entered Congress till the present time. I deny the assertion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have thrown obstacles in the way of their admission or of the complete restoration of the Union. I have striven for both—steadily, consistently, and upon principles which I avowed at the outset, and to which I have sought in every possible way to give effect. And I intend to do so still.

The gentleman asks me when the Union will be restored. If it depended upon me, sir, it would be restored this day, so far as the admission of loyal members from loyal States to Congress could restore it. I hope it will be restored soon—the sooner the better—by the action of the Union party which holds all the departments of the Government, and is especially responsible for the action of Congress. As I said, when this interruption occurred, that party has established a strong hold on the confidence of the country by carrying the country through the war and quelling the rebellion which threatened its existence. It owes it to the nation to complete the work so well begun; to build on the foundation so nobly and so successfully laid; and not to forfeit by unwise political action the confidence it has earned by its conduct of the war. It is just as much the duty of the Union party to-day to complete the restoration of the Union, to restore every State to its just rights and relations under the Constitution, as it was five years ago, and every day thereafter, to wage vigorous and successful war upon the rebellion which threatened the nation's life. And the first great duty it has to perform in the accomplishment of this end is so to extend its organization and so liberalize its spirit as to become a national instead of a sectional party, as events have compelled it to be hitherto.

In 1852 the last national convention of the party opposed to the aggressions of slavery was held. From that time to this we have been compelled to wage a sectional warfare. But now that necessity no longer exists. There is no further need, no longer an excuse for a sectional organization, and the duty of the Union party to-day is to extend itself into every southern State, and become a national party in organization as it is in interest and as it should be in its principles, its purpose, and its sympathies. The great obstacle to national political action, slavery, has disappeared. We encounter no longer in the southern States that great power which bound them to each other and divided them from all the world beside. Their interests are no longer hostile to ours. They are no longer closed against friendly counsels, friendly sympathies, and friendly efforts on the part of the North. They have the same interest in the Constitution that we have, and there is nothing that can make the South again a compact unit in its political action hereafter but hostility on our part toward it.

Sir, I long to see the day when the Union party shall take ground that will command the sympathies of the Union-loving men all over this broad Republic, and give it that basis of liberality, generosity, and constitutional freedom to which by its organization, by its principles, and by its history, it is entitled. When it shall have done that, it will hold a position from which nothing can drive it. I repeat, sir, that the great political necessity of the day is to nationalize the party that has saved the nation. And all that is needed to accomplish this result is for the Union party to stand upon its own ground, to avoid all needless issues, to await the developments of time and public discussion before rushing into contests upon new questions, and to resist resolutely every endeavor to force upon it principles and measures which it has never espoused. Let it plant itself upon national ground, discard all sectional feeling, extend its organization into every State, make the interests, rights, honor, welfare of all sections its own, and it will stand forever! In such a position and with such principles it has every department of the Government at its command. All the patronage and power of the Executive would give weight and effect to its policy. Thousands of patriotic and disinterested Democrats will swell its ranks and give weight to its councils, and we shall see an end of the long weary strife of sections, which once had a reason, a necessity, and an object, but which, now that slavery is dead, has them no longer. It is the hope of such a result that has prompted my action on this floor during the present session. It is that which has led me to seek so strongly and so steadily to maintain harmony of action between the President and the majority of Congress, for I knew then, as I know now, that in all the essential principles of their political action both were united upon new points, points never hitherto discussed or decided in the councils of the Union party. They may differ, as members differ among themselves on this floor, and as men must always differ elsewhere. I believe the nation demands the speedy restoration of peace and harmony to the Union. It demands that the political relations of the States to each other and to the General Government shall be promptly restored upon the principles of the Constitution. In some way, by some means, through one agency or another, the people will require all this to be accomplished. We shall have a national party, and that party will have control of the Government. Why should we, the Union men of the land, those who saved the nation, from any mere resentments or mistakes, allow that great work to fall into other hands? It requires no sacrifice which wise and prudent men may not easily make. We need relinquish no principle. We need only to forbear, to be patient, to court the aid and agency of time, to be tolerant of differences and tenacious of principles and objects in which we all agree. I rejoice to see in the action of Congress evidence that time and reflection are giving weight to these considerations; and I indulge the hope that when we adjourn, standing upon ground which we hold in common and referring to the judgment of the people the decision of questions on which we differ, we shall go to the country united in purpose, and having the cooperation of the President whom we placed in power.

Mr. BINGHAM obtained the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had indefinitely postponed joint resolution of the House No. 152, relative to certain guns captured in the late war.

Also, that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 108) for the relief of Samuel Norris, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In reply to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 11th instant, requesting information in regard to the dispatch of military forces from Austria for service in Mexico, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State on that subject.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, June 18, 1866.

The message, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REBEL DEBT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 11th instant, requesting information concerning the provisions of the laws and ordinances of the late insurgent States on the subject of the rebel debt, so called, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State, and the documents by which it was accompanied.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, June 18, 1866.

The message, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the committee on reconstruction, and ordered to be printed.

THE BORDER SURVEY.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, presented the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 28th of May, requesting information as to what progress has been made in completing the maps connected with the boundary survey under the treaty of Washington, with copies of any correspondence on this subject not heretofore printed, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State, and the documents which accompanied it.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, June 14, 1866.

The message, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RICE, of Maine, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution respecting the maps, charts, and surveys of the boundary line under the treaty of Washington, and the charts and maps under the reciprocity treaty; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PARIS EXPOSITION.

Mr. BANKS. I ask leave to have printed the amendments of the Senate to the resolution of the House relative to the Paris Exposition.

No objection was made, and the amendments were ordered to be printed.

MEXICAN LOAN.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution for the protection of citizens of the United States in the matter of public loans of the republic of Mexico; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The following is the joint resolution:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (in view of the present pecuniary condition of Mexico, and to the end that citizens of the United States who may see fit to advance money to a friendly republic may be protected from loss,) That the Government of the United States hereby guaranties to all citizens of the United States whom it may concern the payment, according to the terms thereof, of any public loan or loans of the republic of Mexico now offered or that may hereafter be offered in the United States by the Government of the said republic, having not less than ten nor more than twenty years to run, and bearing an interest of not more than seven per cent, per annum, duly authorized by the said Government of the republic of Mexico as certified by the recognized minister plenipotentiary from that republic accredited to the United States: Provided, That the total amount of such loan or loans shall not exceed the sum of $50,000,000: And provided further, That the said bonds shall be sold at the highest market rate, and that said market rate shall not be less than eighty-five cents for each bond of the par value of one dollar. And each of the bonds constituting the loan or loans thus guarantied shall, by or under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, be certified as such, and shall be specifically and exactly registered, and the record of the authentication of such loan or loans and the full return of said registry shall be deposited in the Department of State of the United States.

MILEAGE ACCOUNT.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I desire to make a personal statement. I find, by reference to Executive Document No. 125, that it is stated I received mileage for five hundred and thirteen miles travel. As a matter of fact, it is shown by the books in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House, and the books in the Treasury Department, that I received mileage for only four hundred and fifty-four miles travel.

DEATH OF HON. JAMES HUMPHREY.

Mr. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and unanimously agreed to:

Resolved, That seven members of the New York delegation be appointed by the Speaker of this House for the purpose of attending the funeral of their late colleague, Hon. JAMES HUMPHREY; and that Ira Goodnow, the Doorkeeper of the House, be permitted to accompany the delegates appointed by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER announced the following members as those appointed by him under the foregoing resolution:

Mr. NELSON TAYLOR of the fifth district, Mr. DANIEL MORRIS of the twenty-fifth district, Mr. CHARLES H. WINFIELD of the eleventh district, Mr. WILLIAM A. DARLING of the ninth district, Mr. WILLIAM E. DODGE of the eighth district, Mr. THOMAS T. DAVIS of the twenty-third district, and Mr. STEPHEN TABER of the first district of New York.

SAMUEL NORRIS.

On motion of Mr. BIDWELL, Senate joint resolution No. 108, for the relief of Samuel Norris, was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

Mr. BIDWELL. I desire to have this joint resolution acted on at this time. I think there can be no objection to its passage.

The joint resolution was read at length. It provides that the claim of Samuel Norris, of California, for supplies furnished the Indians of that State under contracts made with certain commissioners, or either of them, authorized to negotiate treaties with said Indians, and all the papers relating thereto, be referred back to the Court of Claims for examination and allowance, and that in fixing the amount to be paid the claimant the rule shall be the actual value of the supplies furnished at the time and places of delivery, of which due proof shall be made by the claimant.

The joint resolution was then read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask leave to offer a resolution.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

Mr. SCHENCK. Very well; then it only remains for me to return my acknowledgments to my colleague for his remarkable courtesy.

And then, on motion of Mr. SPALDING, (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. HALE: The petitions of Peter S. Palmer, and others, and of Smith M. Weed, and others, citizens of Clinton county, New York, praying the repeal of an act establishing a post route from West Alburg, Vermont, to Champlain, New York.

By Mr. HULBURD: The petition of sundry citizens of Rensselaer county, New York, asking increase of duty on imported flax.

Also, the petition of sundry citizens of St. Lawrence county, New York, asking a repeal of so much of any act as imposes a ten per cent. tax on State bank currency paid out after July next.

By Mr. TROWBRIDGE: The petition of G. W. Gaines, S. R. Rogers, and 36 others, citizens of East Tennessee, asking for the remission of a portion of the taxes to citizens of that State until their just claims against the United States are adjusted and paid.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 19, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY. The Secretary commenced to read the Journal of yesterday.

Mr. CONNESS. If no Senator desires to hear the Journal read, I hope it will be dispensed with, and I make that motion, as time is now an object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Journal. No objection being made, its further reading is dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 15th instant, copies of the preliminary reports made by the mixed board of Army and Navy officers on the subject of coast defenses; which, on motion of Mr. WILSON, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 356) for the relief of the United States Express Company, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which is the proper committee for it.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 150) to provide for payment of the claim of Colonel H. C. De Alava for military services, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 164) for the relief of Alois Klaus, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report in writing, which was ordered to be printed.

INTERNAL TAXATION.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that five hundred extra copies of the bill (H. R. No. 513) to reduce internal taxation, and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, be printed with the amendments reported by the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion will go to the Committee on Printing under the rules.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to have it considered at the present time. It is important to act on the motion at once, so that it may be settled before the type is distributed. I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to have my motion acted upon at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider his motion to print an extra number of the bill named by him without referring it, according to the rules of the Senate, to the Committee on Printing. The Chair can only entertain the motion by unanimous consent. No objection being made, the motion is before the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. As that subject is under consideration, and I observe that the bill as amended is printed and laid on our tables, and as gentlemen are anxious that the business of the session should be disposed of as fast as possible, I give notice that I shall ask the Senate to-morrow at one o'clock to proceed with the consideration of House bill No. 513, being the tax bill.

SALT LAKE AND COLUMBIA RIVER RAILROAD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No.

336, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Salt Lake City to the Columbia river.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. This appears to be a bill of a great deal of importance. I understand it is for the construction of a railroad from Utah to some place in Oregon, a distance of some hundreds of miles; I do not know how many, perhaps a thousand. I submit that it will require considerable consideration, and I suggest to the honorable Senator from Oregon that it ought to be laid aside for the present. Perhaps it should go to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, but at all events I move to lay it aside for the present and to take up Senate bill No. 317, making an amendment to the Pacific railroad act. That is the same bill which was before the Senate yesterday morning and with which we made considerable progress, and I think we can dispose of it in a comparatively short time. I do not wish to embarrass the bill of the honorable Senator from Oregon, but I should prefer to have it lie over until it can be more carefully examined.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the Senator from Michigan will not persist in his motion. This is a bill copied from other railroad bills that have been passed by Congress at this session without any question. It simply provides for the construction of a railroad from the Columbia river to Salt Lake City to connect with the Union Pacific railroad, and it makes the same grants precisely that are made in all the other bills. There is not a new feature of any kind or description in this bill, and I supposed that it would pass without any question. I hope that the Senator will allow it to pass at this time. It will only take a few minutes. There is nothing in it that can possibly excite discussion. It is a very important bill. Men of capital are standing ready now to take hold of the enterprise as soon as the bill can be passed through at the present session of Congress. I have brought it forward now, and desire to pass it, if possible, so that during the present summer a corps of engineers may go forward and make the necessary surveys. I am sure the Senator will not oppose the passage of the bill or anything in it, for he has indorsed everything in the bill heretofore on several occasions. It will take but a very little time to dispose of this bill.

Mr. HOWARD. There is no doubt of its great importance; and for that very reason I should like to look into it more carefully. I think it had better lie over for a short time at least. I have not had time to read it. It is part and parcel of the Pacific railroad system. If I understand it properly and regularly the bill should have been referred to the Pacific Railroad Committee; but I will not insist upon that. I simply ask the Senator to allow it to pass over until to-morrow or some future day. I am very anxious to get up the bill to which I have referred and have it disposed of.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very confident, from what was said yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts and other Senators, that the bill the Senator from Michigan proposes to take up will create considerable discussion and will take more than the morning hour. I would prefer to have that bill put among the regular orders of the Senate rather than to be brought forward in the morning hour when bills that will excite no discussion may be brought up and disposed of. There is nothing in this bill, I am sure, which the Senator needs to examine in order to indorse it. I have waited a long time to bring this bill up. I have not had an opportunity heretofore to get it before the Senate. If I put it aside now, I am sure I shall have great difficulty in bringing it up at any subsequent time. I hope the Senator will allow me to have a vote on this bill at the present time.

Mr. HOWARD. I must insist on my motion. I shall assent to whatever disposition the Senate may see fit to make of it. I think the bill ought to go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan to postpone the present and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 317.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported to the bill (S. No. 336) before the Senate by the Committee on Public Lands will be proceeded with in their order.

The first amendment was in section one, line five, in the list of corporators to strike out the word "Sems" and insert "Lewis," so that the name will read "C. H. Lewis."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest that the amendments to the first section are merely verbal, changing the mistakes made in the printing of the bill, and they may be acted upon together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendments to the first section will be read together.

The Secretary read the amendments, which were in line seven to insert the name of "John R. McBride;" in line eleven to insert the name of "Clark Bell;" and in line fourteen to insert the name of "Edward Lander."

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the vote will be taken separately on the insertion of those names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be taken separately at the request of any Senator. The first question will be on inserting in line seven the name of "John R. McBride."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will withdraw the amendment in the eleventh line.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is reported by a committee, and the Chair doubts whether an individual member of the Senate is authorized to withdraw an amendment reported by a committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suppose it can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. POMEROY. It is only the insertion of a single name, and there seems to be some reason why the name should be withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in the power of the Senate to dispose of the matter as they think proper.

Mr. POMEROY. I know of no objections to the name myself. I know nothing about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on inserting the name of "Clark Bell" in the eleventh line of the first section.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that will not be done. I have reasons that I think substantial ones why it should not be done. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate this morning in stating them, but I shall be compelled to state them rather than allow it to be done now.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was in section one, line fourteen, to insert among the corporators the name of "Edward Lander."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section one, line thirty, after the word "namely" to strike out:

Beginning at Salt Lake City in the Territory of Utah; thence westerly, by the most eligible and direct railroad route, as shall be determined by said company, within the territory of the United States, to the Columbia river, in the State of Oregon or Washington Territory.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Beginning at a point on the Columbia river, in Washington Territory or Oregon, at or near Umatilla or Wallula; thence easterly, by the most eligible and direct railroad route, as shall be determined by said company, to Salt Lake City, in the Territory of Utah, or to some point on the line of the Union Pacific railroad, so as to connect therewith west of the one hundred and ninth meridian of longitude,

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section one, line forty-five, to strike out "thirty" and insert "three hundred;" and in line forty-six to strike out "thousand" and insert "hundred;" so as to read:

The capital stock of said company shall consist of three hundred thousand shares of $100 each, and shall be transferable in such manner as the by-laws of said corporation shall provide.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section one, line fifty-one, after the word "railroad" to insert "company."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section one, line seventy-six, to strike out "one" and insert "ten;" and in line seventy-seven to strike out "fifty" and insert "five;" so as to read:

So soon as ten thousand shares shall in good faith be subscribed for, and five dollars per share actually paid into the treasury of the company, the said president and secretary of said board of commissioners shall appoint a time and place for the first meeting of the subscribers to the stock.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section three, line twelve, after the word "company" to insert "confirming to said company;" so that the clause will read:

The commissioners shall so report to the President of the United States, and patents of land, as aforesaid, shall be issued to said company, confirming to said company the right and title to said lands situated opposite to and continuous with said completed section of said road.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported from the committee have been completed.

Mr. POMEROY. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from California, or some of the Senators who are familiar with these questions, to this provision in the bill on the top of the seventh page, "that where the gold or silver lands contain timber" the timber only shall be given. I suggest whether it ought not to read "timber thereon so much as may be necessary for building the road shall be given;" not the whole timber, but only so much as is necessary for the construction of the road. If that meets with their approval, I will move an amendment to insert in line fourteen of section two, after "timber thereon," the words "so much as may be necessary for the building of said road." I think the miners would complain if the railroad company got all the timber; but if they have what is necessary for building the road on the even sections, I think it is a fairer adjustment than it is to give them the whole.

Mr. CONNESS. I am in favor of the object of this bill, and was anxious to have an opportunity to read it before it was taken up. Hence I voted this morning to postpone it for that reason alone. The proposition now made by the Senator from Kansas interferes with what was the intention unquestionably of those who prepared the bill. The grant made in the Pacific railroad bill originally conveys the whole timber upon the odd sections which may be found to contain minerals, and the fee-simple title to which could not consequently pass to the company. All the timber on those sections is granted to the company, and I presume that the gentlemen who prepared this bill intended a like grant to this company; but in amending the Pacific railroad grant subsequently, I had an amendment inserted which reserved to the agriculturist and to the miner who might be located upon those sections the timber upon their locations and the timber necessary to the miner for operating his mine. This amendment of the Senator from Kansas will meet the purpose in another way, and some such amendment should be made. The reason I desired a little delay was to enable me to look into this point and some others like it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. At the bottom of page 14, in section ten, line two, I move to strike out the word "company" after "railroad."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD. I have not had time to read the bill now under consideration. I desire to be informed by the honorable Senator from Oregon whether it makes any approprition of money to aid the company in the construction of their road, whether it furnishes any subsidy in the form of security or guarantees on the part of the Government of the United States, or whether it provides merely an appropriation of lands to aid the company in the prosecution of their work.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In answer to the Senator's question I will say that the bill does not make any appropriation of money or contemplate any such thing, but simply appropriates land to aid the company in the construction of this road. It is no more extensive in the terms of its grant than any railroad bill that has passed this body appropriating lands for railroad purposes.

Mr. HOWARD. How much does it appropriate per mile?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Each odd section for ten miles on each side of the road.

Mr. POMEROY. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that it does give more land than has been granted to States; it gives precisely what the Pacific railroad grant of land was. When we have given to States we have never given more than five sections on each side; that is, ten sections per mile in the whole. This gives ten on each side, which makes twenty in the whole, just what the Pacific railroad got.

Mr. HOWARD. Twenty sections per mile?

Mr. POMEROY. Odd sections, alternate sections. It is precisely what the Pacific railroad has through the same section of country.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the title pass to the company before the completion of the road from section to section?

Mr. POMEROY. Only as every twenty miles are completed and certified to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, the title of the bill was amended so as to read, "A bill granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from the Columbia river to Salt Lake City."

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HOWARD. I now move to take up Senate bill No. 317.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill (S. No. 317) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864, was resumed as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. POMEROY to add to the first section the following proviso:

And provided further, That should the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division, under the provisions of this act, file their map locating their road upon a different route from that indicated in their map heretofore filed in the Department of the Interior, then and in that event the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company, or their assigns, being authorized to connect with the said railroad under the several acts to which this is an amendment, may be, and are hereby, authorized to continue their road westwardly from the point provided for in the aforesaid acts to a connection with the Union Pacific railroad at some point east of the one hundredth meridian of longitude, and for that purpose may have the same provisions and be subject to all the restrictions and limitations of the said Pacific railroad acts.

Mr. HOWARD. It was intimated yesterday that the amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Kansas required a further appropriation of money or of subsidies in order to carry it out. The amendment itself was never before the Committee on the Pacific Railroad; and that committee is in no sense responsible for the measure. If that be its effect, I most respectfully and earnestly suggest to the honorable Senator to withdraw the amendment, so far as this bill is concerned, because it must surely give rise to considerable discussion and loss of time, and present his amendment in the form of a separate measure, and let it be passed upon on its merits, if it has merits. It is quite sure that in the present state of things in this body there is danger of losing the whole bill if the Senator insists upon that amendment.

Mr. POMEROY. I did not suppose that this amendment would endanger the bill. My point was this: the road having been located in one valley in my State, and the land withdrawn from market, and parties having acquired interests there, great injustice would be done them unless some company were authorized to build a road there. I thought I would submit the matter fairly to the Senate. If the Senate conclude that no injustice will be done anybody, then, of course, they will vote the amendment down; but I wish it distinctly understood that parties have acquired rights under that location that they cannot be divested of, either by Congress or any other body, without repairing the damage. I thought that was so, and I believe it is so. If the Senator has read the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, which was submitted to the Attorney General and approved by him, he will see precisely the point I am aiming at.

Mr. HOWARD. I think I apprehend the point. The Senator cannot doubt that Congress will be entirely willing to do complete justice to all those individuals who may suffer pecuniarily in consequence of the passage of the bill now under consideration. I should be quite willing at all times to grant any relief which justice requires to those persons who have thus located in that region.

Mr. POMEROY. If Congress is ready to make up for all those losses, there will be no difficulty.

Mr. HOWARD. But I do not see the propriety, exactly, of incorporating such a provision as that in the bill now under consideration. It is in itself a separate and distinct proposition, and it ought to be so treated, as it strikes me.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator may not understand that this amendment is germane to the bill; but I do not agree with him on that point. This bill now proposes to change the location of the road—nothing else; but that is not the point I am objecting to. The point I am objecting to is, that when that is done, justice ought to be done to the parties who have taken it for granted, under the previous bill, that this road was to be located in the valley of the Republican.

Mr. CONNESS. The provision of law now is that the Pacific railroad, eastern division, shall be located through the valley of the Republican river, and the Senator from Kansas says that because of that provision many persons have bought the even sections of land of the Government, and paid the enhanced price of $2 50 an acre for them, and that if this bill shall pass authorizing the company to vary the route, to change the location to the valley of the Smoky Hill river, those settlers ought to be compensated by the Government, and not required to pay $2 50 an acre for their land.

As suggested by the honorable chairman of the Pacific Railroad Committee, of course the Government will make such a provision if we pass this bill.

But the best part of the proposition of the Senator from Kansas now comes in. He says that in lieu of the benefit that would thus be conferred upon the settlers, it is but fair to allow a company that the honorable Senator or his people have up there to extend their line so as to authorize them to join the Union Pacific railroad, and also to have bonds of the United States, at the rate of $16,000 per mile, in addition to lands. If there is any proposition settled, at least for this session, so far as the Pacific Railroad Committee of this body can settle it, it is that they will authorize no addition of bonds to be paid to any company building or engaged in building a branch of the Pacific railroad. That question has been deliberately examined upon a bill presented by the honorable Senator and urged by him, and the committee have reported upon it. Now I submit to him that the Senate cannot—of course he has a right to get a vote, and I hope he will get a vote upon it—the Senate cannot, at this session at least, authorize an addition of bonds to branches of the Pacific railroad such as is contemplated by his proposition.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator from California—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not wish to discuss this matter at any length.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the unfinished business lie over informally.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the bill (S. No. 257) to regulate the occupation of mineral lands and to extend the right of preemption thereto.

Mr. WILSON. A few days ago I had a special assignment made for to-day of the bill (H. R. No. 613) to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was made the special order for to-day at one o'clock, but under the rule and practice of the Senate the unfinished business of the preceding day takes precedence of the special order.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope we shall be allowed to dispose of this railroad bill. We can do it in ten minutes, I presume.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are two special orders for to-day at one o'clock. I had an understanding with the Senator from Massachusetts that I should to-day desire to pass the Army appropriation bill in order to have it out of the way. There is but one amendment pending to it, and I will move to postpone all prior orders with a view to take up the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope this railroad bill will not go over on account of any opposition of mine.

Mr. SHERMAN, [to Mr. POMEROY.] Your amendment will kill the bill if you put it on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Ohio repeat his motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to postpone all prior orders and take up the bill (H. R. No. 127) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1867.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suppose it will take but a few moments to dispose of the Army appropriation bill when it comes up; but I will state to the Senator from Ohio that I desire to offer an amendment to that bill when it is before the Senate. I have not the amendment with me this morning. I offered a resolution on the subject and had it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Army bill is the appropriate place for my amendment to come, and I desire the Senate to pass upon it. I do not know whether the Military Committee has yet acted upon it. There was a resolution of inquiry passed at the early part of the session directed to the Secretary of War, and that resolution has been answered by the Secretary. My colleague, who is upon the Military Committee, has been absent until yesterday, and I am not prepared to say what has been the action of the Military Committee since Mr. Stanton's report has come in. I desire to offer the joint resolution that I introduced with regard to the bounty to the ten regiments of my State that served through the war, as an amendment to the Army bill when it comes up. I suppose there will be no resistance whatever to that bill. I believe it is about perfect now. I hope the Senator from Ohio will let this railroad bill, which I regard as important, be acted upon; and then, if he insists upon taking up the Army bill this afternoon, after we get through with the railroad bill, I will send over and get the amendment that I propose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I certainly do not wish to place any obstacle in the way of the railroad bill, to which I assent and shall vote for, but this was the day set for the Army appropriation bill. I gave notice on Friday to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that I should call it up to-day and he assented to it. It will not do to wait until every member is ready to act upon it. We have been notified that the tax bill will be taken up to-morrow, and these appropriation bills ought to be got out of the way. I therefore insist upon my motion. I think it will not take long to dispose of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to state to the honorable Senator from Ohio that I also have an amendment to offer to that bill, which I laid in my drawer, but since he has mentioned the bill I have been looking for it, but cannot find it. It seems to have been mislaid.

Mr. SHERMAN. You can easily find it or write another.

Mr. CONNESS. I doubt very much whether I can prepare it in a moment while it is being suggested. I agree with the Senator that it is important to pass the Army appropriation bill; but I think we can take it up in the morning hour, and give it precedence over other bills and pass it. I hope the Senator will not urge it at this moment, for these special reasons, and for the reason that we ought to go forward with this railroad bill and finish it. I desire to say, while I am up, to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, that I join with him in any anxiety he may have for the bill that he proposes to take up; but the shorter way, it appears to me, to come to it is, to remove the bills that are now pending and that are nearly considered and get a vote upon them; let the Senate vote them up or vote them down, and then we shall get to his bill. I am very anxious to get to it.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that the Committee on Military Affairs have seven or eight bills awaiting action, and we have been waiting day after day for Senators to get their bills out of the way. Last week I moved to assign this Freedmen's Bureau bill specially for to-day at one o'clock. The Senator from Ohio thought he ought to take up the Army appropriation bill to-day. I regard, as we all regard, the appropriation bills as of importance. Yesterday was given to mining matters, and the morning hour for two or three mornings has been given to this railroad bill. I want to get the Freedman's Bureau bill through to-day, if possible; and as it has been suggested by Senators that they have some amendments to offer to the Army appropriation bill, I think the Senator from Ohio had better let it lie over and let us take up the Freedmen's Bureau bill, which I think we can perhaps finish in an hour. I should like to get through with that bill to-day.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to state that I have found my amendment to the Army appropriation bill of which I spoke.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better get rid of the Army appropriation bill and have it out of the way. It is one of those things that obstruct other business. I therefore insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 107) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1867.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to propose an amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands, for the fiscal year commencing January 1, 1866, namely:

For salaries of assistant and sub-assistant commissioners, $147,500.
For salaries of clerks, $82,000.
For stationery and printing, $63,000.
For quarters and fuel, $69,000.
For clothing for distribution, $1,170,000.
For commissary stores, $3,106,250.
For medical department, $500,000.
For transportation, $1,320,000.
For school superintendents, $21,000.
For repairs and rent of school-houses and asylums, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the quartermaster's department shall in all cases, in obtaining supplies for the military service, state in advertisements for bids for contracts that a preference shall be given to articles of domestic production and manufacture, conditions of price and quality being equal; and that such preferences shall be given to articles of American production and manufacture produced on the Pacific coast to the extent of the production required by the public service there; and to that end the Quartermaster General shall cause advertisements to be published in the cities of San Francisco, in California, and Portland, in the State of Oregon, and he shall accept the lowest responsible bids under such advertisements if the quality be equal each in its kind or superior to that which shall be offered by bidders on the Atlantic side and if the price or cost to the Government be no greater than articles of like kind offered by bidders on the Atlantic side with the cost of transportation added thereto.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only objection I see to the amendment, as I gather from the reading, is that it would compel the Quartermaster General to advertise for all supplies on the Pacific that are needed there.

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir. He is simply required to advertise for such supplies as are wanted for service there and produced there specifically.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know there are certain kinds not to be found there. So far as blankets and food are concerned, I have no objection.

Mr. CONNESS. It is so stated; such articles as are produced there that are used there. That is stated.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then it is all right. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I propose the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That a sum not exceeding $45,000 is hereby appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of fifty-eight acres, ninety-four and one quarter poles of land near Nashville, Tennessee, being the site of Fort Morton, as recommended by the chief engineer.

This is to purchase the site on which Fort Morton stands, near Nashville, Tennessee, fifty-eight acres of land, recommended by the chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War. The Government seized this property and is using it, and the damages will be nearly or quite as much as will be the cost of the purchase. The proposition is recommended by the chief of engineers and by General Thomas.

Mr. GRIMES. What for?

Mr. WILSON. For the purposes for which it is now used.

Mr. GRIMES. What are they?

Mr. WILSON. It is used for a fort and some other purposes.

Mr. GRIMES. Do I understand that it is recommended that we should buy this land for fortification purposes.

Mr. WILSON. For a fort and other Government purposes. General Thomas and the chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War all recommend the purchase, and the Secretary says the damages which the parties demand for the use of the property are nearly or quite as large as will be the cost of purchasing the property.

Mr. GRIMES. What is the appropriation?

Mr. WILSON. Forty-five thousand dollars. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I propose another amendment:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $7,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase and use during the rebellion of fifty-three and one quarter acres of land at Gloucester, Massachusetts, and of the right of way thereto, said land being the property of Thomas Niles and now occupied by the United States as a fortification for the defense of Gloucester harbor; and the said land shall not be paid for until the Attorney General shall have decided that the title thereto is legally vested in said Thomas Niles.

Mr. GRIMES. I wish to inquire who seized this property.

Mr. WILSON. It was seized by the authority of the Government of the United States. I have a letter from the Secretary of War in regard to the matter and a report on the subject from the chief Engineer. The land was taken and used by the Government, and they have now a fortification upon it. The parties demand several thousand dollars by way of damages, and we propose to pay them $7,000 for the property instead of what they ask. That is the estimate of the Secretary of War, as he states in his communication to Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts why he did not offer this amendment to the fortification bill when it was pending. That was the proper place for it.

Mr. WILSON. I think the estimate has come in since we had that bill under consideration. It was sent here on the 21st of May, by the Secretary of War, with a large quantity of papers giving a very full statement of the whole case, showing what land was used, what we want, what we have in possession, and the value of what we propose to occupy. The papers are now on my desk. The owner asked $15,000, and the Government agreed to pay $7,000 for the land taken, together with the damages for using this amount of land.

Mr. GRIMES. I should really like to know why we are fortifying Gloucester harbor, when it was, by whose order it was, and who did it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NESMITH. I offer this amendment, to come in as a separate section:

And be it further enacted, That hereafter the Superintendent of the Military Academy may be selected from any corps of the Army.

Mr. GRIMES. Do I understand that the amendment in regard to Gloucester has been adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to that amendment. Since the amendment was proposed my memory has been slightly refreshed in regard to it. If I have not misapprehended the facts, this seizure of property at Gloucester was more at the instance of the Gloucester people, who became alarmed at the anticipated depredations of some of the rebel pirates, than at the instance of the Government. I remember meeting some of the Gloucester people in one of the Departments of this Government when they were on here asking to have cannon sent up there in order to defend themselves. I think that the facts will turn out to be as I state; and I am confirmed in that opinion from the first sentence in the letter of Major Blunt, of the engineer service, who was sent to investigate the subject, in which he speaks of its having been "alleged" by the Gloucester people that this property was seized by the Government of the United States. At any rate, I am satisfied that it is a subject which ought to be more thoroughly investigated than it has been here to-day, for the Senator from Massachusetts himself is not able to explain the facts. He only says that there is a report from the Secretary of War on the subject. I desire to have that report and the accompanying letter printed before we are called upon to act on this question.

Mr. CRAGIN. I happen to have a little personal knowledge on that subject, although probably it does not go to the whole extent of knowing all about it. I happened to be in Gloucester on some business at the time this movement originated. The people there, fearing that rebel piratical ships might attack them, organized a company and got up a committee and sent them on here for the purpose of getting arms from the Government. It was understood and talked of there at that time that the movement was to involve no expense to the Government except that the Government should loan them arms. What was the success of that enterprise I do not know, but I presume this is the result of that movement.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, which has just been reconsidered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON. I offer this amendment:

And be it further enacted, That section seventeen of an act entitled "An act to define the pay and emol-uments of certain officers of the Army," approved July 17, 1862, and a resolution entitled "A resolution to authorize the President to assign the command of troops in the same field or department to officers of the same grade without regard to seniority," approved April 4, 1862, be, and the same are hereby repealed; and no officer in the military or naval service shall be dismissed from service except upon and in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial to that effect or in commutation thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. NESMITH] offered an amendment which has not been acted upon. It will now be read.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. NESMITH, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That hereafter the Superintendent of the Military Academy may be selected from any corps of the Army.

Mr. WADE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I believe the Senate voted down this proposition twice or three times—I do not remember exactly how many times. I do not remember what bill the Senator from Oregon moved it to before.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was offered as an amendment to the West Point bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope it will not be put on this Army appropriation bill, at any rate. I do not know whether the new Board of Visitors has recommended it, but I suppose it is very likely it has done so. The matter was very fully discussed before, and the Senate by a decided vote rejected the proposition.

Mr. NESMITH. There was but one vote on the question, I think, and that was when I offered this proposition as an amendment to a joint resolution passed by the Senate sometime since in regard to appointments to the West Point Academy. It was then voted down by a majority of one, the vote standing eighteen to nineteen. It was objected to then by some that that was not the proper place for such an amendment, and for that reason, no doubt, some Senators voted against it. This bill making appropriations for the support of the Army seems to be an appropriate place for it, and I have offered it again. I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It seems to me that this is a very wise provision, and I should be very glad to see it placed on this bill or any other bill to which it may be appropriate. It seems to me very unwise to confine the selection of the officer who shall have the superintendency of the Military Academy to any particular branch of the Army, either the engineers, the artillery, the infantry, the cavalry, or any other special department of the service. It seems to me the field of selection should be as wide as the whole service.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Conness, Henderson, Howard, Kirkwood, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, and Yates—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cragin, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Guthrie, Harris, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Van Winkle, and Wilson—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Backalew, Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Creswell, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Grimes, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Norton, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, Willey, and Wright—20.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I offer this amendment as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That section thirty-five of an act entitled "An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, prohibiting the payment of extra-duty pay to enlisted men of the Army, be, and the same is hereby repealed; and the provisions of the original act and the authority to grant extra-pay are hereby extended to the enlisted men of the Navy and Marine corps of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have some explanation of that. I do not understand it.

Mr. WILSON. This matter has been discussed during the present session, and I supposed it was well understood. The provision is recommended very strongly by the Departments. Formerly soldiers were allowed a certain amount, I think twenty-five cents per day, when they were detailed to do work not properly connected with their duties as soldiers, on account of its wearing out their clothes and other reasons of that character. During the war, being engaged in war and having vast masses of men in the service, we repealed the act granting this allowance, and it is now proposed to restore it. In many cases soldiers are employed for many days where otherwise we should have to hire men. We employ some of them as mechanics, in continuous labor for days and weeks, very important to the Government, and it is believed that to allow this extra pay will save money to the Government and is a mere matter of justice to the soldiers. We inserted this provision under the Army organization bill when it was before the Senate, and the Senator from Iowa then moved to include the men of the Navy and Marine corps in the provision, and I have offered this amendment in the shape in which the proposition received the sanction of the Senate before without any opposition.

Mr. GRIMES. I can best illustrate this matter by an example falling within my own knowledge in the State where I live. Many years ago, when Iowa was a Territory, I remember that the Government on several occasions had to build forts away out on the frontier, beyond the white settlements. In those cases the forts were built by the soldiers, and they received twenty or twenty-five cents a day additional pay as compensation for the labor they performed outside of their duties as soldiers, whereas, if the same work had been performed by mechanics it would have cost the Government probably very much more. The application of the same principle to sailors and marines is simply for the benefit of a few who are stationed at the Naval Academy, some of whom are painters and carpenters, and who are employed in that way, and it will not involve any considerable expense.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I offer another amendment to come in as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the allowance now made by law to officers traveling under orders, where transportation is not furnished in kind, shall be increased to ten cents per mile.

We agreed to this provision during the session on the Army organization bill by the general consent of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, its title was amended by the addition of the words "and for other purposes."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 492) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 108) for the relief of Samuel Norris.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 166) to pay to the State of Vermont the sum expended for the protection of the frontier against the invasion from Canada in 1864; and a bill (H. R. No. 276) to establish a Department of Education; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 127) for the relief of Jonathan

W. Gordon, late major in the eleventh regiment of infantry;

A bill (S. No. 230) to reimburse the State of West Virginia for moneys expended for the United States in enrolling, equipping, and paying military forces to aid in suppressing the rebellion;

A bill (S. No. 278) for the relief of Captain John H. Crowell, assistant quartermaster in the United States Army;

A bill (S. No. 174) to establish a hydrographic office in the Navy Department;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 85) explanatory of and in addition to the act of May 5, 1864, entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in Wisconsin;" and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 71) referring the petition and papers in the case of Joseph Nock to the Court of Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to take up the bill which was specially assigned for one o'clock to-day—House bill No. 613, to continue in force and to amend an act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope that will not be taken up, but that the Senate will continue the consideration of bill No. 317—the Pacific railroad bill—and let us get through with it. That is the unfinished business now properly before the Senate, and I think we can dispatch it in the course of half an hour, or an hour at the most.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that his bill was up in the morning hour yesterday and to-day, and as I secured a special assignment of this bill I think it ought not to be laid aside for the purpose of taking up any other bill. I am very anxious to have it passed, and I hope the Senate will proceed with it.

Mr. HOWARD. I believe it is the rule of the Senate that the unfinished business of yesterday takes precedence of the special order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the rule of the Senate, but that question is not now before the Senate.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the Pacific railroad bill will be continued.

Mr. WILSON. I insist on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, to postpone the present and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 613.

The question being put, there were, on a division—yeas 13, nays 16.

Mr. HOWARD. Now I move to take up Senate bill No. 317.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to have the yeas and nays on my motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. We can get rid of the railroad bill in a short time.

Mr. WILSON. I gave way to-day to the Senator from Ohio after I had got a special assignment, and now he asks me to give way further. I think it is a strange request. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to see the passage of both these bills, and I dislike to see them antagonized. This railroad bill I know is a matter of great importance to the railroad. If the Kansas branch is to be allowed to go up the Smoky Hill route the bill ought to be passed at this session, and at this period; if it is not passed here soon, it will not probably be considered by the other House. I think it ought to be disposed of. It has been before the Senate now three days. The Freedmen's Bureau bill, I think, should be passed to-day also. The railroad bill has been discussed, I suppose, nearly as much as it will be, and I hope, therefore, it will be taken up now. The Pacific Railroad Committee very fully considered it.

I desire to take up that bill, and hope both may be passed to-day.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire to inquire what the special order now is. What is before the Senate? My impression is, that the bureau bill is the bill in order. It being set as a special order for to-day, and the Army appropriation bill having superseded it, it would come up in its order at any rate on the Army bill being disposed of. I suppose the unfinished business of yesterday has been displaced. This was the special order for to-day, and where there are several special orders, the oldest one, I believe, has precedence. I make the inquiry to know if this bill is not before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would be before the Senate in the absence of a motion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then it is properly before the Senate, and we may as well go on with it.

Mr. BROWN. The motion is to lay it aside and take up the other bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No; there is no other motion. I call for the order of the day.

Mr. BROWN. That is the motion of the Senator behind you.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That motion has not been made. The Senator from Massachusetts made a motion to take this bill up, and on that question there was a vote, and it is now being ascertained how the vote was. Before we do that, it is competent to ascertain whether this bill is not before the Senate. If it is, we had better go on with it.

Mr. CONNESS. The unfinished business to-day was the mining bill. We were very anxious to finish that, but we gave way for the more pressing necessity of the appropriation bill at the solicitations of the Senator who had it in charge. Certainly the special order having lost its time has no privilege now, and therefore the question is, by a vote of the Senate, shall we proceed to the consideration of the Freedmen's Bureau bill?

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There are Senators on this side, and I am among them, who do not understand what the question is. Is it to take up the Freedmen's Bureau bill or to take up the railroad bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Freedmen's Bureau bill. The motion was to postpone the present and all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of that bill, and the question is on that motion.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Howe, Kirkwood, Morgan, Morrill, Sprague, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Conness, Cragin, Edmunds, Guthrie, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Nesmith, Nye, Poland, Kansas, Sherman, Stewart, Van Winkle, Wiley, and Williams—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Crosswell, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Norton, Pomeroy, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, and Wright—18.

So the motion was not agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HOWARD. I now move to take up Senate bill No. 317.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 317) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," approved July 2, 1864.

Mr. POMEROY. I believe the pending question is on the amendment that I submitted. I have conversed with very many of the members of the Pacific Railroad Committee, and as they desire to report upon this proposition separately, not connected with this bill, I do not desire to press it against the wishes of the friends of this measure and of our railroads. I will therefore withdraw the amendment. The Senator from California, in his remarks just now, did not precisely state the case. What he said in reference to the settlers on the line of the Republican is entirely true; but he failed to say that the company that I have named in the amendment having the right to connect on the Republican it was the vested rights of that company that I had reference to as well as of the settlers, which were argued at considerable length in the report of the Secretary of the Interior and approved by the Attorney General, so that no act of Congress can divest them of them; but if Congress desires by subsequent legislation to amend the law, I have no objection to considering it in a subsequent measure.

Mr. CONNESS. I think that would be the best way.

Mr. POMEROY. For that reason, if that meets the concurrence and views of the friends of this measure and of the Pacific Railroad Committee, as I understand it does, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment before the Senate is withdrawn.

Mr. GRIMES. Am I correct in understanding the Senator from Kansas to say that the members of the Pacific Railroad Committee have informed him they will report back his proposition in an independent bill?

Mr. POMEROY. No, sir. I said they preferred to consider it as an independent measure. I did not say what they would report, for I do not know; they have not made their report yet. They may make it, and when they make it we shall be able to tell what it is.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I move to strike out the first section of the bill. I wish to correct the remarks of the Senator from Kansas. Do I understand him to say that if the bill as reported shall pass his understanding is that the road of which he spoke, running west from Hannibal, will have the right, under the existing law, to connect with the main trunk at the one hundredth meridian?

Mr. POMEROY. No, sir; not under the existing law. They have the right to connect on the Republican where this company filed their map, not at the one hundredth meridian.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Do I understand the Senator to say that they will have the right to connect at some place with the main stem of the road?

Mr. POMEROY. Yes, sir.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Where?

Mr. POMEROY. At a point on the Republican river about one hundred miles west from the Missouri river. They have located their line to that point and filed their map and issued their bonds.

Mr. HENDERSON. Who has done that?

Mr. POMEROY. The assignees of the Hannibal and St. Jo. road.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It seems to me we are acting somewhat blindly in this matter and undoing what has been very carefully done heretofore. The idea of the Pacific railroad, as I understand it, was to make one trunk line from the one hundredth meridian west, and three branches uniting at or about that point with the main trunk. Each of these three branches was to have a subsidy of money and a land grant. Of course each was to get as rapidly as possible to the point of junction, and then the combined interests of all were to push the main road westward as rapidly as possible. The effort seems now to be to divide these interests, and instead of uniting them at the one hundredth meridian and having them, with their united strength, push the main trunk westward from that point, it seems to be to divide them up and weaken their united strength and that their interests shall separate until we get two or three hundred miles further west. This does not appear to me to be a policy that will result in the speedy completion of the road, which the whole country desires. Unless there should be some very good reason given for it, I think we had better strike out the first section of the bill, letting the second section stand as it is; letting the people on the Pacific side come to us eastwardly as rapidly as they can, and keeping us united and pushing westwardly as rapidly as we can. I think that in that way we shall get the road built more speedily than we possibly can in any other way, and get the desire of the whole country accomplished. I am decidedly in favor of the second section of the bill, which will authorize the Pacific Railroad Company to approach us from the West as rapidly as they can, to remove all obstructions from them; and then, I think, if we keep all the strength of these three branches in the eastern portion of the country united, we shall push from the East to the West more rapidly than if they are dis-united.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Michigan who has this measure in charge whether this is a proposition to run two Pacific railroads as far as Denver City, and then what information the committee has that a suitable connection can be made after you pass that point; or whether it is the intention to continue this road in a southwestern direction, and thus have two roads to the Pacific coast. What is the purpose and the information before the committee on the subject of a connection of the roads after you have passed Denver City?

Mr. HOWARD. If the Senator will have the goodness to repeat his inquiry, and to raise his voice, I shall apprehend it more distinctly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will do so. I desire to vote for any proposition that will secure a more favorable route for this great work; but the committee, I believe, has not accompanied this bill with a report of the facts. A measure of such grave importance, it seems to me, should have been accompanied by a report of the facts calling for this important change. I understand the law as it now stands to establish the road, making Fort Riley a point, and then the intersection of the one hundredth meridian with the northern line as another point. It is proposed to abandon that point on the one hundredth meridian, and to extend the southern branch in a western direction from Fort Riley to Denver. Now, I want to know of the Senator whether the Kansas branch or road is to connect with the Omaha road at any point west of Denver City, and what information the committee has on the practicability of such a junction; or whether it is the purpose to extend this Kansas branch westward, and to make it an independent Pacific railroad.

Mr. HOWARD. In answer to the Senator's inquiry, I beg to say that so far as I am informed by the company known as the eastern division, which is the Kansas branch, properly speaking, it is their intention to form a junction with the main stem. It is their purpose to do so. I am not aware that they ever contemplated any departure from that principle, and do not think they ever have entertained such an intention. By the act of 1862 all these eastern branches of the main stem were required to unite with the main stem on the one hundredth degree of longitude. Such was the effect of the act of 1862 incorporating the Union Pacific Railroad Company. But by the act of 1864, amending the original charter of the company, it is provided that any of these branches may unite with the main stem at a point west of the one hundredth meridian, if they shall see fit to do so. In this connection I will call the Senator's attention to the ninth section of the act of 1864. He will find it in the second proviso contained in that section:

"And provided further, That any company authorized by this act to construct its road and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the initial point aforesaid—"

That is the one hundredth degree of longitude—

"may construct its road and telegraph line so as to connect with the Union Pacific railroad—"

That is the main stem—

"at any point westwardly of such initial point, in case such company shall deem such westward connection more practicable or desirable; and in aid of the construction of so much of its road and telegraph line as shall be a departure from the route hereinbefore provided for its road, such company shall be entitled to all the benefits and be subject to all the conditions and restrictions of this act: Provided further, however, That the bonds of the United States shall not be issued to such a company for a greater amount than is hereinbefore provided, if the same had united with the Union Pacific railroad on the one hundredth degree of longitude; nor shall such company be entitled to receive any greater amount of alternate sections of public lands than are also herein provided."

It will be seen from that that the privilege of making the junction at a point west of the one hundredth degree of longitude has been secured to all these companies for some two years past. Now, in regard to the Pacific railway, eastern division, it was required by the statute that that branch, known as the Kansas branch, should locate its route within a given period of time, which period has elapsed, and the object of the first section of this bill is simply to extend to that branch the right of locating its route until the 1st of December next; but the first section requires positively, in express terms, that the eastern division shall form a junction with the main stem of the Union Pacific Railroad Company at some point not more than fifty miles west of the meridian of Denver. They are not, therefore, at liberty to extend their route to a point further west than fifty miles west of Denver without forming a junction with the main stem. Whether they will form a junction at that point, or east of that point, is not perfectly certain. It depends upon their interests, of course, at what point they will form the junction; but they are required positively, by law, to form the junction, so that the eastern division may operate at all times as a feeder to the main trunk, the Union Pacific railroad proper. The first section, as amended, contains further language guarding against any misconstruction of existing statutes upon the subject. It declares—

That said company shall be entitled to only the same amount of the bonds of the United States to aid in the construction of their line of railroad and telegraph as they would have been entitled to if they had connected their said line with the Union Pacific railroad on the one hundredth degree of longitude, as now required by law.

So it gives to the eastern division, in reference to subsidies, precisely the same right that it always has possessed, and no further right—nothing more. They will not be entitled to a dollar by way of subsidy for any part of their route west of the one hundredth degree of longitude. The committee have been extremely careful so to word the bill as to save to the Government and the public that right.

This explanation, I trust, will be satisfactory to my friend from Iowa, and ought, I respectfully submit, be satisfactory to the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, to strike out the first section of the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope it will not be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question, and declared that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I call for a division.

Mr. HOWARD. I beg to say one word on this subject that we may be informed about it. If the first section of the bill is stricken out, then there no longer remains to the eastern division any right to locate its road in any direction further than it has located it already. It is withholding from that company the privilege of making any further advance in the construction of their road. It puts an end to the whole enterprise.

Mr. HENDERSON. As is stated by the Senator from Michigan who has charge of this bill, if the first section is stricken out there is nothing remaining in the bill. I presume the Senator from Iowa has made this motion in order to test the strength of the bill before the Senate. If it is stricken out there is nothing remaining.

It seems that Senators are not acquainted with the object of this bill. I originally introduced it; I presented the proposition to the Senate. It is true the committee have made, in my judgment, some material changes, and with all due deference to the committee, I do not think they have carried out all that I designed by the original bill. But it has been reported back here as the voice of the committee on the subject, and therefore I shall support it as the best I can get; I cannot do anything more. But, sir, let me say, before the Senate comes to any vote upon the proposition, that if this bill is to be voted down in its present shape, I shall appeal to the Senate to repeal all laws providing for any branch of the Pacific railroad from the State of Missouri. I do not intend to present any complaints upon my part against the action of this body or of the other House in reference to the condition of legislation for the building of the Pacific railroad. This is not the proper time to do it. If I were disposed to do it, I could present, I think to the satisfaction of every Senator, very serious grounds of complaint so far as my State is concerned; but this is not the proper time to do it. The Senate has not time to hear it, and perhaps they would not take the time to go back and examine the law of 1862 and the law of 1864 on the subject. It is a long story, and would require a great deal to be said.

I stood on this side of the Chamber in 1862 and appealed to the Senate not to do a great many things that they did do by the bill of the 1st of July, 1862, a few days before the adjournment of the session. They passed the Pacific railroad bill, and they said, we will start the road at the one hundredth meridian, that is, we will start a main trunk there, and build it out to the California line, leaving other companies in Missouri and in Iowa to construct their roads up to that point, and there unite with the main road. I have the map before me, and I hope that any Senator who desires to do so will take it up and examine it. The one hundredth meridian is marked upon it. I appealed to the Senate then to leave the question of the point at which the main Pacific stem should commence an open question. The Senate ruled me down; and in fixing it, you will find by one of the first sections of the act of 1862 that the initial point of the main Pacific road was to begin on the one hundredth meridian between the southern valley of the Republican fork of the Kansas river and the northern part of the valley of the Platte river, and all the other branch railroads that were to be constructed from the States were to unite at about that point. I said, "Let us submit this question of the beginning point to a survey." I think the Senator from Kansas will bear me witness to that, for he now finds that if he had taken my views then he would have been out of the trouble he wanted to avoid this morning by his amendment; but I could not get gentlemen to listen to me. Those chickens have now come home to roost. I said, "Let us fix this thing by absolute survey; let us find where is the best route; let us find where is the best initial point, and let us leave it to be selected between the Smoky Hill valley on the south, and the Platte river on the north." The Senator from Kansas voted with me on that subject. I wish he had stood with me in all my propositions; but we parted company on this St. Jo. branch, and now he wants to get back where I wanted him to be originally.

But, sir, I was voted down, and they said, as the bill was originally reported, that the Iowa roads might build two branches from Iowa, one from Sioux City and one from Omaha; the Omaha route to be fixed by the President. The President did afterward fix it at Omaha. It was to be in that vicinity, and the President fixed it at Omaha. There were two branches to be built from Iowa, and two from my State; but Senators will recollect that when they came to give bonds to the branches from my State, they would not give bonds to but one of the branches. They said the other branch might have bonds for one hundred miles, but there it should stop; and they gave the Kansas branches bonds all the way out just as far as they might want to go. But just before the bill passed, a distinguished Senator from Iowa, who is now Secretary of the Interior, offered a proposition which destroyed the whole original intent of the bill and said that the Pacific Railroad Company proper, the one that was to start at the hundredth meridian and build west to the California line, leaving the Central Pacific Company of California to build up to it, should build the branch to Omaha. That was not the intention originally. The intention was to let the Pacific railroad commence at the hundredth meridian, and other companies from Iowa and Missouri build their roads out to that point; but this amendment was put on requiring the great Union Pacific to build that branch to Omaha; and afterward the legislation of 1864 required that they should forfeit all their privileges as the Pacific railroad if they did not build the Omaha branch, thus making, as far as legislation could go, that Omaha branch the main Pacific road, encouraging that road, when it was constructed, to bring passengers, freight, and everything across that line to the neglect of all other lines.

Now, Mr. President, one of the most energetic men of the West undertook the construction of the line from Kansas City out to the one hundredth meridian. In the mean time, before 1864, a survey was had along up the Smoky Hill fork; and it turned out just as I had predicted in 1862, that on the Smoky Hill there is the greatest abundance of timber, the finest farming lands in the world, just as rich as they can be. The Senator from Kansas, who was interested at that time, will remember what I said to the Senate; and actual survey has demonstrated that it is the easiest route to build. You have fine agricultural lands, the best that can be found anywhere; you build over a country that is full of coal. If you build over the other route, the Republican fork, it is a desert; it is a Sahara, without coal, without timber; a mere sandy plain without vegetation.

Mr. Perry, who is the president of this road, finding that he could reach Denver City one hundred and thirty-four miles nearer, over an easier route, with easier grades, less curves, and could make infinitely a better road, came here in 1864 and proposed to the Senate that they should permit him to build up the Smoky Hill fork instead of the Republican; and what did the Senate do? Senators seem to understand that this is changing the route of the road. It is not so by any means. This is no proposition to change the route of the road. As the distinguished Senator from Michigan, who has charge of the bill, will bear me witness, and as he has already stated, the only effect in the world of this bill is to permit Mr. Perry now to file his plat instead of filing it by the first day of July next. The original act gave him two years within which to file his plat. That act was passed on the 1st of July, 1862. The two years expired on the 1st of July, 1864. In 1864 the Senate will remember we extended the time two years; and now the time will expire July 1, 1866. Mr. Perry has not quite completed his surveys, and wants now until the 1st day of October next. That was the way I introduced the bill. Senators will see by examining the bill that I proposed to give him until the 1st of October to file his plat; but the committee have extended the time to the 1st of December, which is much better than my proposition; but I did not know whether the Senate would grant Mr. Perry that privilege. He is an energetic gentleman, one of the most honest, high-minded, and energetic men of the West, and he is building a road in all sincerity, and is building it rapidly to connect us with the Pacific coast.

The legislation of this body in 1864, as read by the Senator from Michigan, gave Mr. Perry the right to go up the Smoky Hill fork because it had been demonstrated even then to be the better route. Senators will find it in the ninth section of the act of that year, on page 371 of the Laws of 1863-64:

"And provided further, That any company authorized by this act to construct its road and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the initial point aforesaid—

That was between the Platte and the Republican fork—

"may construct its road and telegraph line so as to connect with the Union Pacific railroad at any point westwardly of such initial point, in case such company shall deem such westward connection more practicable or desirable; and in aid of the construction of so much of its road and telegraph line as shall be a departure from the route herebefore provided for its road, such company shall be entitled to all the benefits and be subject to all the conditions and restrictions of this act."

But in 1864 the Railroad Committee did what I thought was very unjust, but yet our company from Missouri had to submit to it. What was it?

"Provided further, however, That the bonds of the United States shall not be issued to such company for a greater amount than is hereinbefore provided, if the same had united with the Union Pacific railroad on the one hundredth degree of longitude; nor shall such company be entitled to receive any greater amount of alternate sections of public lands than are also herein provided."

Now, Mr. President, does this bill injure anybody at all? What injury will anybody sustain in consequence of it? We find that by the Smoky Hill fork we can build a road on a line one hundred and thirty-four miles shorter; and yet gentlemen insist that we must build over the route. Why? It does not cost the Government anything to allow the Smoky Hill route. Here are gentlemen building a road from the State of Missouri west, and they say they can build it by an expenditure of money from their own pockets over a particular route and make it better than to receive $16,000 a mile more and build it over the other line; and yet this Senate deliberately fixed that line.

Mr. President, there are a great many things about railroad building out West. I know that we squander the public lands here. The Senator from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] who has given much attention to these subjects, very properly said the other day that it is very hard to have a couple of roads built almost parallel to each other. Here is a company now to which, by the legislation of this body, you are offering $16,000 a mile to build a road over a certain route, but they say they would rather build it over another route, if you will let them do it, without one cent of your money; and yet the Senate is hesitating about it. That is the sort of legislation here. We are now absolutely trying to say that a company shall not build a railroad from the borders of my State to California without receiving a dollar of Government aid. They ask to build the road over a route on which they will make more money, which will pay better, a shorter line, and over a good and fertile country; and gentlemen are saying they prefer not letting them build at all. You required by your legislation here that the main Pacific railroad should build both the Iowa branches, the Sioux City branch, and the Omaha branch. In 1864 the Iowa branch had become strong enough, and they came here and begged of the Senate to let them off from building one of these roads. The Senate let them off; the House of Representatives let them off; and they now require that the Sioux City branch shall be built by an independent company, going across Missouri, provided it is ever built; but they make it even more obligatory than ever in 1864 over this main Pacific railroad to build the branch from Omaha out. I know it is a very wealthy company now; but I dare say that Mr. Perry will build a road that will accommodate this Government, and he will build it sooner than this wealthy company will build it. He only asks you to give him liberty to build it; and yet some Senators are hesitating, absolutely, to give him the permission out of his own pocket to build a road for the accommodation of the public.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator explain what the dispute is about?

Mr. HENDERSON. If the Senator from Maine will look for a moment at the map which I have here he will see what the dispute is about. The proposition of Mr. Perry is to build a road from Kansas City to Denver.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is one of the branches of the Pacific railroad.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir. The Senator will see marked on this map the one hundredth meridian and the Republican fork. The legislation of 1862 required that the initial point should be fixed between the south valley of the Republican fork and the north valley of the Platte. That was to be the main line. The Omaha branch is marked; the Sioux City branch still further up; the Kansas branch, and also the St. Jo. branch, which my friend from Kansas has charge of. But the St. Jo. branch is to unite within one hundred miles. Mr. Perry is building his road up by the way of Fort Riley, and he is now near Fort Riley. If you do not pass this bill he will be compelled to turn off in a northwestern direction and come up to meet the initial point. If you let him build the road direct, it is one hundred and thirty-four miles nearer, in a direct line, through a fertile country filled with coal and timber; whereas the other is a perfectly barren plain.

But Senators are mistaken when they say that he is required now still to build upon that route, because the legislation of 1864 permitted him to build by this route; but it gave him no more money than if he built on the other route. He failed to file his plat within the time fixed, in order to get good surveys of this route since 1864. We have lost the right simply to file the plat. We might file it now between this time and the 1st of July; we have got time enough to do it; but we want to make further explorations and surveys.

Mr. POMEROY. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to ask if no plats have been filed upon that route.

Mr. HOWARD. So far as this company is concerned, it is merely a question of further time to locate their road. That is all there is about it.

Mr. POMEROY. Two plats have been already filed.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from Maine asks me what is the main question, and he asks me further whether Mr. Perry now has the right to go to Denver instead of going to the one hundredth meridian by the Republican valley. I will read the proviso to the ninth section of the act of 1864. He was formerly required to go up the Republican, but the law was amended in 1864; and the proviso to the ninth section is in these words:

"And provided further, That any company authorized by this act to construct its road and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the initial point aforesaid—

That is on the one hundredth meridian—

"it may construct its road and telegraph line so as to connect with the Union Pacific railroad at any point westwardly of such initial point, in case such company shall deem such westward connection more practicable or desirable."

Instead of forcing us up the Republican, Congress gave us permission to go by the Smoky Hill route in 1864. What I objected to in the legislation of 1864 was this other proviso that was put on:

"Provided further, however, That the bonds of the United States shall not be issued to such company for a greater amount than is hereinbefore provided, if the same had united with the Union Pacific railroad on the one hundredth degree of longitude; nor shall such company be entitled to receive any greater amount of alternate sections of public lands than are also herein provided."

They permitted Mr. Perry to build by this route, but gave him no more money than he would have received provided he had united with the Union Pacific road on the one hundredth degree of longitude.

Mr. BROWN. And no more land.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is a question of construction. I do not know about that. I suppose the Senate would not wish to deny him lands over this route. We have considered and passed this morning a bill to build a road from Oregon to Salt Lake to unite with the Union Pacific road. Why not grant lands to this road? It is in the direction of New Mexico, and we are now paying millions of money to carry the mails from the Missouri river to New Mexico and all that section of country.

Mr. CONNESS. And military supplies.

Mr. HENDERSON. Military supplies and everything of that character. If Mr. Perry continues this road out to a point near Denver, he is within four hundred miles of the city of Santa Fé; and on that route there may be a road constructed in the course of a few years, because Mr. Perry is going to put this road through, whether you give him a dollar or not. But I am complaining of the injustice that will be perpetrated in this railroad legislation against my State. We only ask now that the Senate shall give us land; we do not ask for a dollar of money. We ask to be permitted to build this road out to Denver, on a direct line, and then to unite with the Pacific road, because the Pacific road must follow the Platte and then come nearly together. Why compel him to go up the Republican fork and then south again in order to come to this point?

I do not know what the construction of the act of 1864 is as to the grant of lands. It will certainly give him land just as many miles up the Smoky Hill as it would if he had come to the point provided for in the act of 1862. It is fifty or sixty miles further. I do not know whether it gives him land all the way out; but it would be only just to give him the land, for he is building on a route that will soon enable the Government to transport its mails and munitions of war to a most important part of its territory, New Mexico.

But, sir, this bill is only intended to give him a little further time within which to file his plat. There is nothing else effected.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will state to the Senator one idea I have about it. Perhaps it may seem to him to be very incorrect. Lands are taken for all these routes. The idea of the original bill was to unite on the one hundredth meridian, and then there was to be a single road from that point. Then, so far as the lands of the Government are concerned, all they take is up to that point, and from that point onward. But now, if you start at another point, it will require still more lands. My idea is that, however interesting it may be to individuals, it does not follow that it is the same thing to the Government to give lands to three or four or half a dozen roads, when the object was to have one main line to California. But individuals still say "We can do better," and the consequence is more land is taken. Gentlemen from the West say it is no sort of consequence how much land is taken.

Mr. HENDERSON. We charge the settlers $2 50 instead of $1 25 for all the remaining sections.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not know whether the Senator from Missouri is right or not. I confess I was not aware of the legislation of 1864 in this respect. I supposed, when I made the motion which I did make, that the law still required the junction of these branches, as they are called, at the one hundredth meridian, but I find the act of 1864 provides that this branch shall be allowed to come into the main road wherever it pleases west of the one hundredth meridian.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator from Iowa will allow me, I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri one question in regard to the junction of the road. I understand that the original law required the junction to be at the one hundredth meridian, but between the Republican fork and the Platte river.

Mr. HENDERSON. That was the act of 1862.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, sir. Now, the act of 1864 allows the junction at a point west of the one hundredth meridian, but it does not repeal that portion of the law of 1862, as I understand, which requires the junction to be between those two rivers. So I am not sure that the Senator is exactly correct in his construction of the legislation up to this time.

Mr. HOWARD. That is necessarily repealed.

Mr. HENDERSON. It must be so, because this whole legislation is in perfect conflict with that act. It permits them to unite with the Pacific road at any point west.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is so; but the legislation of 1862 required a junction at the one hundredth meridian between these two rivers. The legislation of 1864 simply allowed the junction west of the one hundredth meridian, but does not cease to require the junction between the two rivers.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose the rivers do not extend so far?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Suppose they do not extend to the one hundredth meridian? I do not know whether they do or not.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Republican river extends to the frontier, west of the one hundredth meridian. The head of it is a little west of the one hundredth degree of longitude. I will state that there can be no question about the justice of this bill, that is, so far as the Government is concerned. It is very unjust to my State, very unjust to the parties who are building the road, in my judgment, to say that they shall be entitled to no subsidy from the Government, while there are two roads above that you subsidize with land and money. I can see no reason for it. This is just as important, and much more important than any other road. It is one hundred and thirty-four miles nearer, by actual survey, and through a better country. I apprehend there can be no objection to it. It is asking nothing beyond what was given by the act of 1864, except to give these parties a little more time to designate the route; because the lands are reserved, and you must recollect it is not built to within one hundred miles of the mouth of the Republican river yet; and this applies to the country east of the river as well as west. Therefore I hope you will give them the privilege to file their map by the 1st of December. The Omaha branch has not yet filed its map, and the main Pacific road has not filed its map.

Let me state one thing further to the Senate. This initial point was to be fixed by the President of the United States, and he has never yet fixed it. Then how is it possible that we can make out a map with anything like a perfect and correct idea of where we are going to? Mr. Lincoln never fixed the initial point, and Mr. Johnson has never fixed it. It is within the discretion of the President to fix it where he chooses; and until it is fixed, why require Mr. Perry to file his map? Let him assuredly have until the 1st of December to file it. There can be no objection to this legislation.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Mr. President, this road is the road the stock of which General Fremont at one time became possessed of in some way; but it is now in the hands of a company of practical railroad builders who have contributed their own money and undertaken to build the road, with the aid and assistance, of course, of the Government grant. The president of this company brought a letter to me from St. Louis—out West they sometimes mistake me for a railroad man. He explained the whole subject and their organization. I find that I have a friend in the organization, a Mr. Shoemaker, who is the engineer of the road, and is engaged as one of the contributors to it, and is a very excellent engineer and practical railroad builder. He explained to me the route up the Smoky Hill fork and the advantages of it to them as a company. I came to the conclusion that that was the only route the Government of the United States ought to let them build a road upon. The other route is a line where there is no timber or material to operate a road; it is through a desolate country. Up the Smoky Hill fork they get through a fine wooded country; they reach through fine coal-beds where they will be able to get the material to operate the road in all time to come, and operate it cheaply.

Then Mr. Shoemaker represented to me that it is shorter to Denver City by more than one hundred miles. Of course the Government would save the lands donated for that additional hundred miles, and the bonds it contributes to it to that extent; and then the road would be worth something and it could be operated after it was built; whereas if it was built upon the other route there would be no materials to operate it; and no through business that will ever come from California will pay for operating these roads unless they can get aid and assistance from the country through which they run. I thought it was very desirable, too, in this connection, that they should get to Denver City one hundred miles nearer than by the other route, because when they reach Denver City they reach the mining region, and we should begin at once to draw advantages from the expenditure that the Government is making in relation to these roads.

I came, then, to the conclusion, and I firmly believe it now, that the Government ought not to let this road be built on any other route than up the Smoky Hill fork; and I am, therefore, against striking out the first section of the bill, which gives them further time to file their plat; it is only a continuation of the privilege Congress have given them to make the junction west of the one hundredth meridian. I am not as familiar as some other gentlemen here with the legislation of Congress upon the subject. I cannot tell what the local interests may be, but the great public interest is that this road should be built where it can be operated and made of some use to the country; and if it is not made at that point, it is useless to make it at all. I do not wish to detain the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The object of my inquiry of the chairman of the committee was to ascertain the facts about this matter. It is a very important measure, which, I think, should have been accompanied by a report, giving us all the facts; but upon the confident statements which gentlemen make I do not feel free to vote against it, although I do not feel entirely satisfied that the information we have is such as we ought to have upon a question of this magnitude. It will eventually involve the expenditure by the Government of the ordinary amount for the construction of this road out to the junction beyond Denver; but as it is stated here that the road on the route now required will pass through a barren country, which would furnish no business for it, and that the proposed route will pass through a well-watered, rich, fertile country, supplied with coal and timber, I cannot vote against the measure on such confident statements of the facts by Senators. I wish, however, to suggest that there will arise the question of the rights of the Hannibal and St. Jo. railroad extension. That road is now provided for with a connection at some point out in the wilderness. What connection can it make if we make these two roads parallel instead of giving this road a northwestern direction, so as to form a junction?

There is that difficulty which we shall have to meet. The Senator from California has said we shall meet it in a liberal spirit toward that company. What that will eventually require I do not know. In my judgment, it will require something. We shall have to give that road a junction. Men have put their money into it; they have built a portion of it, as I understand. They certainly have some claims on the Government now to see to it that they shall have a junction that is valuable to them; and if at the end of the hundred miles that we have now provided for, because of the present legislation, they find no possible junction, but have to turn in a northwestern or southwestern direction to form such, I apprehend the Government will have to enable them by material aid to make such a junction. I give my vote understanding the full responsibilities of the questions, as I believe.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, in regard to the forming of a junction with the main stem, I beg to say to the Senator from Indiana that there is an express provision contained in this bill requiring such a junction. In the first section in the last proviso you will find these words:

That said company shall connect their line of railroad and telegraph with the Union Pacific railroad, but not at a point more than fifty miles westwardly from the meridian of Denver, in Colorado.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I observed that this provides for the main trunk from some point west of Denver to the California State line, with double branches from Omaha to that point and from the Missouri river on the south also to that point; but how is the Hannibal and St. Jo. extension to form a junction, and where?

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from Michigan will permit me to answer the Senator from Indiana. The Senator from Indiana will see by section thirteen of the original act of 1862 that he is mistaken. It provides—

"That the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company of Missouri may extend its roads from St. Joseph, via Atchison, to connect and unite with the road through Kansas, upon filing assent to the provisions of this act, upon the same terms and conditions, in all respects, for one hundred miles in length next to the Missouri river, as are provided in this act for the construction of the railroad and telegraph line first mentioned, and may for this purpose use any railroad charter which has been or may be granted by the Legislature of Kansas."

Therein I said in 1862 that I complained. It only permitted the Hannibal and St. Jo. Railroad Company one hundred miles to get to the Kansas City branch, the one we are now talking of. It was to reach it within one hundred miles of the Missouri river. The Hannibal and St. Jo. branch will be left out in the wilderness, for it cannot unite with this branch except within one hundred miles of the Missouri river, and it is four hundred miles to the initial point, or three hundred and eighty miles anyhow. But they have the very same advantage as to a connection that they always had; they can go down one hundred miles. But in 1862 I got a proviso put on that, because I thought that was very unjust to that road, and the proviso is to permit them to unite with any of the other roads coming from Iowa or elsewhere. I struggled with the Senate to let it go directly west, but I was overpowered, and I finally got this proviso put on:

"Provided, That if actual survey shall render it desirable, the said company may construct their road, with the consent of the Kansas Legislature, on the most direct and practicable route west from St. Joseph, Missouri, so as to connect and unite with the road leading from the western boundary of Iowa, at any point east of the one hundredth meridian of west longitude, or with the main trunk road at said point; but in no event shall land or bonds be given to said company, as herein directed, to aid in the construction of their said road for a greater distance than one hundred miles."

That, instead of leaving them in the wilderness, permits them to unite with the Omaha branch at any point they choose, or with the main Pacific road on the one hundredth degree of longitude, or they may unite with the Kansas branch as originally contemplated within one hundred miles. Therefore they have the same privilege they always had.

Mr. POMEROY. I think I can explain this matter in a moment. I do not want to occupy the time of the Senate. Though the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company had the right to build a branch under the provisions of the act, they had to use a charter to be obtained from the Legislature of Kansas, from the fact that a company in one State could not be authorized, even by act of Congress, to build in another State except with the consent of the State and by using a charter of that State. The law says that they shall have land and bonds for only one hundred miles. It does not say that they shall not build any further, as the Senator seems to claim. This company located its road and filed its plat on the Republican.

The Hannibal and St. Jo. road had notice then, and all the world had, that this company was going up the Republican. They then filed their plat out to the Republican to meet this company and went on building their branch road. They are grading the sixty-fifth section to-day on that line to the Republican. They had the right to connect with them anywhere, but were not to have bonds or land for over one hundred miles. They chose to connect on the Republican; they are building in that direction, claiming that they have the right to connect there, and there is no doubt about it; and a change from that route to the other involves further legislation for that company to enable them to connect somewhere else. That is why that company have been opposed to any change, because they were satisfied with the legislation as it was; and if the other route is taken, the Smoky Hill route, it requires further legislation to enable them to connect somewhere else.

Mr. WILSON. If I understand this matter correctly, in 1862 it was agreed that these several routes, two or three of them, should unite east of the one hundredth meridian. This, of course, would require the branch road named in the first section of this bill to go up the Republican fork. In 1864 an act was passed by which provision was made that they might take another route.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator is mistaken in that. The legislation of 1864 allowed them to continue beyond the point of the one hundredth meridian by running on the valley of the Platte or the valley of the Republican, but did not allow them to change outside of the Republican valley or Platte valley. It did not change the route, but only allowed the point of junction to be beyond the one hundredth meridian, still confining this branch to the valley of the Platte or the Republican.

Mr. WILSON. It did not allow them to take the route they now propose to take, did it?

Mr. POMEROY. No, sir.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator is right in his construction, it shows that the act brought in here by the Senator from Missouri to justify this bill does not permit this company to go up the Smoky Hill fork.

Mr. POMEROY. I ought to say that they applied to the Secretary of the Interior for leave to change their route and withdraw their plat on the Republican, but the Secretary of the Interior decided that they could not do it. The matter was referred to the Attorney General and he confirmed the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, holding that they could not change their filing from the Republican without an act of Congress, having once filed a plat and other parties having obtained vested rights consequent upon it. That is why this bill is brought in, to enable them to do what they cannot do without an act of Congress.

Mr. WILSON. We shall understand now why this bill is brought in here. In my opinion this legislation is entirely wrong, and we should have no legislation whatever in regard to this road. I think it is time the matter was settled. This is a disturbing bill, a bill calculated to disturb the construction of the Pacific railroad. If I understand the state of things correctly, the Union Pacific Railroad Company have already expended $16,000,000 in building their road; they have completed one hundred miles of their road; they have graded another one hundred miles; they have bought iron for three hundred miles of road.

Mr. HENDERSON. You mean the branch road from Omaha.

Mr. WILSON. I mean the road from Omaha. They have mortgaged their road over the whole line. They are now engaged in trying to borrow $20,000,000 in Europe on a first mortgage, and they have assured the capitalists of our country and of other countries that no legislation would be had in this matter. They claim that they have vested rights over this road; that they have put their money in it; that they have borrowed money on it; that they have received from the Federal Government only $1,040,000, and have raised and expended and agreed to pay into this road $16,000,000; that they are ahead of their time now, and are the only company that are ahead in that particular. These are the statements they make.

I believe these statements to be true. I believe these people have entered upon the construction of this road in good faith, and that it is a violation of their rights to pass the first or the second section of this bill. It was agreed here that the California Pacific Railroad Company should come one hundred and fifty miles east of the line of California. Now it is proposed that they may come just as far east as they please. They cannot get one hundred and fifty miles under four or five years.

Mr. CONNESS. How does the Senator know that?

Mr. WILSON. I am informed that that is the fact.

Mr. CONNESS. You are informed wrongly, sir.

Mr. WILSON. That may be true; but the information comes from gentlemen who understand this whole matter quite as well as the Senator from California.

Mr. CONNESS. We will see about that.

Mr. WILSON. How much of their road have they built? How near the California line are they?

Mr. CONNESS. I will not disturb the Senator further, but he will be replied to. I wish the Senator to get through and we shall see how much he knows about the subject.

Mr. WILSON. Well, Mr. President, I asked the Senator a question, and I have not received an answer. My statement is that the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California were required to build twenty-five miles a year; that they were allowed to come one hundred and fifty miles this side of the line of California; that they have not reached the line of California; that they will not reach it under two or three years; that it will take two or three years to complete the one hundred and fifty miles now allowed. I may be mistaken in this matter, but I have the information on very good authority.

It is not for us to legislate here for any particular localities nor to take care of anybody's special interests. Here is a road commenced at Omaha, approved the 1st day of last October by the President—

Mr. STEWART. Whose fault is it that it was not approved three years before?

Mr. WILSON. It was approved last October. Since that time they have built one hundred miles of that road, and have that many miles now completed. They have graded another hundred miles; they have purchased the iron and the ties for three hundred miles of the road and are proceeding with their business. They are endeavoring now to borrow $20,000,000 to put in and to complete it. And now, sir, you propose to take this Kansas branch road and make it for two hundred miles or more (instead of a part of that road as now required) a competing line, to run it away to the south to connect beyond Denver. That is the proposition, to make it a competing line, instead of uniting east of the one hundredth meridian of longitude and being part of the same road. There is not a man in America who believes that investments in the main trunk, it being assumed that the line from Omaha is to be the main trunk, are as safe as they would be without this legislation, or who believes that this legislation can contribute to the rapid completion of the Pacific railroad which we all desire. For that reason I am in favor of striking out the first section of this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. I say that the company of which he speaks, the main Pacific Railroad Company, has subsidy enough to build the road without taking one dollar from its pocket. It is all moonshine to talk about their borrowing money. The Government gives money enough to build that road.

But I ask the Senator, if that company cannot build their road with the Government subsidy, how is Mr. Perry to build this branch out to Denver without any Government subsidy at all, out of his own pocket?

Mr. WILSON. I cannot tell how Mr. Perry is to do it, and I do not suppose anybody knows whether he can do it. The Senator says he will do it. They have not yet done any of these things.

Mr. HENDERSON. He has built more road than the Omaha branch has built. He is further west now than the Omaha branch, and the Senator says that company has expended $16,000,000.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator is here now asking for this legislation because they have not yet filed their plat.

Mr. HENDERSON. Neither have you. If any plats were filed, we were just as prompt as the other road. The other road had the very same legislation in 1864 that we had, giving them further time.

Mr. WILSON. I think they had better rest on the legislation they have already got. If the parties have complied with it, very well; if they have not, let them go. I thought it was very unwise legislation which in 1864 gave them the privilege to go south.

Mr. HENDERSON. What damage does this proposed legislation do to the main Pacific road? I know that there is a great deal of capital invested in that road in the Senator's town; but there is some capital in the Senator's town invested in this other road; but those so investing have not been so noisy, perhaps, and have not attempted to deceive his mind on the subject as the capitalists interested in the Omaha branch; perhaps not so many banking institutions have been established upon it; perhaps no credits mobiliers or credits fonciers have been established on that line; but I can state to him that we have built just as much road as the other company; we have gone further west, and it is a more important road than the other. If this bill is to affect the credit of that company in Europe, it will be simply because for two hundred miles the travel from Denver will be over a separate road instead of being thrown upon the Union Pacific railroad. That is to say, the transportation of passengers and freight between St. Louis and the Pacific will, by this bill, be saved two hundred miles of transit upon the main stem, but after the junction is made it goes over the main stem. That is the only effect it can have. The main road is left with all the money to which it is entitled, with all the means which it has, with all the capital it ever had, and this bill cannot effect its interests except in the way I have just stated.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has remarked that the Union Pacific Railroad Company have executed a mortgage upon their entire line of road, and that their agents are now in Europe for the purpose of negotiating for a loan of money based upon that mortgage. I should be very sorry indeed to see any act passed or any attempt to pass an act which should affect seriously the credit of the Union Pacific Railroad Company in Europe or in this country; I should shrink before such an attempt and be extremely unwilling to be a party to it; but I wish the Senate and the country to be clearly informed upon this very delicate point in their case.

Now, Mr. President, what are the rights of the Union Pacific Railroad Company in reference to mortgaging their line of road? Let us understand it clearly, and let the world understand it clearly, and let us endeavor to prevent any mistake or misapprehension upon a point of so much importance. By the act of 1862 that company was not allowed to mortgage its road at all. The following was the language of the statute:

"That for the purposes herein mentioned, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon the certificate in writing of said commissioners of the completion and equipment of forty consecutive miles of said railroad and telegraph, in accordance with the provisions of this act, issue to said company bonds of the United States of $1,000 each, payable in thirty years after date, bearing six per cent. interest per annum—said interest payable semi-annually—which interest may be paid in United States Treasury notes or any other money or currency which the United States have or shall declare lawful money and a legal tender, to the amount of sixteen of said bonds for each section of forty miles."

They were required by that act to complete a section of forty miles before they were to receive any subsidy from the United States, and on the completion of each section of forty miles they were to receive $16,000 per mile in Government bonds as a subsidy. By the act of 1864, section ten, the law upon the subject has been modified, and reads in this way:

"That section five of said act be so modified and amended that the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and any other company authorized to participate in the construction of said roads may"—

Here is the language to which I desire to call the particular attention of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts—

"may, on the completion of each section of said road as provided in this act and the act to which this act is an amendment, issue their first mortgage bonds on their respective railroad and telegraph lines to an amount not exceeding the amount of the bonds of the United States and of even tenor and date, time of maturity, rate and character of interest with the bonds authorized to be issued to said railroad companies respectively."

It will be seen by this that in the act of 1864 the right to mortgage their railroad was granted to the company; but they are actually restrained by the very terms of that act from executing any mortgage upon their road except by sections as they shall be fully completed. By this act the company are bound before they can execute any mortgage upon their road to complete the sections which are covered by the mortgage. How much of the main stem have they completed? Not a rod; not an inch. They have, as I have been credibly informed, completed the most of the Omaha branch, which is a mere branch road but subject to the same provisions. They have, beyond all doubt, a right to mortgage that branch; but they have not a right according to my humble judgment to mortgage a single foot of any other line of road which belongs to them; and if they have made a mortgage covering, as the Senator from Massachusetts tells us, the whole of their line of road and taken it to Europe and endeavored to borrow money upon it, they have, according to my judgment, acted by no means in accordance with the plain provisions of their charter.

Mr. CONNESS. It would be a fraud if they had done it, but they have not done it.

Mr. HOWARD. I say nothing about fraud; I am simply talking about their power under their charter, and I say that under the charter of 1864 they have no right to mortgage a single foot of their line upon which the road has not been completed and put in running order. It would, however, to be unfair for me to stop at that point; and I beg leave to refer the Senate to a subsequent act passed March 3, 1865, which provides that "the said companies are hereby authorized to issue respectively their bonds to the extent of one hundred miles in advance of a continuous completed line of construction," so that under the law as it exists at present they have a right undoubtedly to mortgage their road to the extent of one hundred miles in advance of their continuous completed section and no further.

How, then, I ask the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, is it that that company has executed a mortgage upon its whole line, and taken it to Europe and offered it as a security for a loan of money? I have heard of this before; it may be so possibly; I will not deny the existence of the fact; but I call the serious attention of the Senate to that fact, if it shall turn out to be such, as one which, according to my idea, is in violation of the charter of the company. I should dislike exceedingly to see it turn out to be true that they had placed such a security in any of the markets of Europe as a basis for a loan of money.

Another word, sir. By the terms of the charter of the Union Pacific Company they should by this time have raised by regular assessments upon their stockholders a sum of not less than $20,000,000 for the purpose of carrying on their work. We have a right, therefore, to presume that the stockholders have already contributed out of their private pockets at least the sum of $20,000,000 for the purpose of carrying on this work. I am not able, therefore, to see, I confess, the necessity of their going into the markets of Europe or of this country with such a mortgage, especially as has been described to us, for the purpose of borrowing money. It is said that they have paid out some sixteen million dollars in the prosecution of their work. If that be so they ought to have $4,000,000 on hand, honestly paid in by the stockholders, now.

Mr. CONNESS. I was a little astonished to hear the honorable Senator from Massachusetts make the statements that he did. I am well persuaded that if the Senator understood the case closely by his own investigations, he would not have made those statements. I know whence the statements come, because they have come before us in the same words but in another form. It is enough for me to say that while I believe the Senator was, of course, under the impression that they were correct, they are entirely incorrect.

First, as to the execution of mortgages as alleged by the Union Pacific Railroad Company over its entire line. I cannot say, of course, that they have not executed such mortgages, but it has been shown by the chairman of the Pacific Railroad Committee that if they have, they have simply violated the law, and the securities they have given to any such creditor or creditors, or securities obtained by that means, are very bad securities indeed.

Mr. President, I only rose to correct one or two of the errors that the Senator has fallen into or been led into by others. He alluded to the Central Pacific Railroad Company. I think the Senator might have consulted some of us who, perhaps, know all about what that company have done and are doing before he undertook to state what they had or had not done. That company, let me say to the Senator and the Senate, have been engaged, as gentlemen can ascertain from the Interior Department, to which now all the information connected with the carrying on of the Pacific railroad and all its branches comes, with the most remarkable energy, with an energy and means superior to any other company engaged in constructing any part of the Pacific railroad since they began, and the results that they have produced have won not only the admiration of the people of the State in which they are constructing their work, but the admiration of the Interior Department, who superintend that work.

The Sierra Nevada mountains, than which there is no impediment like them on the whole route of the Pacific railroad and all its branches, and which were regarded as an insuperable objection for a long time to the construction of the Pacific railroad, have been not only successfully overcome, but, as I said before, the manner in which that obstacle has been overcome has secured the admiration of all who have been witnesses of the great feat that has been accomplished. I hold in my hand now a letter received this morning dated Sacramento, California, May 23, written by the secretary of state of that State, containing a paragraph relating to what that company are doing. It is a very short one, and I shall be excused for reading it: "The railroad," meaning the Central Pacific railroad, "is being pushed ahead with great vigor. They have now over nine thousand men employed. The cars will be running to Dutch Flat, seventy-five miles from Sacramento, in twenty days," which is before this time. Besides that, the work is being done upon their line over and across the summit of the Sierra Nevada mountains. Enough for that.

Now, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, and I know he is a candid man, whether, if the second section of this bill shall pass, in case the Central Pacific Railroad Company should not be able to build as fast as I say they will, it will hinder the Union Pacific Railroad Company, in any respect whatever, from going with their road to the State line of California? I am sure I know the answer of the Senator, because it must be that it will not. The section provides that the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall build until they meet a completed continuous line of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and then it provides that the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California shall build until they shall meet a continuous completed line of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. Does the Senator not want that? Does the Senate not want that? Does the country not want that? Have we passed a Pacific railroad bill and made these mighty appropriations of the public treasure that a line across the continent shall be secured to a company, none other being allowed to build the road over it? Certainly not. And in the act that gave these great bonuses to the Pacific railroad companies for constructing that great work, it was provided that the Union Pacific Railroad Company should not only construct to the eastern State line of California provided the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California had not reached that point, but that they should construct through the State of California until they should meet the Central Pacific Railroad Company; and that was the law until in 1864 a change was produced in the law of this kind, namely, that the Union Pacific Railroad Company should build continuously westward, but the Central Pacific Railroad Company should build no further eastward than one hundred and fifty miles east of the east line of the State of California.

Mr. President, I ask the attention of every Senator in the Senate to the statement I am now about to make, and I challenge contradiction of it. How did that provision of law obtain? How did it come to be the law? I will tell you, Senators. In 1864 the Senate passed a Pacific railroad bill; I had a copy of it before me this morning. The House of Representatives passed another. The Senate refused to pass the House bill, and the House refused to pass the Senate bill; and the matter was referred to a committee of conference upon the questions of disagreement. In neither of those bills did this arbitrary condition that I have named, confining one of these great companies to one hundred and fifty miles east of the California line, occur. It was not in either bill; there was not a word or a tittle of it in either. I was a member of the conference committee. We met in the room of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate. The honorable Senator who is now Secretary of the Interior was chairman of that conference. I sat there pending that entire conference. Point by point the differences between the two Houses were arranged and agreed upon, and I undertake to say here that that arbitrary condition now in the law, and in the law when it was printed, never was considered in that conference. It was stolen in through the corruption of some parties and the clerk who eventually made up the report. The report of that conference committee was presented here on the last day of the session and compelled to be adopted without examination. What I state cannot be contradicted, and the Senate and Congress ought to justify itself by a close inquiry as to who dared to make laws for the Congress of the United States.

Now, we propose to correct that, and how? By any inflection or denial of any right to the great Union Pacific Railroad Company? No, sir. There is not a man, woman, or child in the State of California to-day that would not be glad that the Union Pacific Railroad Company should construct the line into the State of California, because their great want, need, and desideratum is the construction of the road; we want the road, and we want to confer as much of the line on either side to each of these companies as they can possibly construct a road over. This is the purpose of the second section. Now, I submit in all candor to my friend from Massachusetts, is there anything wrong in it? Is it not to right a great wrong? Is it not to give the country a Pacific railroad? Who will refuse to do that? I apprehend no Senator will.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, when the Pacific Railroad Company was chartered originally I took some general interest, nothing but a general interest, in the matter, and I have none but a general interest now. I am not certain that I understand the bearings of this bill so well as ought to excite any interest in my own mind. Still I have an apprehension that if this bill passes it cannot fail to be fraught with difficulties, and I therefore propose to submit to the Senate the difficulties laboring in my own mind.

I know that we started in 1862, when this great Pacific railway was chartered, to build a continuous line of railway to the Pacific, the grandest enterprise probably that any nation ever engaged in under the circumstances in which this nation was then involved. I know there was infinite difficulty in fixing the point of departure in the East, and that it grew out of local interests almost entirely, in deciding at what parallel of latitude we should take the departure for the Pacific coast; and in settling that question there was a variety of local interests. There were the Omaha and the Sioux City and the Leavenworth and some other roads, I believe four or five in all, all striving to be the point of departure.

How was it settled? We who took only a general interest of course were not disposed to be influenced by these local considerations. The great object which the bulk of the Senate had was the extension of the road to the Pacific coast and to fix upon a point of departure which should best subserve that general interest, and we tried to overlook the interests and feelings which were peculiar and natural to those who represented, and very properly, those local interests. What did we agree upon? We agreed that there should be a fixed point somewhere from which this road should depart on its way to the Pacific coast, and from which there should be no divergence, and there should be no two interests. We agreed that however these conflicting interests were on this side of the one hundredth meridian of longitude, there should be no conflict of interests beyond. That was the great point in the case. I remember the discussion; I remember the difficulties in agreeing upon it; but it was the solemn judgment of the Senate that the Government ought not to grant its aid to a multiplicity of roads beyond the meridian of one hundred degrees of longitude, but that all these conflicting interests should be made to harmonize and unite on that point to the end that when we reached that point there should be strength enough in what there was behind to put that one main road through to the Pacific. That was the general idea; that was the general interest.

Now, how is it to-day? Is this bill in harmony with that plan? If it is, I am for it. I have some little doubt on that point. If this bill is in harmony with the general plan, if it strengthens this enterprise by dividing at the one hundredth degree, then I am in favor of it, because I am for pushing the road to the Pacific coast as fast as possible and in the best possible manner. I have no doubt I agree in the general purpose of the committee, and it may be that I am entirely wrong in my apprehensions; but let us look a little at the effect of this bill. It certainly contemplates a departure from the general plan, because it is agreed on all hands that instead of one road after you reach the parallel of one hundred degrees you absolutely license two; you authorize two to a certain extent, and we shall see whether or not to the whole extent. Do the committee contemplate two roads instead of one?

Mr. CONNESS. No.

Mr. HOWARD. One road.

Mr. MORRILL. Then let us see whether we shall not be involved in the difficulty, if you pass this bill, in the end of having two roads. Certainly you contemplate two roads to Denver City. That is clear; I hear no dissent from that. It is obvious enough that instead of a departure on the meridian of one hundred degrees, you contemplate now a departure from some point at or beyond Denver City.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator permit me to say a word right there, as I think it is a point which he will like to hear?

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not think it has ever been contemplated that the surveys of the Union Pacific Railroad Company should reach Denver or pass near to Denver at all. Denver is too far to the south to invite them to touch there.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator means the northern branch.

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir; I am speaking of the main trunk. They would probably leave Denver a little to the south and not touch there at all. It will be remembered that Denver has developed since the law was originally passed. A double purpose is now presented, a double purpose is to be served of taking a better route, (as is shown by the investigations the committee have made, and as was stated very clearly by the honorable Senator from Kentucky,) and of giving Denver, that new and thriving place, a connection with the Pacific railroad. It is simply changing the place of junction, pushing it a little further westward, and the committee think, and I believe the Senator himself would say upon a close examination of the whole case, that it would be a change for the better.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not intend to pass any judgment upon that, nor do I intend to argue it, for I have not the facts which would authorize me in doing so, but my inquiry was, whether the legislation contemplated did not necessarily involve, or whether it would not probably lead to the result of two roads instead of one.

Mr. CONNESS. We do not intend to permit two.

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly as far as Denver City it does contemplate two roads. Now, I desire to ask the chairman, for information, what is understood by the Union Pacific Railroad Company in the first section of the bill? What company does that refer to?

Mr. HOWARD. The Union Pacific Railroad Company is the company building the main trunk.

Mr. MORRILL. Then the company named in the first section is the one building the main trunk. That is the company you are conferring this extension upon.

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir.

Mr. CONNESS. That is not the main trunk.

Mr. HOWARD. "The Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division," is the one mentioned in the first section, and that is the name of a corporation created by the Legislature of Kansas, known as the Kansas branch or southern branch. The ancient name of it was the Leavenworth and Pawnee railroad.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask the honorable Senator whether the grant originally made was not to the Leavenworth and Pawnee Railroad Company, and not to the Union Pacific railway?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, that was the name of the corporation to which the grant was originally made. That name, however, was afterward changed by the Legislature of Kansas to "the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division," by a formal act of legislation.

Mr. MORRILL. I now desire to ask the Senator whether that name is not identical with the name by which the Union Pacific Railway Company was chartered by Congress in 1862.

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir; it was not exactly the name.

Mr. MORRILL. What was it?

Mr. HOWARD. The original name was the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. MORRILL. That is the only difference.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL. Now, if the honorable Senator will pardon me I desire to ask him whether the company mentioned in the second section is the same company.

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir; it is not the eastern division, it is the main trunk.

Mr. MORRILL. Is that the only distinction?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the honorable Senator allow me to ask him what company that is?

Mr. HOWARD. The one mentioned in the second section?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWARD. That is known commonly as the main stem or the Omaha branch. This main stem commences on the one hundredth degree of longitude and goes west. It exists by a charter granted by Congress. By that charter the company is authorized to construct what is known as the Omaha branch, running eastward, or rather commencing on the Missouri river and running to the one hundredth degree of longitude and uniting with the main stem on that degree. Does the Senator understand me?

Mr. MORRILL. I understand it now; and it is as I supposed it was. If I am right about it I desire to call the attention of the committee to this point: I submit whether the result of this bill would not be this: the original act contemplated a union of all the branches on the one hundredth meridian—

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL. You have by subsequent legislation authorized what was formerly the Leavenworth and Pawnee branch to diverge from the original point, and now without reference to it to continue its line to Denver, and so on. You now recognize it as the Union Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. CONNESS. No.

Mr. HOWARD. "Eastern division."

Mr. MORRILL. "Eastern division" is simply descriptive, and I suppose the honorable Senator would hardly contend that it had much legal force or effect.

Mr. HOWARD. It is part of the corporate name. That is the only effect.

Mr. MORRILL. Not a part of the corporate name I think the honorable Senator will say if he looks at it.

Mr. HOWARD. The honorable Senator will find it so.

Mr. MORRILL. The query then is, whether, if this bill passes, the provision of the second section does not apply precisely to the provision of the first section.

Mr. CONNESS and Mr. HOWARD. Not at all.

Mr. MORRILL. For aught that I can see it would. It may not be intended to be so, but it looks to me as though if this bill passes, what was originally the Leavenworth and Pawnee branch to run into the general road on the one hundredth meridian will become the trunk, with all the rights, powers, and privileges which were designed originally for the trunk road.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator's perplexity arises undoubtedly from what in his mind appears to be a confusion of names simply, nothing else. The old Leavenworth and Pawnee Railroad Company was chartered by the Legislature of Kansas. The name of it was afterward altered by the same Legislature to "the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division," but it is still the same corporation. The Union Pacific Railroad Company was chartered, as I before remarked, by Congress. Its franchises are to this extent: that it may make a railroad from the one hundredth degree of longitude west to the eastern boundary of California. That is known as the main stem. It was also required to construct a branch, known as the Omaha branch, between the Missouri river and the one hundredth degree of west longitude. The Omaha branch was a mere branch of the main stem, lying north of the "eastern division," but they were all required, as the Senator has very properly observed, by the act of 1862, to unite themselves with the main stem on the one hundredth degree of west longitude. By the legislation of 1864 these branches are authorized to make their junction with the main stem at any point they may see fit west of the one hundredth degree of longitude, suiting their convenience and their interests.

Mr. MORRILL. Does the honorable Senator doubt that under the provisions of the second section the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California would have a right to extend its road or connect with the road to which these privileges are extended?

Mr. HOWARD. Undoubtedly the effect of the bill, if it shall pass, will be to enable the California company to proceed with the construction of its road eastward from the eastern boundary of California until it shall meet the main trunk, that is, the Union Pacific railroad proper, on its progress to the west from the one hundredth degree of longitude.

Mr. MORRILL. That may be the construction of it. That is what they intend, I have no doubt.

Mr. HOWARD. That is what is expressed.

Mr. MORRILL. But it looks to me as if you had substituted the Leavenworth and Pawnee road for the original Pacific Railway Company, and that it will become, under the operation of this act, allowable for the Central Pacific Railroad Company, if that is the title of the California road, to connect with what you now describe as the eastern division, and then become the main trunk.

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator is under an entire misapprehension as to the effect of it.

Mr. MORRILL. But, Mr. President, that was not the principal difficulty in my mind. It was the departure which, it is apparent on the face of this bill, is to be made by this branch. Something has been said about the Omaha branch. I am not particularly informed as to the condition of that road, but I understand that one hundred or two hundred miles of that road have already been made.

Mr. HOWARD. Completed by the Union Pacific Railroad Company according to the requirement of its charter, one hundred miles, and perhaps more. They have made very creditable progress indeed.

Mr. MORRILL. But that is all east of the one hundredth meridian; they have not reached that point yet. Now, sir, the argument that I have heard addressed by those who are interested in that road is that this is a departure from the original plan, so far a departure from it that it is in absolute bad faith on the part of the Government. I believe the honorable Senator from Missouri this morning—

Mr. HOWARD. The Senator will allow me one word as to the "bad faith" of the proposed legislation. If any bad faith has been committed by Congress toward the Union Pacific Railroad Company, it was committed in 1864 when the amendment of its original charter was passed, for that amendment granted to all these branches, the eastern division among them, the right to form their connection with the main trunk at any point they might see fit west of the one hundredth degree of longitude. I do not know how the fact is; perhaps some other Senator may know better than I do; but I have the impression that the Union Pacific Railroad Company consented to that legislation, or expressed no very earnest dissent from it. Certainly it will be new to me to hear now any complaint of bad faith on the part of Congress as connected with the amendment of 1864. The whole policy was then settled. The act of 1864 enabled these branches to diverge from the point at which they were required by the act of 1862 to make their junction with the main trunk. That was, as the Senator has remarked, the original policy of Congress on this subject, but we departed from it, so far as I know, without complaint on the part of the gentlemen connected with the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not allege it and I do not assert it; and if I did I should not be in a condition to prove it. But the argument is that the main stem of this road originally chartered and contemplated was expected to begin at the one hundredth meridian and near the point designated, which is a point many miles north of the present road; that is the road to which the Government has very largely given its endowment. That is to be the main stem, as I understand the chairman of the committee to concede; that is the road to which the Government has pledged its credit and its faith; that is the road in which the Government is most interested; that is the great trunk which reflects the general interest; it is the trunk line to which the Government has pledged not only its credit but its faith, and which it is bound to protect. This other road is but a branch. It would have had the same privileges as the other provided it had built its road in harmony with the original plan. This road which is to commence at the one hundredth meridian, as I understand, has a board of directors with Government officers; in other words, the Government appoints a portion of its directors. Anybody can see that building a separate line beyond the one hundredth meridian is certainly injurious to the general plan, is certainly injurious to the credit of the main road, and will certainly lessen the probabilities of its speedy advance toward the Pacific coast, which we all so much desire.

I hope it may turn out that the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, that has had this subject under its particular care, has given it all that consideration and solicitude which I think its very great importance requires. I have very serious apprehensions that great difficulties will come from this bill.

Mr. STEWART. I did not intend to make any remarks upon this subject; but inasmuch as there is evidently a false impression upon the minds of a great many Senators as to the real situation, it may not be improper for me to say something.

The Union Pacific Railroad Company and its managers have been eulogized. I regret to detract from any part of that eulogy, and I should not attempt to do so if I did not believe that it was the duty of the Senate to watch the managers of that company. If I am not misinformed, the leading man, Mr. Durant, who has charge and is the moving man of that company, was formerly in the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division, and the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division were compelled to buy him out. He delayed them a long while, and for very little road a very large amount of money was obtained by Mr. Durant. Under some kind of contract, Mr. Perry and others loaned money to carry it on and they had to take charge of the road. Something of that kind occurred. At all events Mr. Durant was the manipulating man of the Union Pacific railway, eastern division, until the time nearly expired; and now when those that have been drawn into that enterprise and have invested their money get ready to go on with the work they find that the road which was to be their security is unbuilt, they find the time for filing the map expired, and they come here and ask you to give them time to let them file the map. You have already agreed that they may go beyond the hundredth meridian, and the first section of this bill simply allows them time to file their map. They put their money in the work on the faith that they could accomplish it; but it turned out not to be in their hands but in the hands of some of the managers of the Union Pacific railroad, and there is where the delay comes from. Now, the men who have put their money in this enterprise fairly must be robbed unless they can have additional time to file their map.

A word further as to Mr. Durant, the leader and manager of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. He presents to the committee maps of the road and lands in the State of Nevada. They are willing to change the route after the road crosses the one hundredth meridian. They say they do not know where they will cross the one hundredth meridian, and they are willing to a change there. Of course they do not want any other road built, and they are unable to state where they will cross the mountains; but yet they go within less than two hundred miles of the end of the Central Pacific railroad, nearly fifteen hundred miles from their own work and commence surveying, for what purpose? For the purpose, as they allege, of mortgaging the road in Nevada and Utah to foreign capitalists.

They have no right to mortgage it beyond one hundred miles in advance of construction, and they are not able to locate the first one hundred miles, not having got the initial point for starting the Union Pacific railroad proper, the main stem, and yet they go over into Nevada and survey there to enable them to make a mortgage to English capitalists, as they allege. Are they to be allowed to do this? It is claimed that we shall embarrass them if we prevent them from encumbering, in Europe, this road that they never will build. If they are allowed to do it it will be many long years before we shall have the road built.

Let me tell the honorable Senator from Massachusetts that there has been a good deal of delay in starting the Omaha branch of the Union Pacific railroad. The bill authorizing it was passed in 1862. They have had the ear of legislators and they have manipulated things so that they were not required to commence until last year. They never commenced even on their branch until last fall, and they have built very well since they began. They telegraph constantly that they are building a mile a day, and they say now that they have one hundred and twenty miles built. That is not a mile a day since they commenced last October, but that is doing very well. You will get these telegraphic dispatches as long as Congress remains in session; but let me tell you that that is very smooth, level ground. The ten miles between Colfax and Dutch Flat, any ten miles in that region, is more work than one hundred and twenty miles on the Omaha branch; and let me tell you that the Central Pacific Railroad Company will go over the Sierra Nevada mountains, and that speedily, and they will be desiring to come east, and the people of the Pacific coast are desirous that they shall come east with their road. The people of the nation are desirous that this road shall be built from both ends; and when there is a necessity that the road shall be built from both ends, we find Mr. Durant & Co. unable to locate their initial point, starting on the east and going to the western end, and yet attempting to encumber the western division of the road because the Central Pacific Railroad Company want to come east.

Does a company that will do this and manage and manipulate as this company has been doing, come here with a good grace and ask that they may monopolize this road, and that we shall be prevented from building it? Seventy miles over the mountains have been built on the western end, which is far more work than it would be to build from the Missouri river to the Rocky mountains on the east. I have been over both lines and know it. The Central Pacific Railroad Company had fifty miles built last year when the Union Pacific road had not struck a spade in the Omaha branch. Now, you say that the second section, allowing the Central Pacific Railroad Company to come east, is going to impede your progress. How so? Across the plains the Government builds your road. Sixteen thousand dollars a mile, with the land grant, is more than enough to build it across the plains. There is no harm done in allowing this road to be built from both ends, for that was the original agreement, and the country demands it. If it is not built from both ends it never will be built in our day. There is harm done to the project when a man steps in and attempts by his maps and by coming before Pacific Railroad Committees and claiming vested rights, to prevent another company from building a part of the road, and it is proper that such schemes should be denounced. It is equally important that both ends should have credit; it is equally important that both ends should be encouraged, and I would not make these remarks if I had not seen that there was a want of fair play. If Mr. Durant can go on and carry out his scheme and mortgage the Union Pacific road for its entire length to European capitalists, when he does not need the money, where is the security that he will not spend the money and leave the road unbuilt? I believe he did not succeed in building the road in Iowa; he had something to do with that, and was not very successful. The eastern division was not very successful under him. Now, why encourage him to mortgage fifteen hundred miles of road that he does not intend to build, when he does not need the money, when you give him $16,000 a mile for every mile he builds, and allow him to mortgage the road for $16,000 a mile more for one hundred miles in advance of construction, and give him land enough in addition so that he can build across the plains without any aid from Europe or elsewhere? And after all that you say it is important that this bill should not be passed, so that Mr. Durant can negotiate his mortgages in Europe for the purpose of encumbering roads which other people desire to build and the nation demands shall be built.

This bill is not for the purpose of granting any new right, but for the purpose of carrying out the original design: first, that the main road shall be built from both ends; secondly, that the Union Pacific railway, eastern division, shall have an extension of time within which to file its map, so that those men who have invested their money in good faith shall not be robbed. That is all there is in the bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The people of Iowa are very much interested in the completion of the Pacific railroad. When this bill was presented I did not myself have so much information in regard to the road's prospects as perhaps I should have had; and one object I had in view in making the motion I did was to get the information I have received. At one time during the discussion I was prepared to withdraw my motion, and would be so now were there not a difference of opinion as to a matter of fact.

Mr. CONNESS. What is that?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It is claimed by certain gentlemen that the legislation of 1864 gave to the eastern division of the Pacific railroad, as it is called, substantially what this bill gives to it as to its right to change its route. The Senator from Missouri, the Senator from Nevada, the Senator from Michigan, and the Senator from California, I believe, have all claimed that under the legislation of 1864 the eastern division of the Pacific railroad have the right to diverge from the route laid down by the act of 1862 and go over the precise route indicated by the present bill; and they claim also that the only use of the first section of this bill is to enable them now to file a plat of the new route which they have not done within the time limited by law. Understanding that to be the fact, I was prepared to withdraw my motion. Of course, if the original policy has been substantially departed from in this particular; if the idea of combining all the three branches at a particular point, at or near the one hundredth meridian, has been abandoned; if the idea of keeping united all the interest that built these branches so as to urge the building of the road from the point of union westward, has been abandoned, substantially, and this company has accorded to it already by the legislation of 1864 what this bill would give to it, I would not stand here to delay or deny to it the right to file its plat when it was convenient for it to do so.

But the Senator from Kansas differs from these gentlemen in the matter of fact. He says that under the legislation of 1834, if I understand him, the company is still compelled to follow the route up the Republican river, and that the only effect of the legislation of 1864 is to relieve them from joining the main stem at the precise point of the one hundredth meridian, and allow them to join that main stem as near to that as may be convenient.

Mr. POMEROY. I said precisely what the Secretary of the Interior said in regard to the matter in his report before the committee, that under the legislation of 1864 it was agreed that the law provided that the gateway, as it were, to the mountains should be between the valley of the Platte on the north and of the Republican on the south; but if they desired to extend the initial point beyond the one hundredth meridian, keeping them between these rivers all the time, they might go, and should not have any more land or bonds than if they had connected at that point. That is the way that the Secretary of the Interior, sustained by the decision of the Attorney General, claims that the law now is.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Attorney General gave no opinion on that subject—only about filing the map.

Mr. POMEROY. The Attorney General sustained Mr. Harlan.

Mr. HENDERSON. In regard to filing the plat.

Mr. POMEROY. And in regard to the fact that the plat, in the first place, had been filed, and secondly, that it could not be removed except by an act of Congress.

Mr. BROWN. That is another question.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] has undertaken to show that they had never filed a plat, and that this legislation is to enable them to do so. I did not intend to make any opposition to that, but only to state the fact that they have filed a plat, and that this legislation is designed to enable them to file one on another route. The Attorney General, in his opinion, did not say distinctly whether the law changed the initial point or not. The Secretary of the Interior did decide it, referred it to the Attorney General, and he, in terms, did not in his decision say one way or the other on that subject. The Department of the Interior holds to-day that the legislation of 1864 confines these routes between the valley of the Republican and the valley of the Platte.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. So I understand. There is a very material difference in point of fact.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope the Senator will indulge me for a moment. In saying that I do not mean that I am not or that the people of my State are not glad to have the route changed. I am not talking about that; I do not propose to argue that point; we know very well it is of great local importance to us to have one road or two roads. I am for all the roads I can get through the State. I am not making opposition; I am only stating the fact that it is so held in the Department, and I believe that to be the law; but if we can change it, that is another thing.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It appears, then, that there is really a difference. The Senator from Missouri claims that under the legislation of 1864 the eastern division of the road has the right to go up the Smoky Hill route now.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The Senator from Kansas tells us that the Interior Department and the Attorney General hold otherwise.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Attorney General holds no such thing. The Attorney General never held any such thing.

Mr. POMEROY. The Attorney General did not decide that precise point. Mr. Harlan made it. He did not reverse it, nor decide that precise point in his report.

Mr. HENDERSON. That was not the question before the Attorney General nor before the Secretary of the Interior; and even if it were, I suppose we here are as competent to decide what a law means that we ourselves pass as the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. POMEROY. I will ask the Senator, does not the Secretary of the Interior hold that to be true?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not know. I have never seen the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior. The opinion of the Attorney General was put into my hands in regard to the time of filing the plat. That is all I know about it. The Senator is correct that the Attorney General said that although we had, up to the 1st of July of this year, to file a plat, having filed one plat we could not withdraw that and file another; we were concluded by having filed one, and could not change the route as indicated by that plat.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Was that decision of the Attorney General since 1864?

Mr. HENDERSON. Of course; it was this year. I differ with the Attorney General on that point. Having up to the 1st of July to file a plat, I think we could have filed it at any time up to the 1st of July, and file an additional plat up to that period.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It seems then to stand something in this way: if the construction given by the Senator from Missouri were correct, and this eastern division now had the right accorded to it by act of Congress to take the Smoky Hill route, as it is called, this would be merely a question of whether or not the time for filing the plat should be extended. Then I should have nothing to say.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is all there is in it.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. But that does not appear to be all. It seems that the Secretary of the Interior holds that under the law of 1864 the right of going up the Smoky Hill route is not accorded to them, and they yet must go up the Republican river route; that the only benefit derived by them from the legislation of 1864 is that they are not compelled to unite with the main stem precisely at the one hundredth meridian, but near to it, and still between the valley of the Platte and the valley of the Republican. If that be correct, the question before us under the present bill is whether we shall really change the whole plan laid down when the Pacific railroad was first established. If it be now so that under the law the eastern division cannot go up the Smoky Hill route but is compelled to follow up the valley of the Republican and must meet the main stem near the one hundredth meridian, then this bill asks us to abandon all that and establish a new policy. If that be the condition of affairs, I cannot vote for the first section of the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suppose that the Senator from Iowa is just as competent to give construction to this language as the Secretary of the Interior; I will read him the language of the act of 1864—

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I have read that. Looking at that alone I should be of the opinion of the Senator from Missouri; and yet what the companies may have done by way of indicating an established route, what facts may have occurred that would have a bearing on that, I do not know.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the Senator agrees with me, and the Secretary of the Interior refuses to let the company have the money because he takes a wrong construction of the law, there is very great necessity for Congress giving a construction to it. The Senator says he agrees exactly with my construction. The Secretary of the Interior, who has charge of this thing, it is said, disagrees with us. Now, why shall we not make that plain which has misled the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I think it is a rule of construction always that we look not only to the language of the law itself but to all the surroundings. What those may be I do not know. I should like to read the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior; I should like to know upon what he bases the opinion given by him, as I understand that this company is still confined to the valley of the Republican. If that be the case, if the company is still confined to the valley of the Republican, we are asked to change the whole idea upon which the Union Pacific railroad bill was based. If that idea has been already changed, as the Senator from Missouri claims it has been, then we have nothing to do but merely to give this company time to file their plat. But there is so wide a difference between these two opinions that it seems to me we ought to examine the matter very carefully before we act upon it.

I am decidedly in favor myself of the second section of this bill. If the Central Pacific Railroad Company is able to build more rapidly from the west to the east, or so rapidly that they will be able to get more than one hundred and fifty miles by the time we reach them, I do not see why they should not be allowed to do it. My object is to get the road built as soon as it can be built.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Nevada has deemed it his duty on this occasion to criticize the acts of the directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. It is not my purpose to defend them here. I know but few of them. The gentlemen that I do know are men of individual honor and personal character. General Dix is president of the road, and I take it that no man in the Senate or in the country questions either his capacity or his character. We have five Government directors in the road appointed by the President of the United States. I understand that these are gentlemen of character, gentlemen who may be relied upon. If it would be for the interests of the country to have this legislation, I take it these directors would in some way have indicated to the proper authorities their views on the subject. What have we put these five directors in this company for but to watch over the interests of the whole country in the road? Not a word is quoted here from the directors of the Government in favor of this legislation.

Now, sir, I choose to pay some deference to the opinions of a gentleman like General Dix, the president of this road, and to the five directors appointed by the President of the United States to take care of the interests of the country. If I understand this matter, we incorporated in 1862 the Union Pacific Railroad Company. They were to build from the one hundredth meridian to the State of California.

Mr. CONNESS. Into the State.

Mr. WILSON. We did not intend they should go over the line.

Mr. CONNESS. Yes; it was provided that they might go over the line.

Mr. WILSON. In 1864 we allowed the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California to come one hundred and fifty miles east of the line of California.

Mr. STEWART. There is just where the Senator is mistaken. In 1864 you attempted to prevent us from coming in. The companies, previous to that time, had the right to build as far as they could. The Union Pacific railroad was organized to run to the California State line, and, provided it did not get there at the time the Central Pacific road was built, the Central Pacific road was to come right on to the East, or if the Central Pacific railroad was not built when the Union Pacific road reached the California line, the latter could go clear on to the bay of San Francisco. Neither was limited in the extent to which it might go. Inasmuch as the Sierra Nevada mountains were supposed to be a serious obstacle, it was presumed that the Central Pacific road would not get more than over the mountains by the time the Union Pacific road reached California, or if otherwise, it should have the right to go clear on. In 1864 somebody manipulated, after the manner that has been stated, to cut off the right of the Central Pacific road to come east. We do not object to the right of the Union Pacific road to go west. We want the competition.

While I am on the floor I may be allowed to say further that General Dix's character and no man's character is above the law; and when the law says he may mortgage only one hundred miles in advance of construction, and when the Government gives him money enough to build the road, if he goes fifteen hundred miles beyond the point he has completed and attempts to get a lien upon the line that distance off, under the pretext of borrowing capital in foreign lands, with the view of preventing the road being built from the western end, whether it be General Dix or General anybody else, he is violating the law, and the Senate ought to watch him. I condemn the spirit manifested by this company, when they had not located the initial point on the eastern end, to obstruct the building of the road from the western end and thus delay this great national work for years, under the pretext of encumbering it in foreign lands, when they did not need it to be encumbered at all, when the Government builds it for them almost entirely, when the company are going to have it built by the generosity of the Government and then own it themselves, and tax the people for its use, they being the special favorites of the Government. When under such circumstances they attempt to impede the great highway of nations, I do not care whether it be General Dix or General anybody else, my voice is against anybody who lays an obstruction in the way; and I say the maps that came into the Pacific Railroad Committee were intended as an obstruction, and their letters claiming that the Central Pacific Railroad Company from the west should not be allowed to come east further than one hundred and fifty miles from the Sierra Nevada mountains are an obstruction. It is not true that the Central Pacific Railroad Company cannot come from the western end. The worst part of it is nearly constructed. They can pass Salt Lake and they can meet the Union Pacific railroad very near the Rocky mountains, because they build more railroad on the ground and not so much on paper.

Mr. POMEROY. I am sorry to hear what the Senator from Nevada says in regard to the Union Pacific Railroad Company. I do not believe there is a better company in the United States. I know the men very well. They are men not only of means but of integrity and character, and they are building in good faith. I should like to know the fact about their having mortgaged the road to the Rocky mountains. I do not believe a word of it.

Mr. STEWART. I call for the letter; they say so in that.

Mr. POMEROY. They may have mortgaged, and they had a right to mortgage, their lands; but they can mortgage their road only for one hundred miles in advance of any constructed line. That they may have done, for they have a right to do it; but any insinuation that that company is not honorable and high-minded, and building the road in good faith, and having large means and large capacity, is unworthy of being uttered here or anywhere. They are doing their work in good faith under the law; doing the best they can, and in such a way that they commend themselves to everybody who is aware of what they are doing.

Mr. STEWART. I have the authority of the Senator from Massachusetts for the statement that they have mortgaged the whole line of their road, and they have written to that effect. I have seen several letters saying so.

Mr. POMEROY. I should like to see them.

Mr. STEWART. They are here in the possession of Senators.

Mr. POMEROY. They have a right to mortgage their lands.

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator pretend to say that they have a right to mortgage lands in Nevada?

Mr. POMEROY. No, sir; but such lands as are contained in the grant to them they have a right to mortgage. I have seen no mortgage, and I do not know anything about it; I have not a cent's interest in it; but then I do not like to hear it said that men of the character and standing and capacity of the men who are conducting the enterprise and building the Pacific road, men that I know well, have violated the law, that they have done what they had not a right to do, for the sake of injuring them abroad or at home.

Mr. STEWART. I was not the one that said it in the first instance. I had heard this about a long time. It was stated by the Senator from Massachusetts that such was the fact, and it was claimed as a virtue on their part that they were encumbering in Europe the road fifteen hundred miles in advance of their construction, for the purpose of raising money to build it. It was claimed that they had a right to do it, and it was claimed that it was one of their virtues and that this bill was interfering with their vested rights. When such a violation of the law as that is claimed as a virtue on this Senate floor, is it possible that any company, however powerful, is so influential and so great that a Senator has not the right to get up and protest against the violation of the law which they confess they have committed? Their letters, their maps, confess that they have gone and mortgaged the line to the full extent of within one hundred and fifty miles of the eastern boundary of California, and if they have done so, we had better have a committee of investigation and see if they are going to lie eternally on the path of this road. It cannot be built from one end alone in fifteen years or in twenty years. It is much more convenient to build a portion of it from the western end. There you are nearer the base of supplies, nearer water communication, and the line is already being constructed with great power and rapidity from that end. If it is claimed as a virtue that this company is attempting to monopolize this whole route, the high character of the gentlemen engaged in it is not to prevent a Senator from exposing it when it is blazoned forth in open day here.

Mr. POMEROY. All I say is, that I dispute the fact that they have mortgaged the road any further than they had a right to do under the law.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator does not dispute that they have written letters saying that they have mortgaged it.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not know anything about their letters; but I have such confidence in the men that until evidence to the contrary is produced I shall not believe that they ever mortgaged a rod of the road beyond what they had a right to do, and that was one hundred miles in advance of any continuous completed line. They had the right to mortgage their lands under certain restrictions if anybody would take them. That is all there is in the suggestion of mortgage; and when the Senator asserts that they have mortgaged all the line of the road out to California I do not believe a word of it.

Mr. STEWART. You mean to say that you do not believe they have done it.

Mr. POMEROY. I mean to say that I think you are mistaken about it. I do not think they have done it.

Mr. WILSON. As this company has been brought in question, I send to the desk, and desire to have it read, a statement made by General Dix, the president of the company, which covers several of these points, and I think the Senate ought to hear the views of General Dix on this measure.

The Secretary read as follows:

"I put my opposition to the proposed action of Congress on higher ground—on the ground of vested rights, which Congress cannot impair without a violation of good faith.

"The act of July 1, 1862, to aid in the construction of a railroad from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, was intended to induce the capitalists of the country to embark in the work with their money and their credit. They have done so most liberally, relying on the good faith of Congress not to impair in any degree the inducements thus held out to them. In what manner the company has responded to these inducements will be seen by the following statement:

"1. The amount of money expended and the liabilities already contracted in carrying out the requirements of the act of Congress do not at this moment fall short of $10,000,000, of which the Government has only contributed, by a loan of its bonds, $1,010,000. The company has completed and equipped over one hundred miles of road west from Omaha, on the Missouri river; it has graded one hundred miles more; it has purchased and paid for the rails, ties, spikes, chairs, and equipment for the second one hundred miles; it has purchased iron for the third one hundred miles, and a part of it is now in the course of delivery; it is laying track at the rate of a mile a day, and it has repeatedly laid seven thousand, eight thousand, and nine thousand feet in twenty-four hours. It intends to reach Fort Kearney by the 1st of October and the one hundredth meridian of longitude by the 1st of January next. It has confidence in its ability to do so if Congress will abstain from enactments injurious to its credit and to its securities on which its extensive financial engagements are made.

"2. It is the only company which has not asked an extension of time. It has expended several hundred thousand dollars in surveying and mapping different lines, from the Missouri river to the eastern boundary of California, for the purpose of ascertaining 'the most direct, central, and practicable route.'

"Its first one hundred miles were finished on the 4th instant, and the time prescribed by the act of Congress for completing them is not yet ended. If the existing laws are not interfered with, it will, at the end of another year, be two hundred miles in advance of the point which it is required by that act to reach. Its progress thus far has no parallel in the history of railroads, and the company is prepared to exceed in the future what it has done in the past.

"3. The company is now engaged in negotiations here and abroad for the sale of $20,000,000 of its first mortgage bonds for the purpose of still further accelerating the work and responding to the impatience of the country to see it completed. Some of its bonds have been used in raising money. These bonds are protected by a mortgage on the whole line of the company's road in compliance with the authority given by the act of Congress.

"The opinion of eminent counsel in regard to their validity has been given and sent to France, England and Germany in furtherance of the negotiations referred to. The acts of Congress relating to the road have also been sent abroad, and one of the principal objections the company has had to combat is that Congress might modify these acts and diminish the value of the company's securities; the objection has been treated as chimerical, and the eminent counsel referred to says in his opinion concerning the validity of the company's bonds, and with regard to such a modification of those acts, that 'it is not admissible to reason on the possibility of this being done. It would be of the character of a simple violation of the most clear and express public obligation.'

"The very proposition to make the amendments reported by the committee is most unfortunate. It imperils the success of the company's negotiations. If adopted it would probably defeat them. It would compel the company to begin them anew and on a new basis, and it would be most prejudicial to the interests of the whole community by delaying the completion of the great enterprise in successful progress. Its adoption would work a still greater injury by destroying confidence in the stability of public laws under which pecuniary obligations have been contracted. The credit the company has gained can only be preserved and the speedy execution of the work it is engaged in can only be insured by leaving existing laws unaltered.

"Having stated my objections to any alteration in the act of Congress concerning this company, I proceed to consider the proposed amendments in some of their details.

"The first section would not be regarded in its practical results of material importance as proposed to be amended, if it were certain that its provisions would be carried out in good faith by the Union Pacific railway, eastern division, and that this company would not be delayed in its progress. It is open to the objections I have stated to any alterations of existing laws; and it is feared that if the point in view is conceded, application may be made to Congress at a future session to release that company from the obligation to unite with the main trunk of the Union Pacific railroad near Denver, and for authority to go to the Pacific ocean on an independent line, thus constructing a competing road. All that part of the second section which by implication confines the Union Pacific railroad in its work to 'a continuous and unbroken line,' and authorizes the Central Pacific Railroad Company to continue its road eastward till it meets the former, is in the highest degree prejudicial to this company and dangerous to the great enterprise it is engaged in. It has been for some months in contemplation to establish a rolling-mill on the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains in Colorado, where coal and iron ore have been found in close proximity, for the purpose of making rails and laying track in both directions. The same purpose has been entertained in regard to a rolling-mill in Utah, and examinations have been made with a view to that object. By this means the company would be able to work on three different sections of its road at the same moment and greatly curtail the time required for its completion. The proposed amendment, by compelling the company to confine itself to 'a continuous and unbroken line,' would deprive it of the power of thus accelerating the work by preventing it from dividing its working force, except when temporarily delayed by the construction of a bridge or tunnel.

"It is earnestly hoped that a proposition so much at variance with the interest of the company and the country, and so calculated to counteract and disappoint the public expectation, will not receive the sanction of Congress.

"But the authority given to the Central Pacific Railroad Company to 'continue their road eastward' until they shall meet and connect, &c., is open to still graver objections. It is a legislative interpretation by Congress of a preëxisting act, or it is intended to confer a new authority; in either point of view it can be regarded in no other light than as an invasion of vested rights which this company has acquired under the acts of July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864. All the arrangements of this company have been made on the basis of those acts. To change it would not only impair the value of the very large investments, amounting to $16,000,000, which this company has made, but it would endanger the negotiations referred to, and any other which might be undertaken hereafter, by destroying all confidence in the stability of public legislation. This company raises no question as to the interpretation of existing laws with the Central Pacific Railroad, and will scrupulously respect any rights which the latter may have acquired under them. It only asks that all such questions may be left to be settled when there shall be a practical necessity for considering them.

"The interposition of Congress in the manner proposed by the amendments is unnecessary and uncalled for. The Central Pacific Railroad Company is only required to construct twenty-five miles of road per annum, while this company is required to construct one hundred miles per annum. It must be several years before the former company can complete its road to a point one hundred and fifty miles eastward of the eastern boundary of California; and if there were no legal objections to this branch of the amendment, it would be most unwise on the part of Congress to interpose in any manner between the two companies until it shall have seen which of them is most likely by its diligence and its pecuniary ability to carry out the objects of the grant and to respond most effectually to the desire of the country to see the work completed.

"In conclusion, I desire to suggest that the Union Pacific Railroad Company is the only one in which the Government is represented by five directors appointed by the President of the United States, and that these gentlemen, who are of high standing, who have the public interest alone in view, and who are thoroughly conversant with the condition of the great work confided to the company, would not fail to advise Congress, through the proper department, if there were any necessity for its interposition."

Mr. STEWART. This very worthy individual, General Dix, whom I do not wish to question particularly, pleads for vested rights. He admits that he has got his mortgage. His company forgot vested rights in 1864. The Central Pacific Railroad Company had spent more money on the western end than all that has been spent yet upon the eastern end; they had in the mountains fifty miles of road already completed; and yet his agents, or whoever they were, interpolated into the law of 1864 a restriction on that company that had spent its money under the faith that it might go as far east as its enterprise could lead, he not having stuck a spade in the Omaha branch or the main stem either, not having done a thing toward building the road. Through the means of that conference committee, as detailed by the Senator from California, he or his agents attempted to put a barrier on the western end. He forgot vested rights at that time; and now when we want to get rid of that iniquitous legislation we get a long lecture from that very honorable and that very high-toned gentleman. When he talks about mortgaging the whole line to foreign capitalists, he forgets that the country has a vested right to have this road built from both ends. When he praises himself about his constructing one hundred and twenty miles in four years, he forgets that he did not commence when the law allowed him to commence; he forgets that after he had Omaha selected, after he had quarreled over that a long time and finally got it designated, he wanted to make an ox-bow and spent a year in getting an ox-bow down the river to accommodate some other point, making nine miles in twenty-three additional; waiting nearly a year for its completion. He forgets that it was through his instrumentality or that of his company that they did not commence earlier. He forgets, when he talks about the length of the road he is building, that he is on the plains and this other company is in the mountains.

All we ask is simple justice, and we ask it at the hands of the Senate; we ask it at the hands of General Dix if he has control of this matter. We ask that we shall have a chance. We do not ask it for any particular company, but we ask it in the name of the nation, that each end shall be built as fast as possible, that no man shall put an obstruction in it, and that no man shall claim to own the road or the right to mortgage it.

That is the way the road will be built speedily. All I have stated is proved in that letter and more, and it is the pretenses in that letter, it is the maps they present, it is the claim that they are going on the western end to prevent its being built, that we protest against.

Mr. POMEROY. The letter, I believe, does not say that the road is mortgaged further than they have the right to mortgage it under the law.

Mr. STEWART. The whole length.

Mr. POMEROY. The letter does not say they have mortgaged it the whole length.

Mr. STEWART. It does.

Mr. POMEROY. It only says they have mortgaged it under the law, under the advice of counsel, as they believed they had the right to mortgage it. I will say that they have already completed over one hundred miles. They have the right to mortgage one hundred miles in advance of any completed section. That is two hundred miles. They are already entitled to two million one hundred and eighty thousand acres of land. They have the right to mortgage that. Beyond that I do not think the company have gone; I do not think they have a right to go.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President, I said when I was up before that I did not think the company had mortgaged their whole line. The statement that the company had mortgaged their whole line came from only two sources. It is not contained in General Dix's letter. He is more careful of what he writes. It was contained in a letter received from a gentleman known as Clark Bell, who is some kind of an attorney for the company, which letter was received by some member of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad. He told it, and then the Senator from Massachusetts when he rose first to-day on the subject restated it. I do not think, and so said, that it was a correct statement.

I wish to say, now, and call attention to the fact, though I do not give particular weight to what General Dix says, that his objections to the second section which he discusses do not apply to the second section as now before the Senate. The Union Pacific Railroad Company have representatives here. There are many gentlemen here who have greater investments in the Union Pacific Railroad Company than General Dix has or than Mr. Durant has, and they have been consulted with, and the first draft of the second section that we prepared has been set aside at their instance. We have prepared a section acceptable to them, which they stated that they accepted. It is very different from the section as proposed originally. It contains this proviso: they claimed that they wanted the privilege of working ahead of a continuous completed line; they might want to do that; and so we have made this provision:

Provided, That each of the above-named companies shall have the right when the nature of the work to be done by reason of deep cuts and tunnels—

And there is a trifling verbal amendment there adopted—to work for an extent of not to exceed three hundred miles in advance of their continuous completed lines.

Under this section as it now stands they may engage in doing difficult work for a distance of three hundred miles in advance of a continuous completed line. There can be no reasonable objection to the section at all. I hope we shall come to a vote.

Mr. STEWART. I just wish to read again this clause from the letter:

"The bonds are protected by a mortgage on the whole line of the company's road in compliance with the authority given by the act of Congress."

The whole line of the company's road.

Mr. POMEROY. That is only the completed line.

Mr. STEWART. Then he states that interfering with the other end is interfering with the line he has mortgaged. That is the very thing he complains of—interfering with their mortgage because it is on the whole line of the road. He says interfering with that end interferes with the mortgage, and he says here they have mortgaged the whole line of the road; and that is the statement of a good many.

Mr. POMEROY. It is impossible to mortgage the line of a road that is not located, that is not fixed. They have not even located their line of road. The mortgage has to be recorded in every county through which the road passes, and the definite location must be fixed before they can sell any bonds.

Mr. CONNESS. I have no doubt the Senator from Kansas is entirely right on that subject.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not want it to be understood here that this company have mortgaged all their road before they have even located it.

Mr. CONNESS. I have no doubt the Senator is entirely right on that subject.

Mr. POMEROY. Then I will not say anything more about it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I have listened to this discussion of interference with the charter of the Union Pacific railroad, and the effect this bill will have on them. I believe there is really no interference, and there is nothing in this legislation that Congress may not fairly and justly allow. It is simply to permit this railroad to be carried up the Smoky Hill fork and to join the Pacific railroad beyond Denver City or in that neighborhood. As I said before, I think it is the interest of the country that it should go up the Smoky Hill fork, and that Congress should not expend money in building it in the other place, because if it was built in the other place it could not be operated and would be useless after it was built, while if built up the Smoky Hill fork it will be a useful and beneficial road, and the line could be extended to Denver City and the country enjoy the benefit of it. Therefore I shall vote to keep in the first section, which is the main part of the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think we have had this subject sufficiently discussed, and I hope we shall take a vote upon it. When I was up before I stated that both these companies asked for an extension of time. General Dix says his company did not. By reference to the fifth section of the act of 1864 General Dix will find that he was mistaken, that there was an extension of time granted to the Omaha branch just as there was to the other branch. He says, furthermore, there are vested rights. I will state now that in 1864 there was not a dollar invested in his road. It was unorganized in 1864 when this legislation was passed. Therefore, if there is any investment made it has been since the legislation of 1864, and the first section of the bill cannot interfere with any such investment. I have the greatest confidence in what General Dix would say, but he is mistaken in these particulars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. KIRKWOOD,] to strike out the first section of the bill.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 2, noes 12; no quorum voting.

Mr. CONNESS. I ask for another count. Senators did not understand the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question again. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to strike out the first section of the bill.

The question being again put, there were, on a division—ayes 2, noes 18; no quorum voting.

Mr. CONNESS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. As there do not seem to be any Senators voting with me on this question, if it is not too late I withdraw the motion. I do not want to delay the action of the Senate upon the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment can only be withdrawn by unanimous consent, the yeas and nays having been ordered upon it. The Chair hears no objection. The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to say that I shall vote against this bill principally because I am satisfied that all legislation, after the passage of the original proposition in regard to the Pacific railroad, has had a deleterious effect, and all that we shall pass will have that effect, destroying the confidence of the country and of capitalists in this system of internal improvements. Not recognizing the propriety of this legislation, I vote against it on general principles.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 20, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Conness, Cowan, Cragin, Davis, Guthrie, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Nye, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, and Williams—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Kirkwood, Morgan, Morrill, Norton, Poland, Trumbull, Wilson, and Yates—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Creswell, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Nesmith, Pomerooy, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, and Wright—17.

So the bill was passed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to state to the Senate that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] has been necessarily called away from the city and will be absent for some days. He desired me to request for him a leave of absence, which I now do, for ten days.

Leave was granted.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 276) to establish a Department of Education was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

VERMONT MILITARY CLAIMS.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 166) to pay to the State of Vermont the sum expended for the protection of the frontier against the invasion from Canada in 1864, was read twice by its title.

Mr. POLAND. That is a very small matter, and one that I apprehend there is no need of referring to a committee. The authorities of the State of Vermont undertook to protect the line at the time of the invasion at St. Albans, and it is merely a question of amount. The whole amount claimed by the State is only $16,000 or $17,000. This resolution provides that such sum shall be paid as shall be found to be right on a proper adjustment. I hope the Senate will act upon the resolution at once.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the State of Vermont any sum that may be found due, after the same shall have been audited by the proper officers of the Treasury Department, expended by the State for the defense and protection of the frontier from invasion from Canada in 1864; but the amount to be audited and paid is not to exceed the sum of $16,463 81.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 19, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BORTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

TELEGRAPHIC INDICATOR.

Mr. BIDWELL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings inquire into the expediency of having the telegraphic indicator introduced into the committee-rooms of the House of Representatives, so as to enable the Sergeant-at-Arms to communicate instantly with any one or all of those rooms.

PORTAGE LAKE HARBOR, MICHIGAN.

Mr. STEVENS. I omitted yesterday to do what I had promised the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DRIGGS] I would do. I now ask unanimous consent of the House for the Committee on Public Lands to report back Senate bill No. 193, an act granting lands to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a harbor and ship-canal at Portage Lake, Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior, in said State.

Mr. SPALDING. I object, and call for the regular order of business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now commenced. The first business in order is the call of committees for reports, beginning with the Committee on Banking and Currency.

NATIONAL BANKS IN THE SOUTH.

Mr. BUCKLAND, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, in compliance with the resolution of the House directing the Committee on Banking and Currency to inquire and report to the House whether any order has been issued or arrangement made whereby national banks in the southern States should have preference in the preparation and delivery of their circulation over national banks in other States, made a report; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD TO SALT LAKE CITY.

Mr. PRICE. I am instructed by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad to report back House bill No. 679, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph lines from the Columbia river to Salt Lake City, and to move that it be printed and recommitted. The motion was agreed to.

LAND-GRANT RAILROAD IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PRICE, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, reported back with amendments Senate bill No. 125, entitled "An act granting aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville, in the State of California."

The bill was read.

Mr. SPALDING. I desire the chairman of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad to explain the nature and object of this bill. I would like to know whether this is an original act of incorporation.

Mr. PRICE. When the amendments reported by the committee have been reported and acted on I will make an explanation which I think will be satisfactory to the gentleman and the House.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In section four, line three, strike out "ten" and insert "twenty;" so that the clause will read:

That whenever said Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad Company shall have twenty consecutive miles of any portion of said railroad and telegraph line ready for the service contemplated, the President of the United States shall appoint three commissioners, &c.

In section five, line three, strike out the word "draws," and insert in lieu thereof the word "drains."

In section two, line eight, strike out "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "one;" so that the clause will read:

Said way is granted to said railroad to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said road where it may pass through the public domain.

In section three strike out in lines twenty-three and twenty-four the words "not more than twenty miles beyond the limits of said alternate sections."

In section four strike out in lines fifteen, sixteen, and seventeen the following words:

Then said company shall have a right to select such lands on the line of said road so constructed nearest to the section of said road so completed.

At the end of section four add the following:

Provided, That said commissioners named in this section shall be paid by the company ten dollars per day for the time actually employed and ten cents per mile for the distance actually and necessarily traveled each way.

In section eight, line seven, strike out the word "hereafter" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thereafter."

Add at the end of the bill the following additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That before any land granted by this act shall be conveyed to any company or party entitled thereto under this act, there shall first be paid into the Treasury of the United States the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same by the said company or party in interest, as the titles shall be required by said company, which amount shall, without any further appropriations, stand to the credit of the proper account, to be used by the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the prosecution of the survey of the public lands along the line of said road, and so from year to year, until the whole be completed as provided under the provisions of this act.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to inquire of the gentleman who has charge of this bill what number of acres of land it is proposed to give to this company under this bill. What is the maximum quantity of land to which the company can lay claim?

Mr. PRICE. It is proposed to give the company ten alternate sections of land per mile on each side of the road, provided they can find that much. It is a short road running from the village of Folsom to the town of Placerville, a road that has been constructed principally by individual contributions and by the aid of the county and city. Two hundred thousand dollars have been subscribed and paid by the county, and $100,000 by the city of Placerville. The road is nearly completed; but the company have found themselves unable to go on without additional assistance, and hence they apply to Congress for this grant of land.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Is this road exclusively in the State of California?

Mr. PRICE. It is exclusively in the State of California. It is only a short road.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman intimates that it is doubtful whether the company can secure all the land granted to them. On the contrary, this seems to me a bill designed to enable this company to grab all the land they can obtain. The bill now comes freshly into the House. I have never seen or heard of the bill before.

Mr. PRICE. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is a Senate bill—a bill which passed the Senate without opposition. Indeed, it interests nobody particularly but that particular neighborhood. The Committee on the Pacific Railroad of this House have seen proper to make certain restrictions to confine the parties within limits. It extends the line no further than the distance the road runs through that section of the country.

Mr. HIGBY. Mr. Speaker, this road commences at the town of Folsom and is intended to go to the town of Placerville, a distance of forty miles. I am acquainted with the country through which it is to run. There is a road from Sacramento to Folsom, a distance of twenty-two miles, which has been in use for some years. The foot hills commence at the town of Folsom, and this road will run all the way through a hilly country. It will of course be a very expensive road. It is the commencement of the slope of the Sierra Nevada. The company has been organized. As has been already stated, the county of El Dorado has raised $200,000 and Placerville $100,000 toward the construction of the road. It will cost a great deal on account of the country through which it is to run. The land is in the mineral district, and much has already been taken up by individuals whose rights are fully protected.

Mr. SPALDING. How much does the bill grant?

Mr. HIGBY. Twenty sections, provided the company can get it. It is a hilly country, which has never been surveyed by the Government.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the gentleman to give me information in reference to one part of the bill. It provides that the Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of California, is hereby authorized and empowered to lay out, locate, construct, furnish, equip, maintain, and enjoy a continuous railroad and telegraph line, with the appurtenances, from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville, in the State of California.

The point on which I desire information is, does the Congress of the United States propose to confer powers of this sort entirely within a State authorizing a company to take public or private lands for the construction of a railroad, to do everything pertinent to the construction of a railroad precisely as if in the District of Columbia? I ask whether this is an inadver-ence or whether it is maintained we have the right to authorize the construction of railroads entirely within a State.

Mr. HIGBY. I presume the gentleman from Iowa understands that most of the mineral lands of that State are not open to location and sale. I will say for the information of the gentleman that this will grant lands to this company organized under the laws of California to run a road from Folsom to Placerville. It only grants to that company public lands of the United States. And furthermore, I will say that this road runs through a hilly country, commencing at Folsom.

Mr. KASSON. I hardly think my friend understands the point of my question. There are two points raised by this bill. One is the propriety of giving the right of way across public lands as well as aid in public lands. To that I entertain no objection in point of right.

The next point is, that the bill provides that this company shall for the purpose of constructing the road take lands, whether public or private. To that I have a constitutional as well as a practical objection. The point to which I call his attention is, that this bill, although it may be an inadvertence, nevertheless does in the first section confer specific and general corporate powers. That I think we have no right to do. And as to the other question, of course I have great respect for the opinion of the gentleman from California as to whether we ought to aid a local road by a grant of public lands there. I am always disposed to be liberal in that respect, but not to make a United States corporation within the jurisdiction of a State, nor to give any powers to it whatever, except so far as the right of way across the lands of the United States is concerned.

Mr. HIGBY. Mr. Speaker, if I understand this bill rightly, its provisions are precisely the same as are now contained in the Pacific railroad bill. Now, I will state for the information of the gentleman that this is intended ultimately to be a branch of the Pacific railroad. It lies, as far as it can, parallel to it, running from the west to the east to somewhere in the State of Nevada, ultimately to unite with the main trunk of the Pacific railroad, and become a part of that system just as much as one of the branches of the Union Pacific railroad is a part of the Pacific railroad.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to say—

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, there is not enough in this bill to consume the time of the House. It is merely a matter that interests a few men in California. I therefore call the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will allow me to say a word.

Mr. PRICE. I will yield for a question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I want to state a proposition. There is a judicial question involved in this bill—whether we have a right to enlarge the powers of a corporation organized under State law.

Mr. PRICE. I do not agree with the gentleman at all. This has been considered in the committee, and there are good lawyers there, and there is no such question involved in the bill. I therefore insist on calling the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to ask the gentleman a question, whether he intends to bring—

Mr. PRICE. I decline to yield.

Mr. HALE. Is it in order now to move to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not, pending the previous question.

Mr. HALE. I trust the gentleman will allow an opportunity for a suggestion in regard to an amendment to this bill that I think ought to be made.

Mr. PRICE. How many minutes does the gentleman want?

Mr. HALE. Not more than three minutes.

Mr. PRICE. I will yield.

Mr. HALE. I call attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, my friends from California, and the House generally to the very remarkable language of the thirteenth section, which I think ought to be modified. It contains what purports to be the usual provision, "that Congress shall have power to alter, amend, or repeal this act," but it contains a preamble, a proviso, a stump speech, and some excellent moral reflections, all of which I think ought to be stricken out. I ask the Clerk to read that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That the better to accomplish the object of this act, namely, to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times (but particularly in time of war or rebellion) the use and benefit of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, Congress may at any time, having due regard for the rights of said Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad Company, add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. HALE. Will the chairman of the committee allow me to move to amend by striking out all except these words?

Congress may at any time add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. PRICE. Individually, I have not the least objection to such an amendment.

Mr. HALE. Then I will make that motion.

Mr. PIKE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a question of order. I protest against running this bill through under the gag of the previous question.

The SPEAKER. That is not a question of order. The chairman of the committee is entitled to one hour and can use it or not, as he pleases.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would like to suggest one thing.

Mr. PIKE. I would like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee. Section three provides that the grant shall be in alternate sections along the line of the road, and in case the United States has no lands along the line of the road, any lands within ten miles of the line of the road. I want to inquire if that is the usual provision in relation to these railroad grants. I supposed that the United States gave the lands to the Pacific railroad companies in alternate sections, for the purpose of enhancing the value of the remaining lands. I do not know whether this is the ordinary provision in these railroad grants or not. It strikes me that if it is, we might have grants of land to the State of Maine.

Mr. PRICE. I will say that this section provides expressly that the company shall take alternate sections by odd numbers and no other sections. The lands to be taken must be taken within a certain distance of the road. I now call the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish to make a single suggestion.

Mr. PRICE. I cannot yield.

Mr. JULIAN. I hope the previous question will be voted down. This bill is an outrage.

Mr. LE BLOND. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I think I can make a suggestion which will obviate the difficulty.

Mr. PRICE. I cannot yield.

The question was put upon seconding the demand for the previous question, and there were sixteen in the affirmative.

Mr. STEVENS. I call for tellers. This is an ordinary grant, such as has been made before to roads in the western country.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PRICE and ROGERS were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 36, noes 57.

So the House refused to second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. JULIAN. I move that the bill and pending amendments be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LE BLOND. I suggest that the committee have leave to report at any time.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object to that.

The question was taken on Mr. JULIAN'S motion, and there were—ayes 63, noes 33.

So the bill and pending amendments were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ELDRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CALIFORNIA AND OREGON RAILROAD.

Mr. BIDWELL, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, reported back without amendment, and with the recommendation that it do pass, bill of the Senate No. 123, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific Railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon.

The bill was read.

Mr. BIDWELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill is one of great importance to the State of California and to the State of Oregon. It has been so carefully drawn, so well considered, and is so eminently just in all its provisions that I hope this House will be disposed to pass it wholly upon its merits. I shall have no extended remarks to make upon this bill unless some members shall desire information upon particular points.

Mr. JULIAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from California whether, in the second section of the bill, there is any limit within which the lands provided for shall be taken. I understand that this company may go ten, twenty, or fifty miles to get the lands provided for.

Mr. BIDWELL. The gentleman from Indiana desires to know whether the limits within which the lands are to be taken are fixed. I will state, from the reading of the section to which he alludes, that the limits are fixed at twenty miles, and, as I think, unjustly fixed at twenty miles, taking into consideration that the country along the entire length of the road has been settled for sixteen years, and taking into consideration also that it is a mountainous region, and that therefore the amount of land to be obtained is very small indeed, unless it be rugged, mountainous land.

Mr. JULIAN. I do not think the gentleman from California understood my question. The point I make is, that the second section of the bill does not make the limitation that he states. It says, "to be designated by odd numbers to the amount of ten sections per mile on each side of said road." It does not say that it shall be within ten miles of the line of the road, according to the usual language of bills of this sort. It is, therefore, unguarded in that respect.

Mr. BIDWELL. It says "contiguous thereto," and a little further on it says "within twenty miles of the line of this railroad."

Mr. HALE. I wish to know wherein this bill differs from the Senate bill.

Mr. BIDWELL. This is Senate bill No. 123.

Mr. HALE. Then I ask how it comes before the House now, and whether it has been reported by the Committee on Public Lands, to which it was referred.

Mr. BIDWELL. This bill was never referred to the Committee on Public Lands. It was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. HALE. I find this indorsement on the bill: "Senate bill No. 123, read twice, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed."

Mr. BIDWELL. That is in the Senate, of course. The Committee on Public Lands there reported in favor of the bill, it passed the Senate, came to this House, was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and has been reported back to the House by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. HALE. I would ask the gentleman from California [Mr. BIDWELL] if Senate bill No. 153 is identical with House bill No. 339.

Mr. BIDWELL. No, sir, not exactly; because the Senate amended it in some particulars.

Mr. HALE. Which is the bill now under consideration?

Mr. BIDWELL. Senate bill No. 123.

Mr. HALE. This bill, so far as I can discover, does not contain the usual provision, giving power to Congress to amend, alter, or repeal at any time. I think that provision should be inserted in the bill.

Mr. BIDWELL. I think that every safeguard has been included in this bill. If there is any other provision, however, by which the bill can be improved, I have no objection to it. But inasmuch as this bill has already passed the Senate, and has been long before the House, if there is no material objection to it, I should certainly be glad to have it passed without amendment. But if it be improper in any particular, of course I do not wish to urge anything that is improper.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman allow me to move as an amendment an additional section, that Congress shall have power to amend, alter, or repeal the provisions of this act at any time?

Mr. BIDWELL. I should not object to that if such a provision is in the railroad bills generally passed by Congress.

Mr. HALE. I suppose it is; at least it should be.

Mr. BIDWELL. I have never seen any such provision in those bills. I am informed that no such provision is contained in any of the railroad bills.

Mr. PRICE. None of them contain any such provision.

Mr. BIDWELL. And I do not think it necessary to attach any such extraordinary provision to this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the gentleman from California yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BIDWELL. Certainly.

OREGON AND SALT LAKE RAILROAD—AGAIN.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill No. 679, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Columbia river to Salt Lake City, was re-committed to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider will be entered upon the Journal.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion cannot now be entertained, the House being engaged in the consideration of other business.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Have that committee the right to report that bill at any time.

The SPEAKER. They have not.

CALIFORNIA AND OREGON RAILROAD—AGAIN.

Mr. JULIAN. I desire to move to amend the second section of this bill by inserting after the words "to the amount of ten sections per mile on each side of said railroad" the words "within ten miles of the line of the railroad."

Mr. PRICE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] that the land cannot be obtained within that limit.

Mr. JULIAN. I want some limit fixed.

Mr. PRICE. You cannot get the land within that limit.

Mr. JULIAN. The gentleman from California says that it is limited to ten miles; I propose only to make it so expressly.

Mr. BIDWELL. Within twenty miles.

Mr. JULIAN. I move the amendment I have indicated.

Mr. BIDWELL. I would have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] if he will make it thirty miles. The bill as it is drawn calls for twenty sections per mile, or ten sections per mile on each side of the road. That will take the alternate sections for the space of twenty miles on each side of the road. Now, if the limit is fixed at ten miles of the line of the railroad that will not harmonize with the other provisions of the bill. It will take away one half of the grant, when it is already too small, taking into consideration the character of the country through which the road is to pass. I hope the gentleman will not press his amendment.

Mr. JULIAN. I am not anxious for any particular limit, but I want some limit fixed in the bill. I am willing to modify my amendment so as to make it read "within twenty miles of the line of the railroad."

Mr. BIDWELL. I move to amend the amendment so as to make it thirty miles instead of twenty miles; and I wish to explain the reason why I make that motion. This bill now calls for twenty sections of land per mile, ten sections on each side of the road, to be designated by odd numbers. Therefore the odd sections take all the land granted by this bill within twenty miles of the road. Now, if you limit the selection to twenty miles, there is no chance to take lands in lieu of those preempted, taken by homestead claimants, or otherwise disposed of by the Government. Therefore, if any amendment is made, it should be to extend it thirty miles, not twenty.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the bill goes over till the next morning hour.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ELIOT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 492) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House agree to the first, second, third, fifth, seventh, eighth, and ninth amendments as made by the Senate.

That the House agree to the sixth amendment, with the following amendment, that is to say, by inserting in section one, page 1, line twenty-one, after the word "aforesaid," the words "and all other works provided for in this act."

That the House agree to the tenth amendment with the following amendment, that is to say, by inserting after the word "Manistee" in said amendment, the words "South Haven."

That the Senate recede from the fourth amendment.

Z. CHANDLER.

L. M. MORRILL.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

THOMAS D. ELIOT.

J. M. HUMPHREY.

JOHN W. LONGYEAR.

Managers on the part of the House.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BUREAU OF EDUCATION.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a privileged question, and call up the motion made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Urson] to reconsider the vote by which House bill No. 276, entitled "An act to establish a national Bureau of Education," was rejected upon the question of its passage.

Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, this bill, when under consideration here, was amended so as to provide for a department instead of a bureau. I am willing, if unanimous consent be given, that the name be changed, and that this shall be called a "bureau" instead of a "department."

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well; that change can be made in the Senate. I demand the previous question on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move that the bill be recommitted.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order pending the demand for the previous question.

Mr. ANCONA. I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 37, nays 76, not voting 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bromwell, Dawson, De-frees, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Holmes, Demas Hubbard, Humphrey, Johnson, Kerr, Le Blond, Marshall, Marston, Mercer, Moorhead, Niblack, Nicholson, Perham, Pike, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, and Winfield—37.

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Benjamin, Bingham, Boutwell, Broomall, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eliot, Farquhar, Garfield, Hayes, Henderson, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Ladin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, McClurg, McKee, McKuer, Morris, Moulton, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Pomeroy, Price, Raymond, John H. Rice, Sawyer, Schenck, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stilwell, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—76.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, James M. Ashley, Bergen, Bidwell, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Delano, Deming, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Ferry, Goodyear, Grinnell, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Hart, Higby, Hill, Hogan, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Jones, Kelso, William Lawrence, Lynch, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, Miller, Morrill, Newell, Noell, Patterson, Phelps, Plants, Radford, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rousseau, Scofield, Shaukin, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stevens, Thayer, Thayer, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Wright—69.

So the motion to reconsider was not laid on the table.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, said: On all votes upon this bill I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. SCOFIELD. If he were here he would vote against laying the bill on the table, and I should vote in favor of that motion.

The result was announced as above stated.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire that this bill may be recommitted, so that it may be amended in the manner proposed by me when it was heretofore under consideration; that is, so as to provide that the educational matters shall be under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, with two or three additional clerks, sufficient to perform the duties contemplated. That seems to me preferable to the bill as it stands.

Mr. GARFIELD. I offered to consent to an amendment of the bill, so as to provide for a bureau instead of a department; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania objected. I trust the bill will not be recommitted; for if that be done, it cannot be reached again this session. If the House should pass the bill in its present form, the committee will endeavor, and will no doubt be able, to secure in the Senate an amendment providing for a bureau to be under the control of the Secretary of the Interior. I hope the previous question will be seconded.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he thinks it will add to the efficiency of the bill to change its name from a department to a bureau. That is not the objection to the bill.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. It is a distinction without a difference.

Mr. DAWES. That is not the objection to the bill. It is objected to on broader ground.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have promised to call the previous question.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to vote for this measure; but I must say, in looking at the bill it seems to me it should be recommitted with authority to report at any time, to the end that the gentleman may enlarge the basis upon which the bill stands, to make the idea upon which it is based more efficient and valuable. I voted for the motion to reconsider, and I shall vote for any measure of this kind that is efficient. I hope the gentleman will consent to have the bill recommitted.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I know the object the gentleman seeks to accomplish, and I would cheerfully unite with him in accomplishing it if it were now practicable. I should be glad to see the Bureau of Agriculture consolidated with this and a general bureau of statistics added, but I do not believe the House would consent to it at this time. If gentlemen are unwilling to pass the pending proposition they would be still more unwilling to enact a more comprehensive measure.

We ask the passage of this bill, which provides for a commissioner and three clerks for the purposes mentioned in the first section, at the earnest request of the school commissioners of several of the States. It is an interest that has no lobby to press its claims. It is the voice of the children of the land, asking us to give them all the blessings of our civilization. I hope that the instinct which has moved the other side of the House to vote solidly against this liberal and progressive measure will at least induce this side to save it from defeat. I will not take the time of the House to discuss it, but will trust to the sense of duty among the liberal men of the House and to the manifest justice of the bill itself.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. GARFIELD. I must call for the previous question. I promised a gentleman who has a bill pending that I would not yield.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a question of order. As a member of the committee, I have certainly the right to be heard.

THE SPEAKER. Not if a majority of the House seconds the demand for the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I hope the previous question will not be seconded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 44.

Mr. ANCONA demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ANCONA and GARFIELD were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 44.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered.

Mr. ANCONA demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 76, nays 48, not voting 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Broomall, Bundy, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Dawes, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Garfield, Hayes, Henderson, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Longyear, Lynch, McClurg, McKuer, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Price, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Sawyer, Schenck, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, Stilwell, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—76.

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Barker, Beaman, Boyer, Broomall, Buckland, Dawson, Defrees, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hogan, Holmes, Humphrey, Johnson, Kasson, Kerr, Ladin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Marshall, Marston, McCullough, Mercer, Niblack, Nicholson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, and Winfield—48.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Baxter, Benjamin, Bergen, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Davis, Delano, Deming, Driggs, Eckley, Farnsworth, Ferry, Goodyear, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hart, Higby, Hill, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Washburne, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Wright—58.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. On that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. PIKE and Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 80, nays 44, not voting 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Broomall, Broomall, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Garfield, Hayes, Henderson, Hooper, Asahel W. Washburne, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Wright—58.

So the bill was passed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence for Mr. FERRY.

Mr. McKEE asked and obtained leave of absence for himself for the remainder of the week.

HUMBOLDT CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to explain and limit the act granting the right of way to the Humboldt Canal Company through the public lands of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY BILL.

The morning hour having expired, the House proceeded to the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 361, to reorganize and establish the Army of the United States, reported by Mr. SCHENCK from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, this will be considered as an original bill, though it is reported in the nature of a substitute.

No objection being made, it was so ordered.

Mr. SCHENCK. The House has now under consideration a bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, the former bill having been rejected and afterwards reconsidered and recommitted. I propose to have this bill considered section by section, as was done with the former bill.

It will be discovered that the committee has endeavored to conform this bill to the views, so far as they could be gathered, expressed by the House in relation to this matter, by their votes as they were given when the former bill was under discussion. I do not propose to make any opening remarks explanatory of the general character of the bill in the form it is now brought before the House, but to endeavor to expedite the consideration of it by another and a different proposition. I propose that the bill which is before the House as an original bill, though it is reported in the nature of a substitute, shall be held subject to amendment and to discussion within reasonable limits, and hoping that I shall not be driven to demand the previous question even upon any of the sections, I ask that the discussion may be limited to five-minute speeches. The House, I trust, will agree to this proposition.

Mr. DAVIS. I must object to that at the present stage.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then I shall have to call the previous question on the whole bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to make an explanation.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have not yielded the floor. I have proposed a fair mode of considering this matter, section by section, which I think is as much as should be expected at this late period of the session, and that we limit ourselves to a short business debate. Now, if members of the committee can forego the privilege of protracted debate and long speeches, it seems to me others might do so. If this proposition cannot be consented to by the House, gentlemen all around me ask me to call the previous question on the whole bill and bring the House to a vote upon it at once, which I should regret very much to be compelled to do.

Mr. DAVIS. I appeal to the gentleman simply to allow me to make a statement.

Mr. SCHENCK. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. DAVIS. After the former bill, which was rejected by the House, had been considered a long time, I hoped that if another bill should be introduced it should conform somewhat to the principles of the bill which the Senate had passed, and which I now understand has received the approbation of military gentlemen who are supposed to know a great deal more on the subject than I pretend to know. I therefore state, for the purpose of apprising the gentlemen of my intention, that unless somebody else does it I will at the proper time move the Senate bill No. 138, with some slight modification, as a substitute for the bill now presented.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York can at any time after the gentleman from Ohio has surrendered the floor make that motion, and it will be reserved until the bill is perfected.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman must do me the justice to observe that I have never objected to any opportunity for offering any amendment in the shape of a substitute or anything else. My proposition is to confine the House to five minutes' debate. To that the gentleman from New York objects. I suppose, however, that he now means to be understood as withdrawing his objection.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly. I did not wish to interpose any objection which would operate to the embarrassment of the chairman of the committee. I did not know but it might be necessary to explain to the House in a few words the distinctive provisions of these two bills—the Senate bill and this one—and I did not believe that any one would be able to do that in five minutes. I have no objection, however, to trying the rule proposed, and if it becomes necessary, provision may be made for additional time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the objection. Is there objection to the debate being limited as proposed?

No objection being made, it was accordingly ordered that the debate be limited to five-minute speeches, and that the bill be considered section by section.

The Clerk read the first section, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the military peace establishment of the United States shall hereafter consist of five regiments of artillery, six regiments of cavalry, fifty regiments of infantry, the professors and corps of cadets of the United States Military Academy, and such other forces as shall be provided for by this act, to be known as the Army of the United States.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to amend by striking out "six" and inserting "twelve," so that it will read "twelve regiments of cavalry."

The amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. In the debate on the previous bill the first section was reserved with the privilege of amending it so that if any alteration should be made in the subsequent portion of the bill in regard to the number of regiments this could be made to correspond with the subsequent sections.

No objection being made, the first section was accordingly reserved.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee what number of regiments in the aggregate there will be by this section.

Mr. SCHENCK. This bill does not add six new regiments of cavalry as the former bill did, and it makes the number of infantry regiments less by five, so that the aggregate maximum will be twelve thousand two hundred less rank and file than was proposed by the previous bill. Instead of an army of fifty thousand, capable of extension to eighty-two thousand six hundred, we now propose an army of forty-three thousand, capable of extension to seventy thousand.

Mr. LE BLOND. I will move to amend by striking out the word "fifty" and inserting "forty," so that it will read "forty regiments of infantry."

Mr. SCHENCK. I will give my reason for opposing this amendment. The House will find that these fifty regiments are made up of the present ten infantry regiments in the old regular Army, of twenty-two regiments to be composed of nine new regiments of three battalions each, and then of ten regiments to be called the Veteran Reserve corps, and eight regiments of colored men. Now, if you reduce the number of regiments to forty, you must dispose in some way of ten of these regiments, either by giving up the provision for wounded officers and soldiers of the Army, which, after full consideration when the former bill was before the House, it refused to do, or by giving up the eight regiments of colored troops, or else by taking the number of regiments from some portion of the regular Army and disbanding them. The committee have reduced the number of regiments to be composed of the nine new large regiments which were added to the regular Army to last during the war to as low an extent as possible, so as to preserve them at all, when we make them into twenty-two regiments. They do this by taking the whole two hundred and sixteen companies of the nine large regiments and adding only four companies to round out the number of ten companies to each regiment, and thus compose the twenty-two new regiments. The former bill provided for twenty-seven regiments from the old nine large regiments, instead of twenty-two, by taking the three battalions of which each of the nine regiments was composed, and adding to each battalion two companies, thus making the aggregate addition twice twenty-seven companies.

I make this explanation, because if the motion of my colleague [Mr. LE BLOND] should prevail, it must alter necessarily what follows in the bill; and the House must dispense either with the provision for wounded officers and wounded soldiers, or with the provision made for colored troops, or else you must turn out, dismiss, disband some portion of the regular Army to accomplish the object.

Mr. LE BLOND. I confess that I know but little about military matters. In the motion I have made I am simply looking to a principle; it is for the purpose of reducing the standing Army in time of peace. It is with that view only that I have made the motion to amend.

The argument of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. SCHENCK] certainly amounts to nothing, so far as the action of Congress hitherto upon this subject is concerned. If this House shall determine to reduce the minimum, they can do so, and the other provisions can be made to conform to that action. It amounts to no argument to say that we have added certain regiments, either colored regiments or white regiments, and provided for their distribution in a certain way. That can be arranged and conformed to the judgment of Congress, if we should take a less number of regiments than the committee has reported here.

I do think that our expenses are already large enough. And the past history of this country shows that we can get along in time of peace with a much less number than here provided for; and as we have got along with a less number in the past, I think we can get on with less in the future. And the financial condition of the country requires that we shall economize in every conceivable way. I do not know that my amendment distributes the regiments as they should be. I am not military man enough to do it. I simply wish an expression of the House upon the question in order to ascertain whether they favor a reduction of the number of regiments proposed by the committee. It is with this view that I have offered the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the number of infantry regiments forty-five. I am opposed to the principle of reducing our Army to any considerable extent. I think we should have it increased so that it shall be an efficient power for the protection of the country; but I desire the increase to come in a mode and in the arm of the service which is not yet provided for in this bill. I think we should have an increase of the cavalry force.

Now, if gentlemen will reflect for one moment upon the present condition of the country, its exposed frontier at the West, and the state of the country at the South, it will not take long, I think, for any gentleman to make up his mind that the cavalry branch of the service is more important than any other, and yet by the provisions of this bill we are to have but five cavalry regiments, or five thousand cavalry. Officers who are experienced in that branch of the service, some of quite as much experience as any in the country, one of them, General A. J. Smith, who has served for a long time as chief of artillery in the valley of the Mississippi, who has been upon the frontier, who has been beyond the mountains upon the Pacific slope—and other officers have informed me that the force of five thousand cavalry is entirely inadequate to the present wants of the country. And therefore, although I am opposed to the reduction of the number of infantry regiments in the manner indicated by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LE BLOND], still I am in favor of an increase of the cavalry force. And as it is understood that this first section is to be passed over for the present, I will give notice that at the proper time I propose to move to increase the number of regiments to that provided for by the Senate bill, to twelve regiments, or even to increase them to fifteen regiments. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. For the purpose of making some further explanations, I will move to amend the amendment so as to make the number of infantry regiments fifty-five. The Committee on Military Affairs have endeavored to accommodate this bill to the most manifest wish of the House in the present form in which this bill is reported. The House, after full discussion, passed upon the question whether they would or would not make provision in the Army bill for the wounded officers and wounded men of the service by preserving the Veteran Reserve corps. Taking that as instructions, the committee, without restoring the old Veteran Reserve corps at all, which consists of twenty-four regiments, have provided that there shall be a Veteran Reserve corps made up of wounded officers and wounded men, taken indiscriminately from all arms of the service, to the extent of ten regiments.

The House just as unmistakably expressed itself upon the question of retaining a portion of the colored troops, eight regiments, as proposed in the former bill; and the committee has therefore permitted that provision to stand. There was no disposition manifested by the House to disband or dismiss any portion of the regular Army as it now exists. The infantry of the regular Army, as everybody knows, consists of ten old regiments, of one thousand men each, and nine new regiments which were added early in the war and which are required by law to be disbanded within one year after the termination of hostilities. The committee has preserved those nine regiments now of the regular Army; but in order to provide for as small a number as possible of new regiments we have added to the two hundred and sixteen companies four new companies, making twenty-two new regiments instead of twenty-seven as provided for in the former bill.

If the amendment of my colleague [Mr. LE BLOND] should prevail it will follow of necessity that the House must get rid of all provision for wounded officers and men, or must dispense with the colored troops or some portion of the existing regular Army. The committee felt themselves instructed by the action of the House to endeavor to diminish, as far as they could, the force proposed in the former bill. In doing this they have provided, as I have just remarked, for twenty-two new regiments in the regular Army, instead of twenty-seven. They have also dropped the six new regiments of cavalry, as formerly proposed, and in lieu of the provision for new cavalry regiments they have provided in this bill that the President may at any time, at his discretion, mount a portion of the infantry to serve as cavalry, not exceeding in number six regiments.

Sir, I do not know that I differ at all with the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] in my general view upon the question of the extent of our Army. I am bold to say that I do not think our Army ought now to be reduced. I do not think that the first bill or this bill or any bill which has yet been presented proposed too large a force. I think we shall find need for all the army we may have. We shall require a large military force for frontier duty, for duty at forts throughout the interior, and for service in the South, too, if we expect the peace to be kept against all the prevailing influences tending to break the peace. But the House has certainly most manifestly expressed a desire to limit within as narrow a compass as possible the number of the force to be provided for in this bill; and we have endeavored to accommodate ourselves to this view, without disregarding these other manifestations of opinion on the part of the House, indicating an unwillingness to turn adrift any of these proposed portions of the Army, as provided for in the former bill.

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the amendment to the amendment. I do not propose, sir, to discuss at this time the condition of the South. I think that enough has already been said on that subject. I think the country fully understands the crippled condition of the South. It is well understood that the people of the South are entirely disarmed and utterly incapable of insurrection or of giving us trouble if they desired to do so. But the remarks of my colleague, it seems to me, suggest a reason why my amendment should be adopted. As he has remarked, it was determined by the House on a former occasion that eight regiments of colored troops should be retained. It was also decided that ten regiments of the Veteran Reserve corps should be retained. We did not provide for the retention of a sufficient number of this corps to include all of this class of soldiers throughout the country. The effect of the present bill is to exclude these from the standing Army in order to give place to colored regiments. I for one am opposed to giving place to the colored troops to the exclusion of the men of my own race who have fought in defense of their country.

If, sir, we are to provide for any in this bill let us provide for men of our own race instead of the colored race. Do away with your colored regiments and you merely fill the number I desire. Then you will leave the Army to be made up of men of our own race and our own color. I hope the amendment I have offered will prevail, and there will be a reduction in this particular, and as we proceed the committee can divide them up into the different departments of the Army.

Mr. SCHENCK, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. LE BLOND's amendment was then rejected, only nineteen voting in the affirmative.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I move to amend in line four by striking out "six" and inserting "ten," and in line five by striking out "fifty" and inserting "forty-six;" so it will read:

That the military peace establishment of the United States shall hereafter consist of five regiments of artillery, ten regiments of cavalry, forty-six regiments of infantry, the professors and corps of cadets of the United States Military Academy, and such other forces as shall be provided for by this act, to be known as the Army of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, while I am quite as anxious as anybody else to reduce the expenditures of the Government, while I should agree with many of my friends probably upon both sides of the House, that a large standing army is inconsistent with republican institutions, yet, sir, if I had my own way under the present condition of things, I would provide for a much larger army than is provided for in this bill. Sir, the testimony which has been taken before a certain committee of this House within the last four or five months clearly indicates to me at least, although the former rebellious States are, in my judgment, as in the judgment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. RAYMOND,] who spoke yesterday, not in a condition to offer violence, still the military arm of the Government may be required there to a certain extent at least to enforce the law and protect the people.

Again, sir, within the last few days we have heard of complications in Europe which may lead to war of a magnitude unparalleled heretofore in the history of the world; and in these complications it may be well for us, although we are at peace with all the world, to be prepared for any contingency which may arise.

I fear this House is opposed to increasing the Army to an amount larger than that provided in the bill. Hence I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty-six;" and strike out "six" and insert "ten;" because I believe the cavalry arm of the service is eminently needed. If my amendment succeeds we will have ten instead of six regiments of cavalry, and forty-six regiments of infantry instead of fifty. We know very well at the commencement of the recent war the cavalry arm of the service was not thought to be of account at all, and when applications were made the then Lieutenant General of the Army refused them, declaring he did not approve of the cavalry arm. For a long time we met with nothing but disaster and defeat, when the most eminent military men of the country found out that under the present system of warfare the most efficient branch of the service was the cavalry.

Look at our domain. Look at the vast emigration which is filling up the great Northwest from the Mississippi to the Pacific coast. How are they to be protected on their way to the mining districts? Infantry cannot do it. Artillery cannot do it. It is only cavalry can protect the emigrants who are making their way westward. Why, sir, the cavalry is the only arm of the service in the extreme West which can be efficient.

I know this bill provides in a subsequent portion that the President may at his option change a certain number of infantry to cavalry regiments. We all know that will not answer the purpose. We all know when infantry is mounted as cavalry it takes months and months to perfect them in the duties they are called upon to perform.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROSS. I ask if the question is divisible.

The SPEAKER. It is, and the question is first on striking out "six regiments of cavalry" and inserting, in lieu thereof "ten regiments of cavalry."

The question was put, and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I withdraw the remainder of my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the five regiments of artillery provided for by this act shall consist of the five regiments now organized; and the first, second, third, and fourth regiments of artillery shall have the same organization as is now prescribed by law for the fifth regiment of artillery: Provided, That the regimental adjutants, quartermasters, and commissaries shall hereafter be extra first lieutenants.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to add at the end of that section the following:

Who shall be appointed from among those who have served as officers or soldiers of volunteers in the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, who have been distinguished for capacity, good conduct, and efficient service, and who shall be subject to such examination as is hereinafter provided.

I will explain that amendment. By the present organization of regiments, the adjutants, quartermasters, and commissaries are detailed for their several duties. By this bill it is proposed that they shall be extra first lieutenants, not officers taken away from their proper duties, but shall serve specially in these different positions. This, then, will open the way to some new appointments even in the old regiments, and I propose that these new appointments be secured to the volunteers. That is the object of this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the six regiments of cavalry provided for by this act shall consist of the six regiments now in service. Each of said regiments shall hereafter have but one hospital steward, and the regimental adjutants, quartermasters, and commissaries shall hereafter be extra first lieutenants; and each regiment shall have one veterinary surgeon, whose compensation shall be $100 per month. But at any time hereafter, when the exigencies of the public service may require, the President of the United States shall have the power and authority to mount any of the infantry regiments of the Army, not exceeding six regiments in number at any one time, to serve as cavalry, and while so serving they shall be allowed all the pay, allowances, and emoluments of cavalry troops.

Mr. PAINE. I would suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs one amendment in that section, which I am sure will commend itself to his judgment. It is to insert in line thirteen, after the word "cavalry" the words "or mounted infantry." It has been found, I believe, in the field to be true that mounted infantry serving as cavalry have done as much service and perhaps more than they could have done if equipped and serving as cavalry proper.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend this section by inserting after the word "lieutenants" in the sixth line the words "to be appointed as provided for in the foregoing section in the case of similar officers of the artillery."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend that section by striking out all after the word "month" in the eighth line, as follows:

But at any time hereafter, when the exigencies of the public service may require, the President of the United States shall have the power and authority to mount any of the infantry regiments of the Army, not exceeding six regiments in number at any one time, to serve as cavalry, and while so serving they shall be allowed all the pay, allowances, and emoluments of cavalry troops.

I make this motion for the purpose of saying a word in regard to the policy of mounting infantry for cavalry service. The information I have received from officers in the cavalry service convinces me that a good cavalry man cannot be made in less than three years. Now, the term of enlistment under this bill is only three years, and a man taken from other branches of the service and put into the cavalry cannot become qualified for his duties in less than two or three years. If I may be permitted, in corroboration of this statement, to refer to the history of our late war, it was more than two years after that war commenced before the cavalry was successful. It was only by the experience of two or three years of service that the cavalry did anything that redounded to the honor of our arms. That branch of the service subsequently was very useful in the taking of prisoners and in regard to the movements of the enemy.

I believe, sir, that we should have a permanent increase of at least double the extent provided for by this bill. If it were in my power

I would have at least twenty regiments of cavalry. They are extended all along our frontier, and have to keep peace with the Indians. The Indians are all good horsemen. They make descents upon our settlements for purposes of pillage, and after accomplishing their purpose they flee away, and you cannot pursue them with infantry. You cannot cross the plains with infantry; you must have cavalry; and in the existing state of things we need a large cavalry force. As I do not believe that we shall accomplish any good by allowing the President to mount infantry, I have moved to strike out this provision. I will not, however, insist upon it; I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the infantry regiments herein provided for shall consist of the first ten regiments of infantry of ten companies each now in service; of twenty-two regiments to be formed by adding four new companies to the two hundred and sixteen companies constituting the nine regiments organized under the act to increase the present military establishment of the United States, approved July 29, 1861, and organizing the whole two hundred and twenty companies into twenty-two new regiments, which shall be numbered from the eleventh to the thirty-second inclusive, of ten regiments to be raised and officered as hereinafter provided for, to be called the Veteran Reserve corps; and of eight regiments of colored men, to be raised and officered as hereinafter provided, to be known as United States colored troops.

Mr. NIBLACK. I move to strike out on line fourteen of that section, after the word "corps," the following:

And of eight regiments of colored men, to be raised and officered as hereinafter provided, to be known as United States colored troops.

Mr. Speaker, when we were obliged, during the war, to introduce colored troops into the service it was not understood that they should continue in the service after the termination of the war. It was regarded merely as a temporary measure to meet the emergency which seemed to be upon the country. I have never yet, myself, believed that colored troops were as valuable as white troops, and I presume that hereafter we shall have no difficulty in obtaining a sufficient number of white troops. Hence I think we ought to strike out this provision. I make the motion in good faith and hope it will be adopted.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the officers of the ten regiments of infantry, first provided for in the foregoing section, shall consist of those now commissioned and serving therewith, subject to such examination as the condition of their being retained in the service as is hereinafter provided for. And the officers of the twenty-two new regiments next provided for in said section, shall consist of those company officers heretofore commissioned and serving with the companies composing the said nine regiments which were organized under the provisions of the aforesaid act to increase the present military establishment of the United States, approved July 29, 1861, subject also to like examination, and of such field and other officers as it may be necessary to appoint or reappoint to complete the organization of such regiments. And in making appointments to fill the original vacancies in the thirty-two regiments thus provided for, and for a period of three years after the passage of this act, all the first and second lieutenants, two thirds of the captains, and one half of the officers in each of the grades above that of first lieutenant shall be selected from among the officers and soldiers of volunteers who have served in the Army of the United States in the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, and who have been distinguished for capacity, good conduct, and efficient service; but graduates of the United States Military Academy shall immediately upon graduation be eligible to appointment as second lieutenants; and after the original vacancies are filled, enlisted men of the regular Army, who shall have served not less than one year, shall also be eligible to appointment as second lieutenants. The Veteran Reserve corps shall be officered by appointment from any officers and soldiers of volunteers of the regular Army who have been wounded in the line of their duty while serving in the Army of the United States in the late war, or have been disabled by disease contracted in such service, and who may yet be competent for garrison or other duty, to which that corps has heretofore been assigned. The officers selected to fill original vacancies in the regiments of colored troops shall be taken from among those who have served as officers of colored troops in the Army of the United States in the late war. And all appointments of officers in the Veteran Reserve corps and in regiments of colored troops shall be made on examination, as hereinafter provided, having reference to capacity, good conduct, and efficient service in every case: Provided, That all officers of the existing Veteran Reserve corps, except those now actually detailed for duty in the Freedmen's Bureau, or otherwise actually and necessarily employed, shall upon the passage of this act be mustered out of service and put upon the same footing as other disabled officers not now in service.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the appointments to be made from among volunteer officers, under the provisions of this act, shall be distributed, as far as may be practicable, among the States, Territories, and District of Columbia, in proportion to the number of troops furnished by them respectively to the service of the United States during the late war.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That each regiment of infantry provided for by this act shall have one colonel, one lieutenant colonel, one major, one adjutant, one regimental quartermaster, one sergeant major, one quartermaster sergeant, one commissary sergeant, one hospital steward, two principal musicians, and ten companies, and each company shall have one captain, one first lieutenant, and one second lieutenant, one first sergeant, four sergeants, eight corporals, two artificers, two musicians, one wagoner, and fifty privates, and the number of privates may be increased to one hundred, at the discretion of the President, whenever the exigencies of the service require such increase. The adjutant and quartermaster of a regiment shall each be an extra first lieutenant, appointed for their respective duties.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the adjutants and quartermasters of infantry regiments shall be mounted officers; and that all regimental adjutants and quartermasters shall be paid, in addition to their other proper allowances as first lieutenants and mounted officers, ten dollars per month as compensation for their greater care and responsibility; and officers of the line detailed to act as regimental quartermasters or as quartermasters or commissaries of permanent posts, or of commands of not less than two companies, shall, when the assignment is duly reported to and approved by the War Department, receive as extra compensation while responsible for Government property, ten dollars per month.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That fifteen bands, including the band at the Military Academy, may be retained or enlisted in the Army with such organization as is now provided by law, to be assigned to brigades in time of war, and in time of peace to assembled brigades, or to forts or posts at which the largest number of troops shall be stationed; and the band at the Military Academy shall be placed on the same footing as other bands; and there shall be one ordnance sergeant and one hospital steward for each military post, and the same number of post chaplains as now provided by law; and a commissioned or non-commissioned officer of the Veteran Reserve corps shall be assigned to duty as superintendent and guard at each national cemetery now established or that may hereafter be established.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend that section by inserting in line six after the word "stationed" the words "if deemed expedient by the Secretary of War." As the section now stands, it is made the duty of the Secretary to assign bands to those posts having the largest number of troops. Now, sir, the number of troops varies; sometimes temporarily at different points; and yet, under this bill, the moment the largest number of troops is assembled at any one post, although it may be temporarily, a band must be sent to that post. This may work inconveniently. I think my amendment will meet with no objection.

Mr. SCHENCK. The Committee on Military Affairs preserved the precise language upon this point which was put in the bill when it was last under consideration. I do not see any objection to the amendment, but I think the gentleman will accomplish his object if he will move to strike out from the commencement of the sixth line down to and including the word "stationed."

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know but that that will accomplish his object.

Mr. SCHENCK. This section contains the amendment which was made upon the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE,] when this bill was before the House on a former occasion, with this difference: we have reduced the number of bands from seventeen to fifteen, including the band at West Point, regarding that as about the proper proportion for the reduced number of regiments.

Mr. PAINE. I will explain in a few words the reasons which prompted me to offer the amendment when this bill was before the House on a former occasion. It never occurred to me, and I suppose it has occurred to but few members of this House, that the President in carrying out the provisions of the amendment I offered, whenever it should happen that there was the largest number of troops temporarily stationed at a particular post, would send a band there on that account. I supposed as a matter of course that he would exercise a reasonable amount of discretion in carrying out the provisions of this bill, and would not, because the largest number of troops happened to be stationed at any post for a few days, or even for a few weeks, feel himself called upon to transfer a band to that post. And I have no idea that the President of the United States, or any officer acting under him, would ever do anything so unreasonable as that.

My idea in offering the amendment was this: that the posts at which the largest number of troops were stationed are justly entitled to these bands, if they are retained in the service, and not those posts where there may happen to be a small number of troops stationed, and where the officers who happen to be in command may be so influential with the authorities as to obtain these bands to the deprivation of other posts more entitled to them. I still think that the bands should go to the posts where the largest number of troops are stationed for any period of time, whether it be on the frontiers where men see hard service, where officers do not like to be stationed, and where bands do not like to go, or whether it be on the sea-board, near some city or watering-place, where officers desire to do fancy duty, and where bands like to go.

Therefore I am opposed to the change proposed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DAVIS,] and which I am sorry to see that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. SCHENCK] seems to be willing to accept. If that change be adopted the very object I had in view originally in offering the amendment will be defeated; it will enable the posts where small numbers of troops are congregated, where it would be convenient and agreeable to have bands for the amusement and enjoyment of the officers stationed there and their lady friends, to rob the frontier posts where the largest number of troops are stationed, and where bands really should be employed.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentlemen from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] allow me to make a suggestion which I think will meet his views and mine?

Mr. SCHENCK. I will make a suggestion which I think will harmonize both sides. I appreciate the reasons as urged upon either side. On the one hand the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] is afraid that if this provision in the bill stands a band will have to be moved whenever the number of troops at a station where a band may be located happens to be diminished below the number of troops at some other station. On the other hand the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] does not wish a band kept up when there is only a nominal force stationed, as at Newport, for instance, for the benefit of the officers there. Now, I propose to amend this provision by inserting the word "ordinarily" between the words "be stationed," so that the temporary change from any cause will not affect the location of the bands. That portion of the section will then read:

That fifteen bands, including the band at the Military Academy, may be retained or enlisted in the Army with such organization as is now provided by law, to be assigned to brigades in time of war, and in times of peace to assembled brigades, or to forts or posts at which the largest number of troops shall be ordinarily stationed.

Mr. PAINE. I am willing to compromise with the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] on that.

Mr. DAVIS. I will accept that in lieu of my amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That all enlistments into the Army shall hereafter be for the term of three years, and but two field officers shall be appointed to any regiment until six companies of the regiment shall have been organized, and but two officers for each company shall be appointed until the minimum number of men has been enlisted and the regiment duly organized; but recruits may at all times be collected at the general rendezvous in addition to the number required to fill to their minimum all the regiments and companies of the Army, provided that such recruits shall not exceed in the aggregate three thousand men. It shall be competent to enlist men for the service who have been wounded in the line of their duty while serving in the Army of the United States, or who have been disabled by disease contracted in such service, provided it shall be found, on medical inspection, that by such wounds or disability they are not unfitted for efficiency in garrison or other light duty; and such men when enlisted shall be assigned to service exclusively in the regiments of the Veteran Reserve corps.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend this section by inserting after the words "that all enlistments into the Army shall hereafter be for the term of three years;" the words "except for the cavalry service, which shall be for the term of five years." I move that amendment for the reason that I have already suggested; that is that from information communicated to me I am satisfied that the time required to make good cavalymen of the men ordinarily enlisting in the Army is more than two years. Therefore, if the term of enlistment be for only three years, two of those years are spent in the tuition of the men, and they do duty as efficient cavalymen during only one year of their term of service. Hence, although I yield to the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, made during the previous discussion of the bill, in regard to other arms of the service, it seems to me that, in respect to cavalry, the term of enlistment should be for a longer period than three years. The experience of the recent war has shown that cavalymen are of comparatively little utility until they have been trained a long time in the cavalry service. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will prevail.

Mr. SCHENCK. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to go at any length into a discussion of this subject, even if the limitation of five minutes would allow it. This question of the term of enlistments in the Army of the United States was fully considered when the bill was before under discussion. The House then sustained the idea that in this country enlistments for three years are long enough. To the argument then advanced in favor of that term of enlistment, there may, however, be added a consideration founded on what the House has done since that time. The House has recently passed a bill providing for the pay of the Army; and among its provisions for the payment of the privates is a stipulation that every private shall receive for each successive year of service an addition of one dollar per month to his regular monthly pay; so that he will receive seventeen dollars per month for the second year, eighteen dollars the third year; and if he reenlists, nineteen dollars the fourth year, twenty dollars the fifth, &c. I hold that this provision will do more to induce men when once enlisted to remain in the service, will have a greater effect in preventing desertion, and making good and experienced soldiers of the men, than any regulation of the term of enlistment, whether it be fixed at one, five, or ten years.

I will not repeat the argument with reference to the rapidity with which Americans learn the art of war and all that relates to military life. That has already been fully discussed. Americans, as a general rule, live faster and learn faster than the people of other countries; and when they serve three years in the Army they give more out of their lives than most Europeans do if they serve ten years; because the Europeans are a slower people.

So far as regards experience in horsemanship, the whole difficulty may be obviated by having the recruiting stations for cavalry in those parts of the country where men are accustomed to ride in their civil occupations. Let the recruiting agents for cavalry be stationed by the War Department in the western States or in mountainous regions or down in the South; in a word, in those sections of the country where nearly every man is, if not born, at least brought up to be, almost a centaur, half man and half horse. I think that by the exercise of discretion in this respect on the part of the War Department, the difficulty suggested by the gentleman from New York may be altogether obviated.

The amendment of Mr. DAVIS was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to employ in the Territories and Indian country a force of Indians, not to exceed one thousand, to act as scouts, who shall receive the pay and allowances of cavalry soldiers, and be discharged whenever the necessity for their further employment is abated, or at the discretion of the department commander.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That there shall be one general, one lieutenant general, five major generals, and ten brigadier generals, who shall have the same pay and emoluments, and be entitled to the same staff officers in number and grade as now provided by law.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That the adjutant general's department of the Army shall hereafter consist of the officers now authorized by law, and their rank shall be as follows, namely: one adjutant general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier general; four assistant adjutant generals, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonels; five assistant adjutant generals, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant colonels; and ten assistant adjutant generals, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That there shall be four inspector generals of the Army, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonels; and four assistant inspector generals, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant colonels, one of whom shall be specially assigned to duty as inspector of cavalry; and two assistant inspector generals, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That the Bureau of Military Justice shall hereafter consist of one judge advocate general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier general; and one assistant judge advocate general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel; and the said judge advocate general shall receive, revise, and have recorded the proceedings of all courts-martial, courts of inquiry, and military commissions, and shall perform such other duties as have heretofore been performed by the judge advocate general of the Army. And of the judge advocates now in office there may be retained a number, not exceeding ten, to be selected by the Secretary of War, who shall perform their duties under the direction of the judge advocate general until otherwise provided by law, or until the Secretary of War shall decide that their services may be dispensed with.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That the quartermaster's department of the Army shall hereafter consist of one quartermaster general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier general; six quartermasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonel; ten quartermasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant colonels; fifteen quartermasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors; forty-four quartermasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of captains; and at least two thirds of all original vacancies in each of the grades of lieutenant colonel and major, and all original vacancies in the grade of captain shall be filled by selection from among those persons who have rendered meritorious service as assistant quartermasters of volunteers in the Army of the United States in the late war. But after the first appointments made under the provisions of this section, as vacancies may occur in the grades of major and captain in this department, no appointments to fill the same shall be made until the number of majors shall be reduced to twelve and the number of captains to thirty, and thereafter the number of officers in each of said grades shall continue to conform to said reduced numbers. But nothing in this section shall be construed so as to vacate the commission of any officer now commissioned, either as assistant quartermaster general or as deputy quartermaster general, or as assistant quartermaster, but only to change the title to quartermaster in the case of those who rank as colonels, lieutenant colonels, majors, and captains, without affecting in any way their relative position or the time from which they take such rank.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by adding at the end of the word "colonel," in the fifth line, the letter "s;" so that the clause will read, "six quartermasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonels."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That the number of military store-keepers shall hereafter be as many as shall be required, not exceeding sixteen, who shall have the rank, pay, and emoluments of captains.

The Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the act for the better organization of the quartermaster's department, approved July 4, 1864, shall continue in force so far as they do not become obsolete or unnecessary upon the disbandment of the volunteer forces.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That the subsistence department shall hereafter consist of the number of officers now authorized by law, namely: one commissary general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier general; two assistant commissary generals, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonels; two commissaries, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant colonels; eight commissaries, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors; and sixteen commissaries, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of captains. But after the first appointments made under the provisions of this section, as vacancies may occur, reducing the number of officers in the several grades below that of brigadier general of this department, no appointments to fill the same shall be made until the number of colonels shall be reduced to one, the number of majors to eight, and the number of captains to eight. And thereafter the number of officers in each of said several grades shall continue to conform to such reduced numbers. And hereafter no graduate of the United States Military Academy, being at the time in the Army of the United States, or having been therein at any time for three years next preceding, shall be eligible to appointment as an officer in the subsistence department. But this provision shall not extend to graduates of West Point now in the subsistence department. But nothing in this section shall be construed so as to vacate the commission of the commissary general of subsistence, but only to change the title of that officer to commissary general; nor to vacate the commission of any officer now commissioned as assistant commissary general of subsistence or commissary of subsistence, but only to change the title to commissary in the cases of those who rank as lieutenant colonels, captains, and majors, without affecting in any way their relative position or the time from which they take rank.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That the Provost General's Bureau shall be continued only so long as, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, may be necessary to close up the business thereof, not exceeding, however, six months from the passage of this act.

Mr. SCHENCK. The word "marshal" has been left out after the word "provost," and I move it be inserted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. To remove all doubts on the subject, I move to add the words "office and" after the words "provost marshal general's."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That the medical department of the Army shall hereafter consist of one surgeon general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier general; one assistant surgeon general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel; one chief medical purveyor and four assistant medical purveyors, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant colonels, who shall give the same bonds which are or may be required of assistant paymaster generals of like grade, and shall, when not acting as purveyors, be assignable to duty as surgeons by the President; seventy surgeons, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors; one hundred and forty assistant surgeons, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of first lieutenants for the first three years' service, and with the rank, pay, and emoluments of captains after three years' service; and five medical store-keepers, with the same compensation as is now provided by law; and at least two thirds of the original vacancies in the grades of surgeon and assistant surgeon shall be filled by selection by competitive examination from among the persons who have served as staff or regimental surgeons or assistant surgeons of volunteers in the Army of the United States two years during the late war, and one third from similar officers of the regular Army; and persons who have served as assistant surgeons three years in the volunteer service shall be eligible for promotion to the grade of captain.

Mr. DONNELLY. I move, in the twenty-third line, after "one third" to insert the words "in the same manner." It is a verbal amendment, and meets with the approval of the chairman of the committee. It provides that they shall be selected by competitive examination.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will suggest a difficulty which may arise under the gentleman's amendment in reference to these officers of the regular Army. Assistant surgeons come up in turn by seniority for examination and promotion, and there being but one vacancy to be filled, the examination can scarcely be called competitive. In respect to volunteers, when you have ten or fifteen candidates presenting themselves you examine them all and admit on competitive examination; but when a vacancy occurs liable to be filled from the regular Army officers you do not examine all who are assistant surgeons.

Mr. DONNELLY. It seems to me any examination is a competitive examination. If the first one who presents himself be found not competent, then you take the next one, and so on.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not object to it; I only suggest that there may be that difficulty in the practical application. The gentleman has considered the subject, however, and I do not raise any objection.

The SPEAKER. It is already in the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend the section by adding at the end as follows:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to appoint from the enlisted men of the Army, or cause to be enlisted, as many hospital stewards as the service may require, to be permanently attached to the medical department under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe.

I will say, in regard to the amendment, that this act repeals the law of 1862, a little clause of which I want saved. That clause I have taken out, and propose to add it at the end of this section. It may prove a valuable provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 22. And be it further enacted, That the pay department of the Army shall hereafter consist of one paymaster general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier general; two assistant paymaster generals, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonels; two assistant paymaster generals, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant colonels; and forty paymasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors; and the original vacancies in the grade of major shall be filled by selection from those persons who have served faithfully as paymasters or additional paymasters in the Army of the United States in the late war. And hereafter no graduate of the United States Military Academy, being at the time in the Army of the United States, or having been at any time for three years next preceding, shall be eligible to appointment as an officer in the pay department. But this provision shall not extend to graduates of West Point now in the pay department.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to amend in line four by striking out the words "assistant" and "generals" and adding to the word "paymaster" the letter "s," so that it will read, "two paymasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonel." It will then correspond with the section organizing the quartermaster's department. It is for the sake of the symmetry of the bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman will observe that there are also "two assistant paymaster generals, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant colonels;" and I suggest that he make his amendment apply to those, so that the second set of assistant paymasters shall be called paymasters only, instead of paymaster generals.

Mr. SPALDING. I accept the modification.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will suggest that if the amendment of my colleague is adopted it will involve the necessity of a similar clause to come in at the end of the section, as is found in section nineteen in regard to vacating commissions.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to add at the end of the section a clause similar to that contained in section nineteen in regard to vacating commissions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. And be it further enacted, That the corps of Engineers shall consist of one chief engineer, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier general, six colonels, sixteen lieutenant colonels, twenty-two majors, thirty captains, and twenty first and ten second lieutenants, who shall have the pay and emoluments now provided by law for officers of the Engineer corps of these several grades respectively. But after the first appointments made under the provisions of this section as vacancies may occur in the several grades of lieutenant colonel, major, and captain, no appointments to fill the same shall be made until the number of lieutenant colonels shall be reduced to fifteen, the number of majors to twenty, and the number of captains to fifteen, and the number of second lieutenants to fifteen, and thereafter the number of officers in each of said several grades shall continue to conform to such reduced number.

Mr. SCHENCK. There is an error in line ten; the word "and" should be stricken out, and after the word "captain" the words "and second lieutenants" should be inserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a privileged question. I submit a minority report from the joint committee on reconstruction, and move that the same number of copies be printed as of the majority report.

The report was laid on the table, and the question of printing was referred to the Committee on Printing under the law.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (S. No. 127) for the relief of Jonathan W. Gordon, late major in the eleventh regiment of infantry;

An act (S. No. 230) to reimburse the State of West Virginia for moneys expended for the United States in enrolling, equipping, and paying military forces to aid in suppressing the rebellion;

An act (S. No. 278) for the relief of Captain John H. Crowell, assistant quartermaster in the United States Army;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 71) referring the petition and papers in the case of Joseph Nock to the Court of Claims;

A resolution (S. R. No. 85) explanatory of and in addition to the act of May 5, 1864, entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in Wisconsin;" and

An act (S. No. 174) to establish a hydrographic office in the Navy Department.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee of Elections, submitted additional testimony in the contested-election case of Koontz vs. Coffroth; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

ARMY BILL—AGAIN.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 24. And be it further enacted, That the five companies of engineer soldiers, and the sergeant major and quartermaster sergeant heretofore prescribed by law, shall constitute a battalion of engineers, to be officered by officers of suitable rank detailed from the corps of Engineers; and the officers of engineers acting respectively as adjutant and quartermaster of this battalion shall be entitled to the pay and emoluments of adjutants and quartermasters.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 25. And be it further enacted, That the ordnance department of the Army shall consist of the same number of officers and enlisted men as is now authorized by law, and the officers shall be of the following grades, namely: one brigadier general, three colonels, six lieutenant colonels, twelve majors, twenty captains, twelve first lieutenants, ten second lieutenants, all of whom shall have the same pay and emoluments as now provided by law; and thirteen ordnance store-keepers, of whom a number not exceeding six may also be appointed and authorized to act as paymasters at armories and arsenals. The ordnance store-keeper and paymaster at the national armory at Springfield, Massachusetts, shall have the rank, pay, and emoluments of other paymasters of the Army, and all other ordnance store-keepers shall have the rank, pay, and emoluments of captains. But after the first appointments made under the provisions of this section, as vacancies may occur, reducing the number of officers in the several grades of this department below the rank of brigadier general, no appointments to fill the same shall be made until the number of colonels shall be reduced to one, the number of lieutenant colonels to three, the number of majors to five, the number of captains to ten, and the number of first lieutenants to ten; and thereafter the number of officers in each of said several grades shall continue to conform to such reduced numbers.

Mr. PAINE. I move to amend by adding at the end of the section the following:

Two thirds of all the military store-keepers and ordnance store-keepers shall be persons who have performed meritorious service as officers or soldiers in the Army of the United States during the late rebellion.

Mr. SCHENCK. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that there are thirteen ordnance store-keepers provided for in this bill, which is precisely the number now in office and employed at the different points where ordnance stores are necessarily kept. Six of these thirteen store-keepers serve also as paymasters, and they too are provided for in the section; so that there is no increase of the number. And the same is true in regard to military store-keepers in the quartermaster's department. The amendment proposes that two thirds of all these officers shall be appointed from among those who served as volunteers. Now, I think every gentleman will acquit me of any desire to take away or abridge the claims of volunteers in these appointments; but I wish to apprise the House of the fact that this proposition is virtually voting out of office two thirds of all the military and ordnance store-keepers who are now holding these places in order to make room for volunteers to be appointed in their places; and it might so happen that it would dispense with some that the gentlemen themselves would prefer to retain.

I am willing that the sense of the House should be taken upon this, but I desire the House to understand the question. I would suggest, however, to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] that his amendment does not perhaps clearly express what he intends. It should read "the military store-keepers provided for in the seventeenth section of this act," &c. There is much more reason why volunteers should be made military store-keepers in the quartermaster's department than that they should be made ordnance store-keepers.

Mr. DUMONT. I think this should apply to ordnance keepers also.

Mr. PAINE. I will modify my amendment so that it will read as follows:

Two thirds of all the military store-keepers and ordnance keepers provided for by the seventeenth section of this act and by this section shall be persons who have performed meritorious services as officers or soldiers in the armies of the United States during the late rebellion.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] will not prevail. We have now serving in these departments men who have served there for years, who are acquainted with the details and the requirements of the service. This amendment proposes to substitute in place of two thirds of those officers men who have had no connection with that kind of service, even during the late war. By this amendment, if adopted, any person who has been an officer or soldier in any branch of the service during the late war will be entitled to promotion now. I think such a provision would operate unfairly and unjustly both upon the officers now in service and upon the service. I do not know upon what principles such an amendment can be sustained. I believe those who have become acquainted with the necessities of the service by an experience of three or five or ten years are better fitted for the discharge of those duties than those who have not been in the service so long. I think a general who has been in service for five or ten years is a great deal better general, if he has any material at all in him, than though he had been in service but one or two years. And I would apply that principle to all branches of the service, for experience is of the greatest value in business of every character.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin by inserting the word "volunteer" before the words "officers or soldiers." Sir, I do not see the force of the argument of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DAVIS.] for it is based upon the supposition that among those who have served in the volunteer army of the United States there cannot be found meritorious or well-qualified men to fill these positions.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FARQUHAR] misunderstands my position. I oppose this proposition on the ground of its injustice toward those who are now holding these offices, and who will be removed under the operation of this amendment.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I stand corrected. The gentleman objects to the adoption of this amendment because it will remove from position meritorious officers, but officers who have not served in the Army during the war for the suppression of the rebellion. I favor the proposition because it proposes to ask these gentlemen holding these places to step aside and give place to men who have given their time and their services in the suppression of the rebellion. I hold that of all these positions there is not one now held by a gentleman in civil life that cannot be as well filled by a man who has lost an arm or a leg in defense of the country.

Now, sir, this amendment proposes only to displace two thirds of the men now holding these positions. It proposes to leave in office one third of the present appointees, because it is presumed that some of these arsenals, such as that at Springfield and others that might be named, require the services of experienced officers who have been in the employ of the Government in this capacity for years. Such positions do not number more than one third of the whole. The remaining two thirds are to be filled, according to the amendment, by the gallant soldiers who have fought for the Republic. I am in favor of filling all these important places with meritorious and qualified soldiers. I have had the pleasure myself, within the last few days, of declining a re-nomination as a candidate for Congress. I have stepped aside to give place to a gallant and worthy officer who has served his country with honor.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that the House will adopt this proposition.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise, sir, to oppose the amendment to the amendment. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the pending proposition is characterized by great injustice. Who are these men who have served in these departments? When did they go there? Sir, they have held these positions for years. They have made the duties of those positions the business of their lives; and considering the age at which many of them have now arrived, I submit that a generous or a just Government will not turn them adrift upon the world without employment, and in some cases probably without means of support. I hope that no proposition involving such injustice will receive the approval of this House.

Mr. FARQUHAR's amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. PAINE, as amended,

Mr. DAVIS called for a vote by division, and there were—ayes twenty-six.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] consents that this amendment shall be reserved to be voted on to-morrow; and with that understanding I withdraw the call for a division.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, this amendment will be reserved to be voted on hereafter.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 26. And be it further enacted, That there shall be one chief signal officer of the Army, who shall have the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel. And the Secretary of War shall have power to detail from the Army six officers, and not to exceed one hundred non-commissioned officers and privates to be taken from the battalion of engineers for the performance of signal duty: Provided, That no officer or enlisted man shall be detailed to serve in the Signal corps until he shall have been examined and approved by a military board to be convened by the Secretary of War for that purpose; and enlisted men, while so detailed, shall, when deemed necessary, be mounted upon horses provided by the Government.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 27. And be it further enacted, That in all the staff corps promotions may hereafter be made without regard to seniority in the date of appointments or commissions, and the same rule of promotion by merit alone shall apply to all officers of the line above the grade of captain.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend by adding at the end of the section just read the following:

Provided, That in applying the rule of promotion, no distinction shall be made between officers of regiments composed of colored men and those composed of white men, but the promotions shall be by interchange equally open to all said officers.

Mr. LE BLOND. I should be glad to have the House adjourn now as this will give rise to debate and we shall not be able to dispose of it this afternoon.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will detain the House but a moment. My object in offering the amendment is to make the Army a unit by providing for an interchange of promotion of officers from colored regiments to white regiments and from white regiments to colored regiments. It is to prevent the growing up of different castes in the Army of the United States, so that all officers may have an opportunity in this interchange of promotion of belonging to white regiments or to colored regiments. I think it would be unfortunate if we should have an army composed in part of white troops and in part of colored troops, with a prohibition of all interchange of promotion on the part of the officers from one to the other.

I have no doubt it was the intention of the committee that such interchange should take place, and I presume such is the fair construction, but I am not willing to leave the subject to the construction of those who shall have the control of the execution of this bill when it becomes a law. I desire to provide distinctly that the Army shall be a unit, and that officers may be promoted from colored troops to white troops and from white troops to colored troops. I wish to break down all feeling of caste and class which will continue in the Army and grow stronger day by day and year by year unless this be done. It seems to me officers, whether they command white troops or black troops, being white officers, should be upon an equal footing.

Mr. LE BLOND moved that the House do now adjourn.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Clerk of the House in reference to the constitutional amendment; which was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF GOLD.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury in reply to a resolution of the House in regard to gold sold since February 1, 1866, by whom sold, &c.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the communication of the Secretary of the Treasury, just announced to the House, be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, with instructions to inquire fully into all the facts and statements therein contained; and that the committee also inquire whether any gold has been purchased for the Treasury since the 1st day of January, 1865, the amount of such purchase, by whom and of whom made, the amount of premium paid, the compensation allowed the person acting for the Government; also that the committee report the dates and amounts of the several sales of gold made since the 1st day of January, 1866, the names of the purchasers, the amounts purchased by each, the time of purchase, and all the circumstances attending such purchases and amount paid the agent of the Treasury; that the committee have power to send for persons and papers, and shall report the results of the inquiry hereby directed to the House with such recommendations as may be deemed proper for the interests of the Government.

The SPEAKER stated, as the communication promised to give rise to debate, he would withdraw it for the present.

The motion of Mr. LE BLOND was then agreed to; and thereupon (at four o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. CONKLING: The petition of William Baker, of Utica, New York, asking the extension of a patent.

By Mr. HULBURD: The petition of sundry citizens of Pennsylvania, asking an increase of duty on flax, &c.

By Mr. SMITH: The petition of Hale & Rust, of Covington, Kentucky, asking suspension of time in which to pay tax on manufactured tobacco.

By Mr. TRIMBLE: The petitions of R. W. Thornbrough, H. E. Bailey, William Burgess, H. F. Riley, Jabez Gifford, S. S. Brown, and Josiah Graves, praying to be paid their bounty and wages as soldiers of the United States.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 20, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. TRUMBULL, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HARRIS presented four petitions of citizens of New York, praying for the repeal or modification of the law imposing a tax of ten per cent. on the circulation of State banks after the 1st of July next; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of C. P. Williams, of Albany, New York, remonstrating against the repeal or modification of the law imposing a tax of ten per cent. on the circulation of State banks after the 1st of July next; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KIRKWOOD presented the petition of J. W. Turner, a captain in the Veteran Reserve corps, praying for remuneration for expenses incurred by him for traveling and subsistence from Young's Point, Louisiana, to his home in Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. MORRILL. I present five petitions from many persons resident in the District of Columbia setting forth that they believe it is prejudicial to the interests of the United States as well as to the people of the District of Columbia, to continue longer the municipalities of Washington and Georgetown, and have distinct and often conflicting laws to govern them, and that taxes are far greater, with less improvements, than would be the case if the charters were abolished, and therefore they, tax-payers of said cities, who pay the amounts set opposite their respective names, do ask that both the charters of Washington and Georgetown be abolished and that the Congress of the United States become the only law-making power within this District, and that a law be at once passed placing them in that position. That subject has been acted upon by the committee, and I move that these petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred sundry petitions and memorials praying for various amendments to the Constitution of the United States, have instructed me to report them back and ask to be discharged from their further consideration, as they relate to amendments which have already been acted on by the two Houses. The report was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back to the Senate a joint resolution (S. R. No. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; a joint resolution (S. R. No. 5) submitting to the Legislatures of the several States a proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States; a joint resolution (S. R. No. 8) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; a joint resolution (S. R. No. 9) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, for the protection of the national debt, and the rejection of any rebel debt; a joint resolution (S. R. No. 10) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and also House joint resolution No. 9 to amend the Constitution of the United States, with a recommendation that these several joint resolutions be indefinitely postponed; and for the purpose of removing them from the Calendar, I ask that they be acted upon at the present time, stating that all of these joint resolutions to amend the Constitution relate to amendments which have already been adopted by the two Houses. There is, therefore, no occasion for their appearing on the Calendar, and I ask that the report be considered at this time with the view of indefinitely postponing them.

The joint resolutions were indefinitely postponed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 78) for the relief of loyal citizens of the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson, in the State of West Virginia, have instructed me to report it back with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. A bill which came from the House of Representatives has already passed both Houses upon this subject, rendering this resolution unnecessary. I ask that the report be acted upon at once.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I did not understand what the subject was.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is a joint resolution introduced by the Senator's colleague in reference to claims arising in the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson. A bill covering the same provision came from the House of Representatives the other day and was concurred in by the Senate, so that the subject is already disposed of, and it is unnecessary to consider this resolution.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I understand it now. I did not catch what the Senator said in the first place.

The joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am also instructed by the same committee to report back the bill (S. No. 232) to provide appropriate legislation to enforce article thirteen of the amendments to the Constitution abolishing slavery in the United States, with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, the subject having already been acted upon by the Senate.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution of the two Houses directing the standing Committees of both Houses on Public Buildings and Grounds to inquire and report what further provisions, if any, should be made for the accommodation of the State Department, reported a joint resolution (S. R. No. 110) to authorize the hiring of a building or buildings for the temporary accommodation of the Department of State; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. POLAND, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred a petition of citizens of Albemarle county, Virginia, praying for the passage of an act exempting Dr. Charles Brown from the limitation of the patent laws, and that he may receive a patent for his invention, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 495) for the relief of Mary A. Patrick, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Annie E. Dixon, widow of Major Henry T. Dixon, late a paymaster in the United States Army, praying for a pension, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 684) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary A. McManus, widow of Captain Andrew McManus, late of the sixty-ninth Pennsylvania volunteer infantry, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GRIMES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 452) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept League Island, in the Delaware river, for naval purposes, and to dispense with and dispose of the site of the existing yard at Philadelphia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Drusey A. Layman, praying for a pension, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 376) granting a pension to Drusey A. Layman. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

EMIL COHEN.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 661) changing the name of Emil Cohen, have instructed me to report it back with a recommendation that it pass. I suppose there will be no objection to acting upon it at this time and disposing of it. It is merely changing a person's name to correspond with the family name.

By unanimous consent the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes Emil Cohen, of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, to take and use the surname of Cornely, and that his name hereafter be Cornely; and all acts done and entered into by that name are to have the same effect and operation in law as if his name had originally been Emil Cornely, of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WIDOW OF GENERAL BERRY.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 375) to amend an act granting a pension to the widow of the late Major General Hiram G. Berry, to report it back without amendment, and with a recommendation that it pass. A pension bill was passed for her benefit some two years ago by a wrong name, a wrong name having been given in the petition. This is simply to amend the given name. She has lain out of the pension now for more than a year, and the committee ask me to request the Senate to consider the bill now.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. In the act granting a pension to the widow of the late Major General Hiram G. Berry, approved March 3, 1865, she was erroneously called "Eliza Berry," and the bill therefore directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Elmira M. Berry, widow of Major General Hiram G. Berry, on the pension-rolls, instead of Eliza Berry, as provided for in that act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN STATE PAPERS.

Mr. HOWE. The Joint Committee on the Library having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) to authorize the distribution of surplus copies of the American State Papers in the custody of the Secretary of the Interior, have directed me to report it back with a recommendation that it pass. I suppose there will be no objection to its consideration at this time.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to distribute by mail or otherwise four hundred copies of the American State Papers, second series, in seventeen volumes, in the following manner: to each member of the Senate and House of Representatives of the present Congress, one copy of each volume; and to such public and college libraries as may be designated by the Joint Committee on the Library, one copy each.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CRAGIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (S. No. 377) to amend an act entitled "An act to enable guardians and committees of lunatics, appointed in the several States, to act within the District of Columbia," approved March 8, 1864; and

A bill (S. No. 378) to provide for the adoption of children and change of names in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOWE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 111) for the relief of Sergeant Milton McKinnon; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 379) to amend the several acts to indemnify the States for expenses incurred by them in defense of the United States; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 380) to incorporate the Washington County Horse Railroad Company in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

EXPENDITURES FOR PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Whereas a statement of the expenditures of the United States for the various public works of the Government, in each State and Territory of the Union from 1789 to 1860, was made in reply to a resolution of the House of Representatives by the Secretary of the Treasury under date of July 12, 1861, (Executive Document No. 9, Thirty-Seventh Congress, first session;) Therefore,

Resolved, That the President be requested to further inform the Senate of the amount expended for the same purposes in each State and Territory of the Union and in the District of Columbia to the close of the year 1865.

RAILROADS IN KANSAS.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to take up Senate bill No. 320.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 320) to amend an act entitled "An act for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of certain railroads and telegraphs in said State," approved March 3, 1863, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Whenever it shall be deemed impracticable or inexpedient to construct any portion of the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fé railroad in the manner required by the act of March 3, 1863, and whenever the Governor of Kansas shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that upon such portion, in lieu thereof, the railroad company have constructed a road suitable for the running of a steam traction engine with its train of cars over the same, the grant of lands in that act made shall be confirmed to the State for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the road, and in all other respects as in that act provided; but the amount of lands granted in that act, when applied to the construction of a steam traction road, shall be three alternate sections of land per mile, designated by odd numbers, on each side of the road; and patents are to issue upon the completion of every twelve miles of road upon the certificate of the Governor.

By the second section the company is to construct the roadway from the boundary line of the State of Kansas, through the Territories of the United States, on the most eligible route to Santa Fé, in the Territory of New Mexico, and to such Government forts in that Territory as the President of the United States may approve; and the company is to have the right of way through the public domain to the extent of two hundred feet on each side of the road. And for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the roadway and its equipment and to secure the safe and speedy transmission of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and supplies over the road, the same amount of land not mineral, (but not excluding iron or coal,) is granted to the company, as in the first section of this act is provided, and upon the same terms and conditions, but upon the certificate of a commissioner appointed by the Secretary of the Interior that the conditions have been complied with.

These grants are made only upon condition that the road shall be constructed in a substantial and workmanlike manner, with all necessary culverts, bridges, viaducts, crossings, stations, and watering places, and other appurtenances, including engines and cars sufficient to move not less than fifty tons, or two hundred passengers, in one train, at a rate of six miles an hour.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to change the phraseology in order to improve the language of the first section. In line four I move to strike out the word "said" and insert the word "the," and in line six to strike out the word "said" and insert the word "the."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction being a verbal correction will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. In line six, after the word "State" I wish to insert the words "of Kansas."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That alteration will also be made in order to make the bill more explicit.

Mr. HARRIS. In line eight I desire to strike out the words "said railroad company have constructed."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That alteration will also be made.

Mr. HARRIS. In line ten, after the word "same" I desire to insert the words "has been constructed."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those words will be inserted if there be no objection.

Mr. GRIMES. Does that enlarge the grant?

Mr. HARRIS. No; it diminishes it. It gives these three sections of land, instead of ten, that they had under the old grant.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to hear the Senator from New York state what the bill is. What sort of a railway is this to be?

Mr. HARRIS. A bill was passed in 1863 authorizing the construction of two or three roads, and among others one from Topeka to Santa Fé, and granting ten sections of land—the usual grant of lands. This company now desires to construct a part of the road for the purpose of operating a traction engine.

Mr. GRIMES. What is that?

Mr. HARRIS. An engine to run without rails; and this bill provides that if they do that they may have three sections of land instead of ten. They make the roadway, and do everything but lay the rails, and then run the engine. It is over a level country, I understand, and they are desirous to try this experiment. If they can succeed in it it will be a very great thing.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to ask the Senator whether that is not an experiment entirely.

Mr. HARRIS. They cannot get the land unless they succeed. The bill provides that they are obliged to make the roadway and to put upon it this engine that will carry fifty tons, and if they succeed in that they get three sections of land, three of the ten sections that they are now already allowed if they lay down rails.

Mr. MORRILL. The grant depends upon the success of the experiment?

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

Mr. POMEROY. This is only what we have given to other places for wagon roads. I have my doubts about the experiment, but I want to try it. If they succeed, it will be a great thing; if they do not, there will not be anything lost.

Mr. WADE. I desire to inquire whether this road runs through the Indian Territory.

Mr. HARRIS. I believe not, though the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands can tell that better than I.

Mr. WADE. I can hardly see how it can run anywhere else.

Mr. POMEROY. It runs through country not settled by anybody.

Mr. WADE. But on an Indian reservation.

Mr. POMEROY. No, sir; I do not know that there is any reservation there. It runs on the regular Santa Fé road, which has been in operation for fifty years.

Mr. HARRIS. Whether it does or not, a grant is already made of the ten sections to the road, and now we desire to reduce that from ten to three. We do not grant anything additional; on the contrary, we reduce it.

Mr. WADE. We cannot grant that Indian land, I suppose.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator from New York is mistaken in one thing. The bill grants three sections on each side of the road, making six sections instead of ten, as under the old grant.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to take up the resolution of the House of Representatives fixing a time for the adjournment of the present session of Congress. In presenting the motion I desire to say that I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Finance is prepared to take up the tax bill to-day, or within a very short time. That bill has been reported to the Senate and printed. That was the important measure which it was generally understood ought to be before the Senate for consideration before we should fix a time for adjournment. Of course we know about the number of days that the consideration of that bill will require.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I shall be very much obliged to the Senator if he can fix the exact number of days.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I saw in a leading paper this morning or yesterday that it would probably require about four days. I have the judgment of an important paper of the country to that effect. I presume that bill would require a week. It is a good deal of a book. Does the Senator think it will require more time than a week? He does not think it will require more time than a week.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is very certain, I think, that the Senate cannot consider all the measures that are before it prior to an adjournment. We shall have to elect in regard to the bills that we shall finally consider and pass. If we now fix the time of the adjournment, the Senate will then give its attention to those measures of greater importance, passing by, for this session, those which do not specially require the consideration of the body. I think all Senators desire that we shall adjourn now as soon as possible. It is the interest of the country, I think, that we shall adjourn; it is certainly to our comfort that we shall not stay here much longer. I think that an early day in July can be fixed for the adjournment. I move, therefore, that the resolution be taken up.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope it will not be taken up and considered this morning. In the first place, there is not time to consider it now between this period and the hour at which I desire to take up the tax bill—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the resolution named by the Senator from Indiana has been referred, by order of the Senate, to the Committee on Finance, and has not yet been reported. The resolution not being before the Senate, the Chair is of opinion that the motion of the Senator from Indiana cannot be entertained.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I modify my motion so that it shall be a motion to discharge the Committee on Finance from the further consideration of the resolution, with a view to its present consideration by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution named by the Senator from Indiana. The question is on that motion.

Mr. HENDRICKS. On that I desire to say just one word. It is not a complicated measure or question which requires the judgment of a committee before the Senate can be able to act upon it. It is a single proposition, which we can all comprehend without any elaboration from a committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from Indiana is a very much more fortunate man than I am if at the present time he can fix a day which will be reliable on which we can adjourn. I am, of course, quite anxious to adjourn, as much so as any man. I think I ought certainly to be anxious to adjourn at as early a day as possible; but in the present state of the business we cannot tell anything about it. In the first place, the Senate will observe that the Army bill is not finished; the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill is not finished; the Indian appropriation bill has not been reported; the miscellaneous or sundry civil expenses appropriation bill has not yet been reported to the House of Representatives, and the tariff bill has not yet been reported to the House, all of which will take considerable time—I do not know how much—in that body certainly, and in this. Then there is the tax bill, which has not yet been acted upon by the Senate. It is impossible to say how long it will take. I hope we shall be able to get through with it in three days, and I think we ought to do so; but my experience satisfies me that there is no possibility of determining beforehand how long a bill of this kind will take. A debate springs up upon some little matter that is of interest locally and not generally, and hours of the Senate are spent in discussing that; and when it gets to five o'clock Senators are always very anxious to adjourn, and I am one of them in the present state of things; and they are averse to meeting in the evening, and to do so would be really more than we could do consistently with our health. I know it is more than I can do. I should be very glad to be relieved from the whole matter if I could.

Then, after this bill passes the Senate it will go to the House of Representatives, and when it gets there there will be, probably, according to the usual course, a general refusal to concur in our amendments and the appointment of a committee of conference, and that committee always sits several days upon bills of this description.

At present, then, although I am exceedingly anxious to get through, and believe that if we content ourselves with talking very little and working a good deal we may get through by the middle of July, we cannot tell on what precise day in July we shall be able to adjourn. It is now impossible to tell, and I am unwilling at this early day to fix the time, because then gentlemen will be apt to forget that the day is fixed and spend so much time in debate that a vast deal of business will be crowded into the last few days of the session, and we shall be obliged to sit late at night in order to get through, and then there will be danger of bad legislation.

The Committee on Finance, therefore, have come to the conclusion, so far as I understand their opinions on the subject, that until we dispose of two or three more measures, or get further along so as to see when they will be finally through, it is impossible to fix a day of adjournment with any certainty or safety. I hope, then, that the Senate will not agree to the motion made by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the Senate postpone the present motion now pending and all other orders of business, with the view of taking up Senate bill No. 285. We have had that bill up repeatedly, and I think we can dispose of it in a few moments.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I submit that it is not in order to postpone one motion to take up another motion. I submitted a motion to take up a particular proposition. That measure is not yet before the Senate. Now the Senator from Missouri moves to postpone my motion. It is not like postponing a measure that is before the body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the motion of the Senator from Indiana must be disposed of before a motion to take up any other measure can be entertained.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to say but a word or two in reply to the Senator from Maine. I have not desired to call up this proposition until I thought the business of the Senate was in such a condition that we could safely fix a time for the adjournment. It is known to that Senator and all other Senators that the business never does come to a shape for an adjournment until we fix a day. The Army bill of which he speaks has already received the consideration of the Senate. It was passed by the Senate, sent to the House of Representatives, and I believe was lost in that body. I do not know whether it is the purpose of the chairman of the Military Committee to present any other measure for the consideration of the Senate with a view to the reorganization of the Army. I do not know what his purpose on that subject is; but I would not be willing, after we have passed one bill and the House has defeated it, to postpone an adjournment with a view to the consideration of another Army bill. Nor, sir, would I be willing to postpone an adjournment to get another tariff bill before us. I think within the last few years we have had quite enough legislation on that subject. This constant legislation upon the tariff is not fortunate for the general interests of the country or for the interests of business men. I do not think myself that there is any occasion to protract the session with a view to a modification of the tariff; but of course if such a bill comes here before an adjournment we shall give it attention. There are a good many reasons why I think Congress ought to adjourn, and I ask the yeas and nays upon the motion to discharge the committee from the consideration of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 6, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Davis, Guthrie, Hendricks, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, and Saulsbury—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Conness, Cragin, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Kirkwood, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Yates—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Cowan, Creswell, Dixon, Doolittle, Howe, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Norton, Ramsey, Riddle, Sprague, Sumner, Wilson, and Wright—18.

So the motion was not agreed to.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. W. G. Moore, his Secretary, announced that the President had approved and signed, on the 18th instant, the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. No. 350) to authorize the Commissioner of Patents to pay those employed as examiners and assistant examiners the salary fixed by law for the duties performed by them; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 87) to provide for the payment of bounty to certain Indian regiments.

KANSAS AND NEOSHO VALLEY RAILROAD.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 285.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 285) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to Red river, the pending question being on the amendment reported from the Committee on Public Lands as amended, in section eleven, after the word "State," in line three to strike out the words "may connect with the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad at any point on the line of said road" and to insert other words; so as to make the section read:

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That any railroad company chartered under any law of the United States, or of the State of Kansas, which may have been heretofore or shall hereafter be recognized and subsidized by any act of the Congress of the United States, may connect, unite, and consolidate with this railroad company, after the same shall be located to the valley of the Neosho river, upon just, fair, and equitable terms, to be agreed upon between the parties, and shall not be against the public interest or the interest of the United States; nor shall any road authorized to connect as aforesaid charge the road so connecting a greater tariff per mile for freight or passengers than is charged for the same per mile by its own road: And provided further, That should the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Fort Gibson Railroad Company, or the Union Pacific Railroad Company, southern branch, construct and complete its road to that point on the southern boundary of the State of Kansas, where the line of said Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad shall cross the same, before the said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company shall have constructed and completed its said road to said point, then and in that event the company so first reaching in completion the said point on the southern boundary of the State of Kansas shall be authorized, upon obtaining the written approval of the President of the United States, to construct and operate its line of railroad from said point to a point at or near Preston, in the State of Texas, with grants of land according to the provisions of this act, but upon the further special condition, nevertheless, that said railroad company shall have commenced in good faith the construction thereof before the said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company shall have completed its said railroad to said point: And provided further, That said other railroad company, so having commenced said work in good faith, shall continue to prosecute the same with sufficient energy to insure the completion of the same within a reasonable time, subject to the approval of the President of the United States: And provided further, That the right of way, when not otherwise granted in this act, and not provided for by law, shall be obtained by said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company, or either of the other companies named in this act, in accordance with the provisions of section three of an act to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee. There are some objections to it as it stands; and to avoid those objections I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Secretary read the amendment to the amendment, which was in line thirty-nine of the committee's amendment, after the word "way" to insert "through private property;" so as to make the clause read:

That the right of way through private property, when not otherwise granted in this act, &c.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I cannot understand the amendment to the amendment by that reading of it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suggest that the Clerk read the several amendments in that connection, and the Senator will see what is aimed at.

The SECRETARY. It is moved after the word "way" in the thirty-ninth line to insert the words "through private property;" in the same line to strike out the word "granted" and insert the words "provided for;" and in the same line to strike out the word "bill" and insert the words "act, or by the laws of any State through which the road may pass;" so that the proviso will read:

And provided further, That the right of way through private property, when not otherwise provided for in this act, or by the laws of any State through which the road may pass, and not provided for by law, shall be obtained by said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company, or either of the other companies named in this act, &c.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not very well understand the force of this proposed amendment.

Mr. POMEROY. If the Senator will allow me, the Senator from Missouri is not aware of the amendment to that clause which has been made heretofore on my motion. The word "bill," in the thirty-ninth line, has already been stricken out and the words "act and not provided for by law" inserted. He has merely repeated the amendment which I offered some time ago to the bill, and which was adopted.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think instead of amending this eleventh section, which provides for running this road or some other road down to the Indian country, that the Senate had better disagree to the eleventh section entirely, and not undertake to run a road through the Indian country at all. Then it will stand as a naked bill proposing to run a road from Kansas City, on the Missouri river, to the southern boundary of the State of Kansas; and then when the Indian country is opened from that point to the Texas line, at some future time, Congress can legislate fully on the subject. It is known to the Senate that there is a portion of this country through which Congress has no power now to authorize the running of a railroad; and certainly it will be better not to undertake to legislate now, but to provide for a road, if it is the pleasure of Congress to run a road within a distance of a few miles from a road already provided for in Kansas, to the southern boundary of the State. I was going to move to strike out the entire amended section.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let us amend it first.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I shall make the motion at the proper time.

Mr. HENDERSON. Lest the Senator may labor under any misapprehension of what my design is in reference to this thing, I will ask him to turn to section eight. I propose, if this amendment shall be adopted, to strike out all after the word "State," in the eighth line of the eighth section, in the following words:

And the right of way through said Indian Territory is hereby granted to said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, to the extent of one hundred feet on each side of said road or roads, and all necessary grounds for stations, buildings, workshops, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water stations.

It was objected the other day by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] that this would interfere with the Indian reservations. I therefore propose to strike out that clause and to insert:

The right of way through the Indian Territory, wherever such right is now reserved, or may hereafter be reserved, to the United States, by treaty with the Indian tribes, is hereby granted to said company to the same extent as granted by the sixth section of this act through the public lands.

By turning to the sixth section the Senator will see what that is:

And in all cases where the right of way, as aforesaid, through the Indian lands shall be reserved to the Government, the said company shall, before constructing its road, procure the consent of the tribe or tribes interested, which consent, with all its terms and conditions, shall be previously approved and indorsed by the President, and filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

That will obviate every objection made against building this road through the Indian country. I believe that the consent is now obtained, by pending treaties, from all the tribes except one, and that is the Cherokee tribe; and they have passed a resolution through their legislature inviting the construction of this road. I provide that the road shall not be built until treaty obligations have been secured reserving to the United States the right to build the road through there, or until the legislatures of these territorial organizations shall give their consent, and that consent shall have been indorsed by the President and filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HENDRICKS. What is the amendment you propose to the eleventh section?

Mr. HENDERSON. It is to obviate the objection made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] the other day, which was a very sound objection, that we provided in this bill to obtain the right of way, not according to the laws of the United States, but according to the laws of Congress. I propose to make it read, "that the right of way through private property, when not otherwise provided for in this act, or by the laws of any State through which the road may pass, shall be obtained," &c. That will obviate the objection which was very properly urged by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The amendment which the Senator proposes to the eighth section will not be in accordance with the spirit of the eleventh section, because it will be giving the right of way to one particular company, when the eleventh section proposes to make a contest between three companies for the right of way through the Indian country and the right to build a railroad through the Indian country. This bill proposes that these three roads shall meet at the southern boundary of Kansas, and then it shall be a race of speed for the right to construct the trunk road from that point through the Indian country to the northern boundary of Texas. The amendment which the Senator proposes would give the right to one of these companies to the exclusion of the others, and to the exclusion of the right already given to another company.

Mr. POMEROY. All the rights in that country under the bill are to inure to the company that builds the road; so that the Senator from Missouri is entirely right.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The whole bill will have to be construed together. I have no objection to the amendment now pending. If that amendment be made, I shall then move to strike out the whole of the eleventh section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HENDERSON. The section was amended in one respect when last under consideration, and I will ask the Secretary to change my amendment, so that so far as the proviso has been amended in accordance with my view it be not touched.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw his amendment?

Mr. HENDERSON. One portion of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator state what portion?

Mr. HENDERSON. I was not aware that the section had been amended. To get rid of the difficulty, I will move to strike out the words already inserted and insert the words that I have proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read as it now stands.

The Secretary read the amendment to the amendment, which was in line thirty-nine after the word "way" to insert "through private property;" in the same line after the word "otherwise" to strike out the words "granted in this act and not provided for by law" and insert "provided for in this act or by the laws of any State through which the road may pass;" so that the proviso will read:

And provided further, That the right of way through private property, when not otherwise provided for in this act or by the laws of any State through which the road may pass, shall be obtained by said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company, or either of the other companies named in this act, in accordance with the provisions, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to strike out the entire eleventh section, which includes the amendment. The eleventh section is a very short one, but the amendment to it is a very lengthy amendment, covering nearly two pages of the bill. It is this eleventh section that provides for carrying this railway down through the Indian country. My amendment brings the Senate just to this question: whether before the right is secured from the Indians we will provide for the running of a railroad through the Indian country—that is the exact question, that is now presented—or whether you will leave it, just as it was left in the bill three years ago, to a competing road to run to the State line; the right to go through the Indian country in the future to depend upon the action of the Government. The proposition of the Senator from Missouri, I think, is a departure from the policy of the Government. The policy of the Government has been not to allow any parties to treat with the Indians for rights in their land except the Government itself. Individuals cannot treat with the Indians; they cannot acquire rights from the Indians; but the proposition of the Senator is that a railroad company in the State of Kansas shall be authorized to negotiate or to treat with an Indian tribe, provided the assent of the President be secured thereto. Is it the pleasure of Congress, then, when it is not necessary, to depart from the policy of the Government in its intercourse with the Indians? I think this whole objection is obviated by striking out all that relates to the Indian country and leaving that to the future control of the Government. I think it would not be the pleasure of the Senate to agree to this change in the policy toward the Indians that is proposed by the Senator if the attention of the Senate could be secured to the subject. My motion is to strike out the entire eleventh section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the question must first be taken on amending the eleventh section, in order that the Senate may pass its judgment upon perfecting the eleventh section, before the motion to strike out will be in order. The motion to strike out will be in order after the question on the amendment has been acted upon.

Mr. HENDRICKS. After the Senate has inserted those words, can I then move to strike out the whole section?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that this bill and all prior orders be postponed, with a view to proceed to the consideration of the tax bill.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope the Senator will allow us to take a vote on this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I must refuse to give way to anything while the tax bill is pending.

Mr. POMEROY. I hope we shall be allowed to take the vote on this bill. I am afraid we shall never be able to call it up again if we are not permitted to take a vote and dispose of these amendments now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I cannot yield. The Senator can call it up to-morrow in the morning hour. I have made up my mind to object to everything until the tax bill is disposed of, and my friend is an excellent one to practice it upon, as I know he is very good-natured.

Mr. POMEROY. I am sorry the Senator will not allow us a few minutes more to dispose of this bill. We only wish to take the vote.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I asked the Senator from Missouri, when he moved to take it up, if he could get through with the bill in ten minutes, and he said he thought he could. I insist on my motion.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope this railroad bill will be passed over. My friend from Indiana has already consumed four or five morning hours upon it. I shall call it up to-morrow morning again.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In reply to the Senator from Missouri, I feel it my duty to say that I have spoken upon this bill and expressed just such views as I thought it was my duty to express.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not complaining of that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator has been in the habit of calling it up a little while before the expiration of the morning hour, when there was no very good opportunity to discuss it, when it was very difficult to secure the attention of the Senate; and now I give notice that upon this bill I expect to ask the attention of the Senate upon just such questions as I think it my duty to present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to postpone the present and all prior orders, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 513.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL TAXATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 513) to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. FESSENDEN. To save time, I move that the usual course be taken; that the bill be read but once, and the amendments proposed by the Committee on Finance be acted upon as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The course suggested will be taken if there be no objection, and the sense of the Senate will be taken on the amendments proposed by the committee as they are reached in the course of reading the bill.

The Secretary read the first section of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That on and after the 1st day of July, 1865, in lieu of the duties on manufactured cotton, as provided in an act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes, approved June 30, 1864, as amended by the act of March 3, 1865, there shall be paid by the producer, owner, or holder, upon all cotton produced within the United States, and upon which no tax has been levied, paid or collected, a tax of five cents per pound, as hereinafter provided; and the weight of such cotton shall be ascertained by deducting four per cent. for tare from the gross weight of each bale or package; and such tax shall be and remain a lien thereon, in the possession of any person whomsoever, from the time when such cotton is produced as aforesaid until the same shall have been paid; and no drawback shall, in any case, be allowed on raw or unmanufactured cotton of any tax paid thereon when exported in the raw or unmanufactured condition. But no tax shall be imposed upon any cotton imported from other countries, and on which an import duty shall have been paid.

Mr. FESSENDEN. An amendment not proposed by the committee as the bill is printed, but which they think it advisable to make, is to amend that section in the third line by changing the word "July" to "August." I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance reported several amendments to the first section. The first amendment was in line four, to strike out the word "duties" and to insert "taxes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That alteration will be made, if there be no objection.

The next amendment was in line twelve, to strike out the word "five" and insert "two," so as to make the tax on cotton two cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line seventeen, to insert after the word "when" the words "this law takes effect, or;" so that the clause will read:

From the time when this law takes effect, or such cotton is produced as aforesaid until the same shall have been paid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment will be made, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the second section, as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the aforesaid tax upon cotton shall be levied by the assessor on the producer, owner, or holder thereof. And said tax shall be paid to the collector of internal revenue within and for the collection district in which said cotton shall have been produced, and before the same shall have been removed therefrom, except where otherwise provided in this act; and every collector to whom any tax upon cotton shall be paid shall mark the bales or other packages upon which the tax shall have been paid, in such manner as may clearly indicate the payment thereof, and shall give to the owner or other person having charge of such cotton a permit for the removal of the same, stating therein the amount and payment of the tax, the time and place of payment, and the weight and marks upon the bales and packages, so that the same may be fully identified; and it shall be the duty of every such collector to keep clear and sufficient records of all such cotton inspected or marked, and of all marks and identifications thereof, and of all permits for the removal of the same, and of all his transactions relating thereto, and he shall make full returns thereof, monthly, to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The Committee on Finance proposed no amendment to this section.

The Secretary read the next section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized to designate one or more places in each collection district where an assessor or an assistant assessor and a collector or deputy collector shall be located, and where cotton may be brought for the purpose of being weighed and appropriately marked: Provided, That it shall be the duty of the assessor or assistant assessor and the collector or deputy collector to assess and cause to be properly marked the cotton wherever it may be in said district, provided their necessary traveling expenses to and from said designated place, for that purpose, be paid by the owners thereof.

The Committee on Finance proposed no amendment to this section.

The Secretary read the fourth section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all cotton having been weighed and marked as herein provided, and for which permits shall have been duly obtained of the assessor, may be removed from the district in which it has been produced to any one other district, without prepayment of the tax due thereon, upon the execution of such transportation bonds or other security and in accordance with such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. The said cotton so removed shall be delivered to the collector of internal revenue or his deputy forthwith upon its arrival at its point of destination, and shall remain subject to his control until the taxes thereon, and any necessary charges of custody thereof, shall have been paid, but nothing herein contained shall authorize any delay of the payment of said taxes for more than ninety days from the date of the permits: and when cotton shall have been weighed and marked for which a permit shall have been granted without prepayment of the tax, it shall be the duty of the assessor granting such permit to give immediate notice of such permit to the collector of internal revenue for the district to which said cotton is to be transported, and he shall also transmit therewith a statement of the taxes due thereon, and of the bonds or other securities for the payment thereof, and he shall make full returns and statements of the same to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The Committee on Finance proposed no amendment to this section.

The Secretary read the fifth section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That it shall be unlawful from and after the 1st day of September, 1866, for the owner, master, supercargo, agent, or other person having charge of any vessel, or for any railroad company, or other transportation company, or for any common carrier, or other person, to convey, or attempt to convey, or transport any cotton—the growth or produce of the United States—from any point in the district in which it shall have been produced, unless each bale or package thereof shall have attached to or accompanying it the proper marks or evidence of the payment of the revenue tax and a permit of the collector for such removal, or the permit of the assessor, as hereinbefore provided, under regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, nor to convey or transport any cotton from any State in which cotton is produced to any port or place in the United States, without a certificate from the collector of internal revenue of the district from which it was brought, and such other evidence as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, that the tax has been paid thereon, and such certificate and evidence as aforesaid shall be furnished to the collector of the district to which it is transported, and his permit obtained before landing, discharging, or delivering such cotton at the place to which it is transported as aforesaid. And any person or persons who shall violate the provisions of this act in this respect shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each bale of cotton so conveyed or transported, or attempted to be conveyed or transported, or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both; and all vessels and vehicles employed in such conveyance or transportation shall be liable to seizure and forfeiture by proceedings in any court of the United States having competent jurisdiction. And all cotton so shipped or attempted to be shipped or transported beyond the limits of the collection district in which it was produced, without payment of the tax or the execution of such transportation bonds or other security as provided in this act, shall be forfeited to the United States, and the proceeds thereof distributed according to the statute in like cases provided.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out in the fifteenth line, after the word "Treasury," the word "nor" and to insert "or," so as to read "or to convey," &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That alteration will be made.

The committee further proposed to amend the section in line nineteen, after the word "as," by inserting "the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee also proposed to amend the section in line twenty-two, after the word "thereon," by inserting "or the permit of the assessor as hereinbefore provided."

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is a verbal error there. After the word "or" in the amendment, I move to insert "without."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

The amendment, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line twenty-nine of that section, after the word "respect," I move to insert the words "or who shall convey or attempt to convey from any State in which cotton is produced to any port or place without the United States, any cotton upon which the tax has not been paid."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In lines thirty-six and thirty-seven the words "beyond the limits of the collection district in which it was produced" should be struck out in order to correspond with the amendment which was made above.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That upon articles manufactured exclusively from cotton, when exported, there shall be allowed, as a drawback, an amount equal to the internal tax which shall have been assessed and paid upon such articles in their finished condition, and in addition thereto a drawback or allowance of as many cents per pound upon the pound of cotton cloth, yarn, or other articles manufactured exclusively from cotton and exported, as shall have been assessed and paid in the form of an internal tax upon the raw cotton entering into the manufacture of said cloth or other article, the amount of such allowance or drawback to be ascertained in such manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury; and so much of section one hundred and twenty-one of the act of June 30, 1861, to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes, as now provides for a drawback on manufactured cotton, is hereby repealed.

The committee proposed to amend this section in line seven, after the word "yarn," by striking out "or other articles" and inserting "thread, or knit fabrics."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the seventh section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of every person, firm, or corporation, manufacturing cotton for any purpose whatever, in any district where cotton is produced, to return to the assessor or assistant assessor of the district in which such manufacture is carried on, a true statement in writing, signed by him, and verified by his oath or affirmation, and a duplicate thereof to the collector of said district on or before the 10th day of each month; and the first statement so rendered shall be on or before the 10th day of July, 1866, and shall state the quantity of cotton which such manufacturer had on hand and unmanufactured, or in process of manufacture, on the 1st day of said month; and each subsequent statement shall show the whole quantity in pounds, gross weight, of cotton purchased or obtained, and the whole quantity consumed by him in any business or process of manufacture during the last preceding calendar month, and the quantity and character of the goods manufactured therefrom; and every such manufacturer or consumer shall keep a book, in which he shall enter the quantity, in pounds, of cotton which he has on hand on the 1st day of July, 1866, and each quantity or lot purchased or obtained by him thereafter; the time when and the party or parties from whom the same was obtained; the quantity of said cotton, if any, which is the growth of the collection district where the same is manufactured; the quantity, if any, which has not been weighed and marked by any officer herein authorized to weigh and mark the same; the quantity, if any, upon which the tax had not been paid, so far as can be ascertained, before the manufacture thereof; and also the quantities used or disposed of by him from time to time in any process of manufacture or otherwise, and the quantity and character of the product thereof, which book shall, at all times during business hours, be open to the inspection of the assessor, assistant assessors, collector or deputy collectors of the district, inspectors, or of revenue agents; and such manufacturer shall pay monthly to the collector, within the time prescribed by law, the tax herein specified, subject to no deductions, on all cotton so consumed by him in any manufacture, and on which no excise tax has previously been paid; and every such manufacturer or person whose duty it is so to do, who shall neglect or refuse to make such returns to the assessor, or to keep such book, or who shall make false or fraudulent returns, or make false entries in such book, or procure the same to be so done, in addition to the payment of the tax to be assessed thereon, shall forfeit to the United States all cotton and all products of cotton in his possession, and shall be liable to a penalty of not less than one thousand nor more than five thousand dollars, to be recovered with costs of suit, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, in the discretion of the court; and any person or persons who shall make any false oath or affidavit in relation to any matter or thing herein required shall be guilty of perjury, and shall be subject to the punishment prescribed by existing statutes for that offense: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed in any manner to affect the liability of any person for any tax imposed by law on the goods manufactured from such cotton.

The committee proposed to amend this section in line seven, after the word "affirmation," by striking out "and a duplicate thereof to the collector of said district."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line ten, the word "July" should be "August," so as to conform to the other amendment. It will then read, "and the first statement so rendered shall be on or before the 10th day of August, 1866."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line twenty-one, "July" should be "August," so as to read, "and every such manufacturer or consumer shall keep a book, in which he shall enter the quantity, in pounds, of cotton which he has on hand on the 1st day of August, 1866."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The word "affidavit," in line fifty-one, should be "affirmation."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

The Secretary read the eighth section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the act of June 30, 1864, as amended by the act of March 3, 1865, relating to the assessment of taxes and enforcing the collection of the same, and all proceedings and remedies relating thereto, shall apply to the assessment and collection of the tax, fines, and penalties imposed by, and not inconsistent with, the provisions of the preceding sections of this act; and that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make all necessary rules and regulations for ascertaining the weight of all cotton to be assessed, and for appropriately marking the same, and generally for carrying into effect the foregoing provisions. And the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to appoint all necessary inspectors, weighers, and markers of cotton, whose compensation shall be determined by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and paid in the same manner as inspectors of distilled spirits are paid.

The committee proposed to amend this section in line eight, after the word "and," by striking out "that."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

The committee further proposed to amend the section by striking out the words "distilled spirits" in line eighteen, and inserting "tobacco," so as to make the clause read:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to appoint all necessary inspectors, weighers, and markers of cotton, whose compensation shall be determined by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and paid in the same manner as inspectors of tobacco are paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ninth section was read by clauses, the first clause being as follows:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, as amended by the act of March 3, 1865, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows, namely:

That section five be amended by adding thereto the following: and any inspector, or revenue agent, or any special agent appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall demand or receive any compensation, fee, or reward, other than such as are provided by law for, or in regard to, the performance of his official duties, or shall be guilty of any extortion or willful oppression in the discharge of such duties, shall, upon conviction thereof in any circuit or district court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, be subject to a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or to imprisonment for not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court, and shall be dismissed from office, and shall be forever disqualified from holding any office under the Government of the United States. And one half of the United States, and the other half for the use of the person, to be ascertained by the judgment of the court, who shall first give the information whereby any such fine may be imposed.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this clause.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section fourteen be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that in case any person shall be absent from his or her residence or place of business at the time an assistant assessor shall call for the annual list or return, and no annual list or return has been rendered by such person to the assistant assessor as required by law, it shall be the duty of such assistant assessor to leave at such place of residence or business, with some one of suitable age and discretion, if such be present, otherwise to deposit in the nearest post office, a note or memorandum, addressed to such person, requiring him or her to render to such assistant assessor the list or return required by law within ten days from the date of such note or memorandum, verified by oath or affirmation. And if any person, on being notified or required as aforesaid, shall refuse or neglect to render such list or return within the time required as aforesaid, or if any person without notice, as aforesaid, shall not deliver a monthly or other list or return at the time required by law, or if any person shall deliver or disclose to any assessor or assistant assessor any list, statement, or return which, in the opinion of the assessor, is false or fraudulent, or contains any understatement or undervaluation, it shall be lawful for the assessor to summon such person, his agent, or other person having possession, custody, or care of books of account containing entries relating to the trade or business of such person, or any other persons he may deem proper, to appear before such assessor and produce such book, at a time and place therein named, and to give testimony or answer interrogatories under oath or affirmation respecting any objects liable to duty or tax as aforesaid, or the lists, statements, or returns thereof, or any trade, business, or profession liable to any tax as aforesaid. And the assessor may summon, as aforesaid, any person residing or found within the State in which his district is situated. And when the person intended to be summoned does not reside and cannot be found within such State, the assessor may enter any collection district where such person may be found, and there make the examination hereinbefore authorized. And to this end he shall there have and may exercise all the power and authority he has or may lawfully exercise in the district for which he is commissioned. The summons authorized by this section shall in all cases be served by an assistant assessor of the district where the person to whom it is directed may be found, by an attested copy delivered to such person in hand or left at his last and usual place of abode, allowing such person at the rate of one day for each twenty-five miles he may be required to travel, computing from the place of service to the place of examination.

The committee proposed to amend the clause by striking out the words "duty or" before "tax," in line fifty-five.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee further proposed to strike out "assistant assessor," in line seventy, after "such," and to insert "person."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed to strike out, in line seventy-two, the words "his place of residence to," and after "service," in the same line, to insert "to the place of examination;" so that the clause will read:

The summons authorized by this section shall in all cases be served by an assistant assessor of the district where the person to whom it is directed may be found, by an attested copy delivered to such person in hand or left at his last and usual place of abode, allowing such person at the rate of one day for each twenty-five miles he may be required to travel, computing from his place of residence to the place of service; and the certificate of service signed by such assistant assessor shall be evidence of the fact it states on the hearing of an application for an attachment, and when the summons requires the production of books, it shall be sufficient if such books are described with reasonable certainty. In case any person so summoned shall neglect or refuse to obey such summons, or to give testimony, or to answer interrogatories as required, it shall be lawful for the assessor, upon affidavit proving the facts, to apply to the judge of the district court or to a commissioner of the circuit court of the United States for the district within which the person so summoned resides, and such judge or commissioner is hereby authorized and empowered to perform the duties herein required, for an attachment against such person as for a contempt. It shall be the duty of such judge or commissioner to hear such application, and, if satisfactory proof be made, to issue an attachment, directed to some proper officer, for the arrest of such person, and upon his being brought before him to proceed to a hearing of the case; and upon such hearing the judge or commissioner shall have power to make such order as he shall deem proper, not inconsistent with the provisions of existing laws for the punishment of contempts, to enforce obedience to the requirements of the summons and punish such person for his default or disobedience. It shall be the duty of the assessor or assistant assessor of the district within which such person shall have taxable property to enter into and upon the premises, if it be necessary, of such person so refusing or neglecting, or rendering a false or fraudulent list or return, and to make, according to the best information which he can obtain, including that derived from the evidence elicited by the examination of the assessor, and on his own view and information, such list or return, according to the form prescribed, of the property, goods, wares, and merchandise, and all articles or objects liable to duty or tax, owned or possessed or under the care or management of such person, and assess the duty or tax thereon, including the amount, if any, due for special tax or income; and in case of the return of a false or fraudulent list or valuation, he shall add one hundred per cent. to such duty or tax; and in case of a refusal or neglect, except in cases of sickness or absence, to make a list or return, or to verify the same as aforesaid, he shall add fifty per cent. to such duty or tax; and in case of neglect occasioned by sickness or absence as aforesaid, the assessor may allow such further time for making and delivering such list or return as he may judge necessary, not exceeding thirty days; and the amount so added to the duty or tax shall, in all cases, be collected by the collector at the same time and in the same manner as the duty or tax; and the list or return so made and subscribed by such assessor or assistant assessor shall be taken and reputed as good and sufficient for all legal purposes. And in addition to other provisions of law, whenever fraud has been or shall be alleged as to any list or return, and the party charged with fraud shall make denial of the same in writing and shall demand a hearing thereon, and shall tender to the assessor of the proper district a bond with two or more sureties payable to the United States in a sum not less than double the amount of the tax assessed because of such alleged fraud, and conditioned that such person will abide by the orders and judgments of the court before whom such case shall be heard, and will pay whatever sum may be adjudged against him for tax, and also all costs that may be adjudged against him, and upon the approval of such bond by such assessor, it shall be the duty of such assessor to transmit to the district attorney of the United States for the district within which such collection district is situate all the papers in the case, and it shall also be the duty of said district attorney to immediately institute in the proper circuit or district court of the United States a suit for the recovery of the tax assessed because of such alleged fraud, and the same shall be prosecuted to judgment as in other cases; and such cases shall have precedence over other civil cases on the calendar of such court. And until final judgment all proceedings by the assessor and collector shall be suspended; and in case of seizure of property, the property seized shall be released upon the approval of the bond herein provided for; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect in any manner proceedings by indictment as provided by law.

The committee proposed to amend the clause by striking out the words "duty or" before "tax," in line fifty-five.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee further proposed to strike out "assistant assessor," in line seventy, after "such," and to insert "person."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed to strike out, in line seventy-two, the words "his place of residence to," and after "service," in the same line, to insert "to the place of examination;" so that the clause will read:

The summons authorized by this section shall in all cases be served by an assistant assessor of the district where the person to whom it is directed may be found, by an attested copy delivered to such person in hand or left at his last and usual place of abode, allowing such person at the rate of one day for each twenty-five miles he may be required to travel, computing from the place of service to the place of examination.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The word "fact," in line seventy-four, should be in the plural, "facts."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) That correction will be made.

The committee proposed further to amend the clause, in line eighty, after the word "assessor," to strike out "upon affidavit proving the facts," and in line eighty-three, after the word "resides," to strike out "and such judge or commissioner is hereby authorized and empowered to perform the duties herein required;" so that the clause would then read:

In case any person so summoned shall neglect or refuse to obey such summons, or to give testimony, or to answer interrogatories as required, it shall be lawful for the assessor to apply to the judge of the district court or to a commissioner of the circuit court of the United States for the district within which the person so summoned resides, for an attachment against such person as for a contempt.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed to strike out the words "duty or" before "tax," in line one hundred and six.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be considered as agreed to.

The committee proposed to strike out the words "duty or" before "tax," in lines one hundred and ten and one hundred and eleven. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The same words, "duty or," should be struck out in line one hundred and seven, before "tax."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

The committee proposed to strike out "duty or" before "tax," in line one hundred and thirteen, and also in line one hundred and eighteen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The same words should be stricken out in line one hundred and nineteen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be done.

The next amendment proposed by the committee was after the word "purposes," in line one hundred and twenty-two, to strike out to the end of the clause, the words stricken out being:

And in addition to other provisions of law, whenever fraud has been or shall be alleged as to any list or return, and the party charged with fraud shall make denial of the same in writing, and shall demand a hearing thereon, and shall tender to the assessor of the proper district a bond with two or more sureties payable to the United States in a sum not less than double the amount of the tax assessed because of such alleged fraud, and conditioned that such person will abide by the orders and judgments of the court before whom such case shall be heard, and will pay whatever sum may be adjudged against him for tax, and also all costs that may be adjudged against him, and upon the approval of such bond by such assessor, it shall be the duty of such assessor to transmit to the district attorney of the United States for the district within which such collection district is situate all the papers in the case, and it shall also be the duty of said district attorney to immediately institute in the proper circuit or district court of the United States a suit for the recovery of the tax assessed because of such alleged fraud, and the same shall be prosecuted to judgment as in other cases, and such cases shall have precedence over other civil cases on the calendar of such court. And until final judgment all proceedings by the assessor and collector shall be suspended; and in case of seizure of property the property seized shall be released upon the approval of the bond herein provided for; but nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect in any manner proceedings by indictment as provided by law.

Mr. GRIMES. I would inquire why that clause is stricken out.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The reason is that it is an entire change of the law, and in the opinion of the committee would send everything for trial into the courts and cause continual litigation.

Mr. GRIMES. If a man has got a good defense and wants to go into court why not allow him to do so?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is not a matter of defense. This clause changes the whole system, and would make it entirely different from any other system anywhere in regard to the collection of taxes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of the ninth section, as follows:

That section nineteen be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that the assessor for each collection district shall, by advertisement in the newspaper of largest circulation in each county within said district, and if there be none published in any county of the district, then in the newspaper of largest circulation in the collection district adjoining thereto, and by notifications to be posted up in at least four public places, and shall mail a copy of such notice to each postmaster in his district, to be posted up in his office, within each assessment district, advertise, by not less than ten days' notice, all persons concerned of the time and place within said collection district when and where appeals will be received and determined relative to any erroneous or excessive valuations, assessments, or enumerations by the assessor or assistant assessor returned in the annual list. And it shall be the duty of the assessor for each collection district, at the time fixed for hearing such appeal, as aforesaid, to submit the proceedings of the assessor and assistant assessor, and the annual lists taken and returned as aforesaid, to the inspection of any and all persons who may apply for that purpose. And such assessor is hereby authorized at any time to hear and determine in a summary way, according to law and right, upon any and all appeals which may be exhibited against the proceedings of the said assessor or assistant assessors, and the office or principal place of business of the said assessor shall be open during the business hours of each day, for the hearing of appeals by parties who shall appear voluntarily before him: Provided, That no appeal shall be allowed to any party after he shall have been duly assessed, and the annual list containing the assessment has been transmitted to the collector of the district. And all appeals to the assessor, as aforesaid, shall be made in writing, and shall specify the particular cause, matter, or thing respecting which a decision is requested, and shall, moreover, state the ground or principle of error complained of. And the assessor shall have power to reexamine and determine upon the assessments and valuations and rectify the same as shall appear just and equitable; but such valuation, assessment, or enumeration shall not be increased without a previous notice of at least five days to the party interested to appear and object to the same if he judge proper, which notice shall be in writing and left at the dwelling-house, office, or place of business of the party by such assessor, assistant assessor, or other person, or sent by mail to the nearest or usual post office address of said party: Provided further, That on the hearing of appeals it shall be lawful for the assessor to require by summons the attendance of witnesses and the production of books of account in the same manner and under the same penalties as are provided in cases of refusal or neglect to furnish lists or returns. The costs for the attendance and mileage of said witnesses shall be taxed by the assessor and paid by the delinquent parties, or by the disbursing agent for the district, on certificate of the assessor, at the rates allowed to witnesses in the district courts of the United States.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause by inserting after the word "shall," in line one hundred and fifty-two, the words "give notice," so that it will read, "that the assessor for each collection district shall give notice by advertisement."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and fifty-three to strike out the word "the" before "newspaper" and insert in lieu of it the word "one;" and after "newspaper" to strike out the words "of largest circulation" and insert the word "published;" so as to make it read:

That the assessor for each collection district shall give notice by advertisement in one newspaper published in each county within said district, &c.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should think the notice ought to be published in the newspaper of largest circulation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is sometimes very difficult to tell what the newspaper of largest circulation is, and we thought it best to leave it to the assessor to have the notice published in one newspaper published in the county, if there was one, and let him make the selection. Sometimes newspapers may be published in different languages, and one published in a foreign language might possibly have the largest circulation, or there might be a religious newspaper having the largest circulation. We thought it best not to apply the Post Office laws to this provision.

Mr. CONNESS. Unless you provide in the act the means of ascertaining which paper has the largest circulation, you cannot determine the point.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It seems to me that the assessor or collector can easily ascertain which paper in the county has the largest circulation as well as he can ascertain how much property a man has. He will adopt some means to ascertain it. He can call upon the newspapers to furnish a statement of their circulation under oath. He will adopt the necessary means.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The provision amounts to very little, and the Commissioner was of opinion that it would be very embarrassing in practice to require the advertisement to be in the newspaper of the largest circulation. We took his advice about it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The officers are the last persons to whom I would go for advice in relation to matters of this kind.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We applied to the Commissioner.

Mr. TRUMBULL. He is one of the officers. It seems to me that it should not be left to these officers to select the newspaper as a matter of favoritism, and allow them to select a paper that does not give notice to the taxpayers. The object of publishing this notice is to have the world see it. That being the object, let it be published where most of the world will see it. I hope the provision as adopted by the House will not be changed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The whole clause required revision. It was somewhat bunglingly framed, and we were obliged to change it all through. A change here would necessarily lead to a great many other changes. The Senator is aware that if a mistake was made in that particular in regard to the selection of the newspaper, it might vitiate the whole proceeding. We must always trust something to the discretion and honesty of the officer. We came to the conclusion that the Commissioner was right about it, and on consideration the committee adopted his suggestion.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the words "within the county," ought to be inserted after the words "largest circulation."

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then the question would arise, what was the largest local circulation?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to insert the words "within the county," after "circulation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment is not in order. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This provision covers a collection district, and a collection district is a whole congressional district.

Mr. GRIMES. It speaks of an assessment district here.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The language is, "the assessor for each collection district shall give notice by advertisement in one newspaper published in each county within said district, and if there be none published in any county of the district, then in a newspaper published in the collection district adjoining thereto." You see that the provision as it stands in the House bill would send the assessor around inquiring as to the circulation of the different newspapers. He would have to examine with great accuracy. We have already seen the disputes that arise where that rule does exist. Some say that one thing should be taken into consideration, and some say another. It makes confusion and difficulty in doing business.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand that a collection district is a congressional district, but an assessment district is a subdivision of a congressional district.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No; you see it reads, "the assessor for each collection district shall give notice," &c.

Mr. CONNESS. There is another difficulty that would arise. In some counties there are daily newspapers published and weekly newspapers besides. While the daily would have the largest local circulation in a part of the district, the weekly would have the largest in the entire district. We shall get into exceeding difficulty if we undertake to change what the committee have agreed upon.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the Senate will leave it as the committee fixed the matter; we became entirely convinced that it was better to fix it as we have proposed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and fifty-six to strike out the word "the" before "newspaper" and insert the word "a;" and in the same line, after the word "newspaper," to strike out the words "of largest circulation" and insert "published;" so as to read:

And if there be none published in any county of the district, then in a newspaper published in the collection district adjoining thereto.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire of the chairman why they go out of the district. A collection district, as I understand, in practice embraces a congressional district. If in any county of a congressional district no paper is published, then this act, if I understand it, requires that the publication shall be made in a newspaper published in the collection district adjoining thereto. Why not in the same collection district? Why do you necessarily compel the assessor when a particular county has no paper published in it, to publish the notice in a collection district to which that county does not belong?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The language should be "a collection district adjoining" instead of "the collection district adjoining."

Mr. TRUMBULL. Why not strike out the words "adjoining thereto?"

Mr. FESSENDEN. For the simple reason that it was supposed a man would be more likely to get notice from a newspaper near him.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Maine certainly does not understand me, or I do not understand the bill. The bill as it is necessarily compels the assessor to publish in some other district than the one in which the county is.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then I do not understand it; the language is, "in a newspaper published in the collection district adjoining thereto."

Mr. FESSENDEN. It reads:

That the assessor for each collection district shall give notice by advertisement in one newspaper published in each county within said district, and if there be none published in any county of the district, then in a newspaper published in the collection district adjoining.

I propose to make that last "the" "a." If there is a newspaper published in the whole district, the notice must be published there, and if not, in the next district.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest that the words "any county of" be left out, so as to read "if there be none published in the district." The language is somewhat equivocal now. If there is any county in the district which has no newspaper, it is liable to the construction that the publication must be in the adjoining district.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the words "any county of" be left out it will be clear.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well; that is only changing the phraseology.

Mr. ANTHONY. But it would make it unequivocal.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Now I move to amend the clause further by striking out the words "any county of," so that it will read, "and if there be none published in the district, then in a newspaper," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line one hundred and fifty-seven I move to strike out "the" and insert "a," so as to read, "in a collection district adjoining thereto."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out in lines one hundred and fifty-seven and one hundred and fifty-eight the words "by notifications to be posted up" and to insert "shall post notices;" in line one hundred and fifty-nine after "places" to insert "within each assessment district;" and in line one hundred and sixty-one after "office" to strike out "within each assessment district advertise by not less than ten days' notice, all persons concerned of;" and to insert "stating;" so as to read:

That the assessor for each collection district shall give notice by advertisement in one newspaper published in each county within said district, and if there be none published in the district, then in a newspaper published in a collection district adjoining thereto, and shall post notices in at least four public places within each assessment district, and shall mail a copy of such notice to each postmaster in his district to be posted up in his office, stating the time and place within said collection district when and where appeals will be received and determined relative to any erroneous or excessive valuations, assessments, or enumerations by the assessor or assistant assessor returned in the annual list.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to strike out the word "up" after "posted" in line one hundred and sixty-one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee further proposed to amend the clause in line one hundred and sixty-seven, after the word "list," by inserting:

And such notice shall be advertised and posted by the assessor and mailed as aforesaid at least ten days before the time appointed for hearing said appeals.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed to add "s" to "appeal" in line one hundred and seventy-two, so as to make the word "appeals."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be regarded as agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of the ninth section, as follows:

That section twenty be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that the said assessor of each collection district, respectively, shall, immediately after the expiration of the time for hearing appeals concerning taxes returned in the annual list, and from time to time as duties or taxes become liable to be assessed, make out lists containing the sums payable according to law upon every subject of taxation for each collection district; which list shall contain the name of each person residing within the said district, or owning or having the care or superintendence of property lying within the said district, or engaged in any business or pursuit which is liable to any tax or duty, when such person or persons are known, together with the sums payable by each; and where there is any property within any collection district liable to tax, not owned or occupied by or under the superintendence of any person resident therein, there shall be a separate list of such property, specifying the sum payable and the names of the respective proprietors when known. And the assessor making out any such separate list shall transmit to the assessor of the district where the persons liable to pay such tax reside, or shall have their principal place of business, copies of the list of property held by persons so liable to pay such tax, to the end that the taxes assessed under the provisions of this act may be paid within the collection district where the persons liable to pay the same reside or may have their principal place of business. And in all other cases the said assessor shall furnish to the collectors of the several collection districts, respectively, within ten days after the time of hearing appeals concerning taxes returned in the annual list, and from time to time thereafter as required, a certified copy of such list or lists for their proper collection districts. And in case it shall be ascertained that the annual list or any other list, which may have been, or which shall hereafter be, delivered to any collector, is imperfect or incomplete in consequence of the omission of the names of any persons or parties liable to tax or duty, or in consequence of any omission, or understatement, or undervaluation, or false or fraudulent statement contained in any return or returns made by any persons or parties liable to tax or duty, the said assessor may, from time to time, or at any time within one year from the time of the passage of this act or from the time of the delivery of the list to the collector as aforesaid, enter on any monthly or special list the names of such persons or parties so omitted, together with the amount of tax for which they may have been or shall become liable, and also the names of the persons or parties in respect to whose returns, as aforesaid, there has been or shall be any omission, undervaluation, understatement, or false or fraudulent statement, together with the amounts for which such persons or parties may be liable over and above the amount for which they may have been, or shall be, assessed upon any return or returns made as aforesaid, and shall certify or return said list to the collector as required by law. And all or any proceedings authorized by law for the ascertainment of liability to any tax or duty, or the assessment or collection thereof, shall be held to apply, as far as may be necessary, to the proceeding herein authorized and directed.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend in line two hundred and thirteen by striking out "said" before "assessor," and in line two hundred and fourteen by striking out "respectively."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee also proposed to strike out, in line two hundred and sixteen, the words "duties or" before "taxes;" and in line two hundred and twenty-three, line two hundred and forty-eight, and line two hundred and fifty-two, to strike out the words "or duty" after "tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed to strike out in line two hundred and fifty-three, after the word "within," the words "one year" and to insert "two years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed to strike out after the word "all," in line two hundred and sixty-six, the words "or any proceedings authorized by," and to insert "provisions of;" and in line two hundred and sixty-eight to strike out after "tax" the words "or duty;" so as to read:

And all provisions of law for the ascertainment of liability to any tax, or the assessment or collection thereof, shall be held to apply, as far as may be necessary, to the proceedings herein authorized and directed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have an amendment to propose to a part of the bill which has been passed over on page 11. It is to insert between lines twenty-five and twenty-six of the ninth section this clause:

That section eight be amended by striking out of said section all after the words "until an appointment filling the vacancy shall be made."

The words that I propose to strike out of the law are the form of the oath to be taken by assessors and assistant assessors. The general act of July 2, 1862, provides for the same oath substantially and more too. The result is that the Commissioner is obliged to send to each officer two oaths, and he must take two, one under the act which we propose to amend, and one under the general act of July 2, 1862, which covers the same ground precisely and is even more stringent. I propose to amend by striking out the oath required by the internal revenue act, leaving all these officers to stand under the general law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I desire now to propose another amendment to carry out that idea, to come in where the reading last stopped, on page 21, after line two hundred and seventy of section nine of this bill:

That section twenty-one be amended by striking out the words "without having taken the oath or affirmation required by this act" and inserting in lieu thereof "without having taken the oath or affirmation required by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section twenty-two be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that there shall be allowed and paid to the several assessors a salary of $1,500 per annum, payable quarterly; and, in addition thereto, where the receipts of the collection district shall exceed the sum of $100,000, and shall not exceed the sum of $400,000 annually, one half of one per cent. upon the excess of receipts over $100,000. Where the receipts of a collection district shall exceed $400,000, and shall not exceed $600,000, one fifth of one per cent. upon the excess of receipts over $400,000. Where the receipts shall exceed $600,000, one tenth of one per cent. upon such excess; but the salary of no assessor shall in any case exceed the sum of $4,000. And the several assessors shall be allowed and paid the sums actually and necessarily expended, with the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for office rent; but no account for such rent shall be allowed or paid until it shall have been verified in such manner as the Commissioner shall require, and shall have been audited and approved by the proper officer of the Treasury Department. And the several assessors shall be paid, after the account thereof shall have been rendered to and approved by the proper officers of the Treasury, their necessary and reasonable charges for clerk hire; but no such account shall be approved unless it shall state the name or names of the clerk or clerks employed and the precise periods of time for which they were respectively employed, and the rate of compensation agreed upon, and shall be accompanied by an affidavit of the assessor stating that such service was actually rendered, and the necessities of his office, and was actually rendered, and also by the affidavit of each clerk, stating that he has rendered the service charged in such account on his behalf, the compensation agreed upon, and that he has not paid, deposited, or assigned, or contracted to pay, deposit, or assign, any part of such compensation to the use of any other person, or in any way, directly or indirectly, paid or given, or contracted to pay or give, any reward or compensation for his office or employment, or the emoluments thereof; and the chief clerk of any such assessor is hereby authorized to administer, in the absence of the assessor, such oaths or affirmations as are required by this act. And there shall be allowed and paid to each assistant assessor four dollars for every day actually employed in collecting lists and making valuations, the number of days necessary for that purpose to be certified by the assessor, and three dollars for every hundred persons assessed contained in the tax list, as completed and delivered by him to the assessor, and twenty-five cents for each permit granted to any tobacco, snuff, or cigar manufacturer; and the several assistant assessors shall be allowed, in the settlement of their accounts, such sum as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall approve, not exceeding $300 per annum, for office rent; but no account for such rent shall be allowed or paid until it shall have been verified in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall require, and shall have been audited and approved by the proper officer of the Treasury Department; and other assistant assessors, when employed outside of the town in which they reside, in addition to the compensation now allowed by law, shall, during such time so employed, receive one dollar per day; and the said assessors and assistant assessors, respectively, shall be paid, after the account thereof shall have been rendered to and approved by the proper officers of the Treasury, their necessary and reasonable charges for stationery and blank books used in the discharge of the duties, and for postage actually paid on letters and documents received and sent, and relating exclusively to official business, and for money actually paid for publishing notices required by this act: Provided, That no such account shall be approved unless it shall state the date and the particular item of every such expenditure, and shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of such assessor or assistant assessor; and the compensation herein specified shall be in full for all expenses not otherwise particularly authorized: Provided further, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may, under such regulations as may be established by the Secretary of the Treasury, after due public notice, receive bids and contracts for supplying stationery, blank books, and blanks to the assessors, assistant assessors, and collectors in the several collection districts: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to fix such additional rates of compensation to be made to assessors and assistant assessors in cases where a collection district embraces more than a single congressional district, and to assessors and assistant assessors, revenue agents, and inspectors in Louisiana, Georgia, South Carolina, Alabama, Florida, Texas, Arkansas, North Carolina, Mississippi, Tennessee, California, Nevada, and Oregon, and the Territories, as may appear to him to be just and equitable in consequence of the greater cost of living and traveling in those States and Territories, and as may, in his judgment, be necessary to secure the services of competent officers; but the rates of compensation thus allowed shall not exceed the sum of $5,000 per annum. Collectors of internal revenue acting as disbursing officers shall be allowed all bills of assistant assessors heretofore paid by them in pursuance of the directions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, notwithstanding the assistant assessor did not certify to hours therein, or that two dollars per diem was deducted from his salary or compensation before computation of the tax thereon.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause by striking out in lines three hundred and twenty-one and three hundred and twenty-two the words "and twenty-five cents for each permit granted to any tobacco, snuff, or cigar manufacturer."

Mr. HOWE. Before the amendment is acted on, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether these words, in the two hundred and eighty-ninth line, "with the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue," are thought to be necessary. Are they not a little inconsistent with other provisions?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir. That is the law as it stands, I think. Those allowances must be approved by the Commissioner, and they must go through the auditing officers as now provided.

Mr. HOWE. I thought similar words were left out of the last act.

Mr. FESSENDEN. You refer to matters of clerk hire, I think, not office rent.

Mr. HOWE. My recollection was that we did leave those words out to prevent the officers from making allowances either for clerk hire or for office rent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It did not apply to office rent. I think we ought to make further provision for office rent, and the committee are now considering that point. Some of the officers have to keep their offices in their houses.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator does not understand my objection. It is not an objection to allowing office rent, but I wish to leave the officer to secure the rent of his office as he does his clerk hire, employing only so much office room as is necessary, just as he is allowed to employ so much clerical labor as is necessary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The matter of office rent did not come into the amendment of the previous law to which the Senator refers.

Mr. HOWE. This is not the time for me to offer an amendment on the subject.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In the two hundred and ninety-third line the word "officer" should be "officers," so as to read, "audited and approved by the proper officers of the Treasury Department."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

Mr. CONNESS. It seems to me that this is continuing one of the greatest difficulties that our revenue officers labor under on the Pacific coast. They have to secure the approval of their vouchers first by the Commissioner and then by the proper officers of the Department, which consumes many months of time, and they are not allowed, in the mean time, to make payment, so that they have got to make the payment out of their own pockets before they can obtain the vouchers and send them here for approval. Then many months transpire before they can get this approval. It has been one of the practical difficulties that these officers have been subjected to, which have impoverished them very much and hindered the operation of the law. We have presented many complaints at different times about it, and I do not see but that this continues the difficulty in place of making some provision to relieve it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know of any way to remedy it. There are complaints on both sides. My friend from Wisconsin thinks the law is not stringent enough in regard to it.

Mr. CONNESS. The complaint that I make, if it can be called a complaint at all, comes from the inevitable distance, which we cannot shorten, and the length of time consumed in correspondence. From Wisconsin to Washington, as distant as Wisconsin is from Washington, vouchers may be sent in two or three days. From California to here they consume a month, and then it takes a month for an answer, and if there is a misunderstanding another month is consumed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator misunderstands it. These vouchers are only required with the statement of accounts. They get leave from the Commissioner, I suppose, to pay a certain amount of rent in advance; that is the way they should do, certifying to him what they need; and then when they come to settle their accounts they must have the proper vouchers. It is the same difficulty that exists in regard to the settlement of all accounts at the Treasury Department. It takes a good while to send them here, and then they must go through the regular form. It is an inconvenience that cannot be remedied.

Mr. CONNESS. I am aware that this has been a very special inconvenience, and I think the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is quite aware of it. Whether this continues it or cures it I do not know and cannot say.

The Secretary read the next amendment of the Committee on Finance, which was in line three hundred and twenty-eight to strike out "shall" and insert "may."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move, in line three hundred and twenty-three, before "assistant," to strike out "the several," so as to let the provision read:

And assistant assessors shall be allowed, in the settlement of their accounts, such sum as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall approve, not exceeding $300 per annum, for office rent, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to inquire whether that is not a new provision. Have we been in the habit of allowing assistant assessors $300 for office rent?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is "not exceeding $300."

Mr. HENDRICKS. Is not this for the district assessor?

Mr. GRIMES. No; for the assistant assessor, the county assessor. We have heretofore allowed the assessor for the congressional district office rent, but it is now proposed to allow office rent to each one of the assistant assessors.

Mr. CONNESS. Must they not have an office?

Mr. GRIMES. They may in California, where they collect so much money, as I understand they do.

Mr. CONNESS. More than in Iowa.

Mr. GRIMES. But there is no necessity for any such office in the State which I have the honor to represent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is a necessity for it in large cities, and that is the reason the provision is put in.

Mr. GRIMES. Then why is it inserted in the way it is if it is to apply simply to those cases? I have no motion to make. If the Committee on Finance proposed to permit the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to allow office rent in certain places where there is a large population it might be very well; but as it stands here, every deputy assessor will claim this allowance of $300.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is absolutely necessary that such an allowance should be made in many cases. You cannot make distinctions in the law and say where it shall be allowed and where not. That must be left to the discretion of the Commissioner. There is no other way to settle it. There are cases where the allowance ought to be made. I have one in my mind where the assistant assessor came before the committee and represented his case. He keeps his office in his house, and it occupies a large portion of his house. He is a man of intelligence and a very excellent officer, and he told the committee—and I have no doubt he told the truth—that the result was what I shall state. He told us how much rent he gave for his house.

Mr. GRIMES. Where is his office?

Mr. FESSENDEN. In Baltimore. He cannot afford to keep a servant, and his wife has to do the whole work of the house. He was allowed nothing for the part of the house which he used as an office, and for the whole of which he paid rent, and at the end of the year, living very economically, his wife doing the entire work of the family, he brought himself about one hundred or two hundred dollars in debt. Certainly, if a man hires a house and lives in it, and gives up part of it to the use of the Government as an office day and evening—for the assistant assessor is at work day and evening—he ought to be allowed something by way of office rent. He is obliged to keep an office. I do not know how we can provide a system by which we can tell exactly where such an allowance will be necessary. Each case must be left to the discretion of the officer at the head of the bureau, or somebody else. There must be discretion left somewhere.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the chairman if he cannot limit it to cities. This provision would impose a very disagreeable duty on the Commissioner, and unless he is a very firm man he would fall before it. Applications will come up from every county asking this allowance. Why not limit it to cities of a certain population?

Mr. WILLIAMS. According to the information which I have, these assistant assessors are very poorly compensated for their services, even if this $300 should be allowed. I have in my hand two letters that I received this morning from assistant assessors, complaining that their salaries are wholly inadequate. I know that assistant assessors generally throughout the country consider that their compensation is not so much as it ought to be, and there is a general complaint from these officers on that subject, and if the Commissioner should happen to allow $300 to every assistant assessor, I am satisfied that they would not receive more than they ought to have for their services.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am very strongly impressed with the idea that we ought to pay the assistant assessors more liberally than we do. Really the working of our whole revenue system depends on them, and I think we should do better to pay them more liberally. I was in hopes that the committee would have reported a regular salary instead of a per diem for them; and when the proper time comes I may move to amend the bill in that particular. The business of an assistant assessor, if properly performed, prevents the performance of any other business. A man cannot carry on any other business at the same time that he is doing the business of an assistant assessor, if he attends to his public duties properly. Even in the State that I represent it breaks up any other business. We must, either by indirection in this way, or directly by giving a salary, I think, secure them some reasonable compensation, if we want our work well done.

Mr. CONNESS. A suggestion which I made a short time since was replied to by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. GRIMES,] who said that perhaps office rent for deputy assessors was necessary in California where they collect so much money. The peculiar kind of logic that radiates from that Senator at times is hardly intended to meet the case, but intended to silence whoever makes suggestions. I doubt very much whether it either meets the case or has the other effect in this instance. I know of a great many instances where deputy assessors may not require office rent, and I am entirely willing to trust the Department to make the application of the law in those cases; but I also know a great many cases where an office, and rent to pay for it, must be given and used by them. You must either give them a sufficient per diem to enable them to pay the rent themselves, or else pay the rent for them under the present per diem that is allowed. I am very glad to say that there is a very large internal revenue collected in the State that I in part represent here, and I am very glad of it. I think the law is being pretty well administered there, and I am exceedingly anxious to do anything that will secure its being administered still better there and increase the public revenue. I cannot conceive any better way to increase the public revenue than to satisfy, properly of course, the deputy assessors. The whole revenue depends on the faithfulness with which they do their work. It is by their effort that we get money.

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out "other" before "assistant assessors," in line three hundred and thirty.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move, on consultation, in line three hundred and twenty-three, to strike out the word "shall" and to insert "may," so as to read:

Assistant assessors may be allowed, in the settlement of their accounts, such sum as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall approve, not exceeding $300 per annum, for office rent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert the word "make" before the words "contracts for supplying stationery," in line three hundred and fifty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed, in line three hundred and sixty-six, to strike out "rates of" before "compensation," and in line three hundred and sixty-seven to strike out "sum" and insert "rate," so as to read, "but the compensation thus allowed shall not exceed the rate of $5,000 per annum."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of the ninth section, as follows:

That section twenty-four be amended by striking out the proviso thereto: Provided further, That in calculating the commissions of assessors and collectors of internal revenue in districts whence cotton or distilled spirits are shipped in bond to be sold in another district, one half the amount of tax received on the quantity of cotton or spirits so shipped, shall be added to the amount on which the commissions of such assessors and collectors are calculated; and a corresponding amount shall be deducted from the amount on which the commissions of the assessors and collectors of the districts to which such cotton or spirits are shipped are calculated.

The committee proposed to amend this clause, in line three hundred and seventy-six, after "thereto," by inserting the words "and inserting in lieu thereof the following," and in line three hundred and seventy-seven, after the word "provided," by striking out "further;" so as to read:

That section twenty-four be amended by striking out the proviso thereto, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: Provided, That, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of the bill, as follows:

That section twenty-six be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that in the adjustment of the accounts of the assessors and collectors of internal revenue which shall accrue after the 30th of June, 1864, and in the payment of their compensation for services after that date, the fiscal year of the Treasury shall be observed; and where such compensation, or any part of it, shall be by commissions upon assessments or collections, and shall during any year, in consequence of a new appointment, be due to more than one assessor or collector in the same district, such commissions shall be apportioned between such assessors or collectors; but in no case shall a greater amount of the commissions be allowed to two or more assessors or collectors in the same district than is or may be authorized by law to be allowed to one assessor or collector. And the salary and commissions of assessors and collectors heretofore earned and accrued shall be adjusted, allowed, and paid in conformity to the provisions of this section, and not otherwise; but no payment shall be made to assessors or collectors on account of salaries or commissions without the certificate of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that all reports required by law or regulation have been received, or that a satisfactory explanation has been rendered to him of the cause of the delay.

No amendment was reported to this clause by the Committee on Finance.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section twenty-eight be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that each of said collectors shall, within twenty days after receiving his annual collection list from the assessors, give notice, by advertisement published in each county in his collection district, in the newspaper of largest circulation printed in such county, if there be any, and if not, then in the newspaper of largest circulation in the nearest adjoining county, and by notifications to be posted up in at least four public places in each county in his collection district, that the said duties have become due and payable, and state the time and place within said county at which he or his deputy will attend to receive the same, which time shall not be less than ten days after the date of such notification, and shall send a copy of such notice by mail to each postmaster in the county, to be posted up in his office. And if any person shall neglect to pay, as aforesaid, for more than ten days, it shall be the duty of the collector or his deputy to issue to such person a notice, to be left at his dwelling or usual place of business, or be sent by mail, demanding the payment of said duties or taxes, stating the amount thereof, with a fee of twenty cents for the issuing and service of such notice, and with four cents for each mile actually and necessarily traveled in serving the same. And if such persons shall not pay the duties or taxes, and the fee of twenty cents and mileage as aforesaid, within ten days after the service or the sending by mail of such notice, it shall be the duty of the collector or his deputy to collect the said duties or taxes, and fee of twenty cents and mileage, with a penalty of ten per cent. additional upon the amount of duties or taxes. And with respect to all such duties or taxes as are not included in the annual lists aforesaid, and all taxes and duties the collection of which is not otherwise provided for in this act, it shall be the duty of each collector, in person or by deputy, to give notice and demand payment thereof, in the manner last mentioned, within ten days from and after receiving the list thereof from the assessor, or within twenty days from and after the expiration of the time within which such duty or tax should have been paid; and if the annual or other duties shall not be paid within ten days from and after such notice and demand, it shall be lawful for such collector, or his deputies, to proceed to collect the said duties or taxes, with ten per cent. additional thereto, as aforesaid, by distraint and sale of the goods, chattels, or effects, including stocks, securities, and evidences of debt, of the persons delinquent as aforesaid. And in case of distraint, it shall be the duty of the officer charged with the collection to make, or cause to be made, an account of the goods or effects distrained, a copy of which, signed by the officer making such distraint, shall be left with the owner or possessor of such goods or effects, or at his or her dwelling or usual place of business, with some person of suitable age and discretion, if any such can be found, with a note of the sum demanded, and the time and place of sale; and the said officer shall forthwith cause a notification to be published in some newspaper within the county wherein said distraint is made, if there is a newspaper published in said county, or to be publicly posted up at the post office, if there be one within five miles, nearest to the residence of the person whose property shall be distrained, and in not less than two other public places, which notice shall specify the articles distrained, and the time and place for the sale thereof, which time shall not be less than ten nor more than twenty days from the date of such notification to the owner or possessor of the property and the publication or posting of such notice as herein provided, and the place proposed for sale not more than five miles distant from the place of making such distraint. And said sale may be adjourned from time to time by said officer, if he shall think it advisable to do so, but not for a time to exceed in all thirty days. And in any case in which any person, bank, association, company, or corporation, required by law to make return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall refuse or neglect to make such return within the time specified, the amount of tax or duty shall be estimated by the proper assessor or assistant assessor, and shall be certified by him to the Commissioner. And in all cases in which the person, bank, association, company, or corporation, required by law to make payment of taxes to the Commissioner, shall neglect or refuse to make such payment within the time required, the Commissioner shall certify the amount of tax due by such person, bank, association, or corporation, with all the penalties, additions, and expenses accruing to the collector of the proper district, who shall collect the same by distraint and sale, as in other cases. And the same proceedings may be had to enforce the collection of taxes which have already accrued and which still remain unpaid. And if any person, bank, association, company, or corporation, liable to pay any tax or duty, shall neglect or refuse to pay the same after demand, the amount shall be a lien in favor of the United States from the time it was due until paid, with the interest, penalties, and costs that may accrue in addition thereto, upon all property and rights to property belonging to such person, bank, association, company, or corporation; and the collector, after demand, may levy, or by warrant may authorize a deputy collector to levy, upon all property and rights to property belonging to such person, bank, association, company, or corporation, or on which the said lien exists, for the payment of the sum due as aforesaid, with interest and penalty for non-payment, and also of such further sum as shall be sufficient for the fees, costs, and expenses of such levy. And in all cases of sale, as aforesaid, the certificate of such sale shall transfer to the purchaser all right, title, and interest of such delinquent in and to the property sold; and where such property shall consist of stocks, said certificate shall be notice, when received, to any corporation, company, or association of said transfer, and shall be authority to such corporation, company, or association to record the same on their books and records, in the same manner as if transferred or assigned by the person or party holding the same, in lieu of any original or prior certificates, which shall be void, whether canceled or not. And said certificates, where the subject of sale shall be securities or other evidences of debt, shall be good and valid receipts to the person holding the same, as against any person holding, or claiming to hold, possession of such securities or other evidences of debt. And all persons, and officers of companies or corporations, are required, on demand of a collector or deputy collector about to distraint, or having distrained on any property and rights of property, to exhibit all books containing evidence or statements relating to the subject or subjects of distraint, or the property or rights of property liable to distraint for the tax so due as aforesaid: Provided, That in any case of distraint for the payment of the duties or taxes aforesaid, the goods, chattels, or effects so distrained shall and may be restored to the owner or possessor, if prior to the sale payment of the amount due shall be made to the proper officer charged with the collection, together with the fees and other charges; but in case of non-payment as aforesaid, the said officers shall proceed to sell the said goods, chattels, or effects at public auction, and shall retain from the proceeds of such sale the amount demandable for the use of the United States, with the fees and charges for distraint and sale, and a commission of five per cent. thereon for his own use, rendering the overplus, if any there be, to the person who may be entitled to receive the same: Provided further, That there shall be exempt from distraint and sale, if belonging to the head of a family, the school-books and wearing apparel necessary for such family; also arms for personal use, one cow, two hogs, five sheep and the wool thereof, provided the aggregate market value of said sheep shall not exceed fifty dollars; the necessary food for such cow, hogs, and sheep for a period not exceeding thirty days; fuel to an amount not greater in value than twenty-five dollars; provisions to an amount not greater than fifty dollars; household furniture kept for use, to an amount not greater than $300; and books, tools, or implements of a trade or profession to an amount not greater than $100; and the officer making the distraint shall call upon the assessor of the district to summon three disinterested householders of the vicinity, who shall appraise and set apart to the owner the amount of property herein declared to be exempt.

The committee proposed to amend this clause by inserting after "advertisement," in line four hundred and seventeen, the words "in one newspaper," and in line four hundred and eighteen after "district," by striking out "in the newspaper of largest circulation printed in such county," so as to read:

That each of said collectors shall, within twenty days after receiving his annual collection list from the assessors, give notice, by advertisement in one newspaper published in each county in his collection district, if there be any, and if not then in the newspaper, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line four hundred and twenty to strike out "the" and insert "a" before "newspaper," and after "newspaper" to strike out "of largest circulation" and insert "published," in line four hundred and twenty-one after "in" to strike out "the nearest" and insert "an," in line four hundred and twenty-two to strike out "up" after "posted," and in line four hundred and twenty-three after "said" to strike out "duties" and insert "taxes," so that, as amended, the clause will read:

That each of said collectors shall, within twenty days after receiving his annual collection list from the assessors, give notice, by advertisement in one newspaper published in each county in his collection district, if there be any, and if not then in a newspaper published in an adjoining county, and by notifications to be posted in at least four public places in each county in his collection district, that the said taxes have become due and payable, and state the time and place within said county at which he or his deputy will attend to receive the same, which time shall not be less than ten days after the date of such notification, and shall send a copy of such notice by mail to each postmaster in the county, to be posted up in his office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line four hundred and twenty-two, after the word "posted," to strike out the word "up."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line four hundred and twenty-three to strike out the word "duties" and to insert "taxes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line four hundred and thirty-three to strike out the words "duties or" before the word "taxes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line four hundred and thirty-seven to strike out the words "duties or" before "taxes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line four hundred and seventy, after the word "posted," to strike out the word "up."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line four hundred and seventy-nine to insert the word "shall" before the word "not," and after it to insert the word "be," so that the clause will read:

And the place proposed for sale shall not be more than five miles distant from the place of making such distraint.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "days," in line four hundred and eighty-three, to strike out the following clause:

And in any case in which any person, bank, association, company, or corporation, required by law to make return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall refuse or neglect to make such return within the time specified, the amount of tax or duty shall be estimated by the proper assessor or assistant assessor, and shall be certified by him to the Commissioner. And in all cases in which the person, bank, association, company, or corporation, required by law to make payment of taxes to the Commissioner, shall neglect or refuse to make such payment within the time required, the Commissioner shall certify the amount of tax due by such person, bank, association, or corporation, with all the penalties, additions, and expenses accruing to the collector of the proper district, who shall collect the same by distraint and sale, as in other cases. And the same proceedings may be had to enforce the collection of taxes which have already accrued and which still remain unpaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line five hundred and one, after the word "tax," to strike out the words "or duty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line five hundred and thirty-two to strike out the word "and" and to insert "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line five hundred and thirty-seven to strike out the words "duties or" before the word "taxes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 32, line five hundred and forty-seven of section nine, the words "with the fees and charges for distraint and sale" should be transposed to come in after the word "use" in line five hundred and forty-nine; so that the clause will read:

The amount demandable for the use of the United States, and a commission of five per cent. thereon for his own use, with the fees and charges for distraint and sale, rendering the overplus, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in line five hundred and sixty-one to insert the word "the" before "books;" and in line five hundred and sixty-three, after the word "dollars," to insert "shall also be exempt;" so that the clause will read:

And the books, tools, or implements of a trade or profession to an amount not greater than $100 shall also be exempt.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That section twenty-nine be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that in all cases where the property liable to distraint for duties or taxes under this act may not be divisible, so as to enable the collector by a sale of part thereof to raise the whole amount of the tax, with all costs, charges, and commissions, the whole of such property shall be sold, and the surplus of the proceeds of the sale, after satisfying the duty of tax, costs, and charges, shall be paid to the owner of the property, or his legal representatives; or if he cannot be found, or refuse to receive the same, then such surplus shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to be there held for the use of the owner, or his legal representatives, until he shall make application therefor to the Secretary of the Treasury, who, upon such application, and satisfactory proofs in support thereof, shall, by warrant on the Treasury, cause the same to be paid to the applicant. And if any of the property advertised for sale as aforesaid is of a kind subject to tax or duty under the provisions of this act, and such tax or duty has not been paid, and the amount bid for such property is not equal to the amount of such tax or duty, the collector may purchase the same in behalf of the United States for an amount not exceeding the said tax or duty. And in all cases arising under this act where property subject to tax, but upon which the tax has not been paid, shall be seized upon distraint, or otherwise, and sold, the amount of such tax shall, after deducting the expenses of such sale, be first appropriated, out of the proceeds thereof, to the payment of said tax. And if no assessment of tax or duty has been made upon such property, the same shall be made in like manner as elsewhere provided for the assessment of taxes upon property of like nature. And all property so purchased may be sold by said collector, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And the collector shall render a distinct account of all charges incurred in the sale of such property to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall, by regulation, determine the fees and charges to be allowed in all cases of distraint and other seizures; or where necessary expenses for making such distraint or seizure have been incurred, and in case of sale, the said collector shall pay into the Treasury the surplus, if any there be, after defraying such fees and charges.

The Committee on Finance proposed several amendments to the clause. The first was in line five hundred and seventy to strike out the word "the" before "property."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line five hundred and seventy-one to strike out the words "duties or" before the word "taxes."

The next amendment was in line six hundred, after the word "property," to strike out the words—

The same shall be made in like manner as elsewhere provided for the assessment of taxes upon property of like nature—

And to insert:

The collector shall make a return thereof in the form required by law, and the assessor shall assess the tax thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That section thirty be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that in any case where sufficient goods or effects belonging to the party owing the tax and duties imposed by this act cannot be found by the said collector or deputy collector to satisfy the same, such collector or deputy collector is hereby authorized and required to collect the amount thereof from the real estate belonging to the party delinquent, by seizure and sale thereof as hereinafter provided, and for that purpose the said collector or deputy collector shall summon the party whose real estate is proposed to be sold, that on the first day of the next ensuing term of the United States district or circuit court, held in and for the district in which the real estate proposed to be sold or the greater part thereof is situated, that he be and appear before said court, and show cause, if any he have, why judgment for the amount of said tax and duties should not be rendered against him, and the real estate therein named sold to pay the same, together with the fees and costs growing out of the said proceedings. The said summons shall recite the amount of the tax and duties, at what time the same became due and payable, together with a description of the real estate seized and proposed to be sold, and where situated, and shall be served by leaving a copy thereof with the delinquent, or at his usual place of abode with some member of his or her family over the age of fifteen years. If the said delinquent cannot be found nor have any place of abode within the proper collection district, then the said collector or deputy collector shall cause publication thereof to be made by at least four insertions in a newspaper published nearest the said real estate. The said collector or deputy collector shall, within five days after the service of the summons, or the completion of the publication thereof as aforesaid, transmit the same, with the time and manner of the service thereof properly certified thereon, to the clerk of the said district or circuit court, and upon the receipt thereof the said court shall be possessed of the case, and, unless cause to the contrary be shown by said delinquent, shall render judgment against the said delinquent for the amount of the tax and duties found due by him and unpaid, and decree the sale of said real estate for the payment thereof at the first term of said court, provided the same shall commence not less than twenty days from the service of the summons or the completion of the publication thereof; otherwise, at the second term, unless longer continued for good cause shown. Upon the rendition of a judgment as aforesaid, the clerk of the said court shall issue execution thereon, which shall be a special fiery facias against the real estate therein mentioned in all cases when the delinquent shall have been summoned by publication as aforesaid, and has not appeared in person or by attorney; in all other cases, if the real estate mentioned therein be not sufficient to satisfy the judgment and expense thereon, the same may be levied on other property, real and personal, of said delinquent. The execution so issued the clerk shall transmit to the said collector or deputy collector, who shall thereupon proceed to sell the said real estate, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the said judgment, fees, and costs, to the highest bidder, for cash, at the court-house of the county in which the said real estate is situated, unless another and different place shall be specially designated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, first giving twenty days' public notice of the time and place of sale and the property to be sold, and where situated, by advertisement in a newspaper, if there be one, published in said county, and if not, by at least six handbills put up in public places in said county; and upon such sale and the payment of the purchase money shall give to the purchaser a certificate of purchase, in which shall set forth the real estate purchased, the taxes and duties the same was sold, the name of the purchaser, and the price paid therefor; and if the said real estate be not redeemed in the manner and within the time hereinafter provided, then the said collector or deputy collector shall execute to the said purchaser, upon his surrender of said certificate, a deed to the real estate purchased by him as aforesaid, and in accordance with the laws of the State in which such real estate is situated upon the subject of sales of real estate under execution, which said deed shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and shall be considered and operate as a conveyance of all the right, title, and interest the delinquent had in and to the real estate thus sold at the time the lien of the United States attached thereto. Any delinquent, whose estate may be proceeded against as aforesaid, shall have the right to pay the amount due, together with the costs and charges thereon, to the collector or deputy collector at any time prior to the sale thereof, and all further proceedings shall cease from the time of such payment. The owners of any real estate sold as aforesaid, their heirs, executors, or administrators, or any person having any interest therein, or a lien thereon, or any person in their behalf, shall be permitted to redeem the land sold as aforesaid, or any particular tract thereof, at any time within one year after the sale thereof, upon payment to the purchaser, or, in case he cannot be found in the county in which the land sought to be redeemed is situated, then to the collector for the use of the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, the amount paid by the said purchaser and interest thereon at the rate of twenty per cent. per annum. It shall be the duty of every collector to keep a record of all proceedings and sales of land made by virtue of this act, whether by himself or his deputies, in which he shall enter the tax for which any such sale was made, the date of the service of the summons, the name of the party assessed, and the date thereof, the date and amount of the judgment, and all costs and fees attending the same, the advertisement and sale, the name of the purchaser, the amount paid, and for what real estate, and all material facts connected therewith, which record shall be certified to by the officer making the sale. It shall be the duty of every deputy making sale as aforesaid to return a true statement thereof to the collector within ten days from the day of sale and to certify the record thereof, and the record required herein to be kept shall be received in any court as prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, and shall be by the said collector handed over to his successor in office. When any lands thus sold shall be redeemed as hereinbefore provided, if the redemption money be paid to the purchaser thereof, the said purchaser shall deliver to the person redeeming the same the certificate of purchase aforesaid, upon which he shall acknowledge the receipt of the redemption money, from whom received, and the date thereof. Upon the return of the said certificate received as aforesaid to the collector, or upon the receipt of the redemption money by the collector as aforesaid, the said collector shall enter upon said record the facts attending the redemption thereof, and shall within ten days thereafter make out and certify a full copy of the record of such case, and transmit the same, together with the execution aforesaid, to the clerk of the court from which such execution issued, to be there preserved with the papers of the case. Any collector or deputy collector is hereby authorized to proceed as herein specified against the real estate of any delinquent in his district, situate in any other collection district within the State of which his district forms a part, and his proceedings in relation thereto shall be conducted in like manner and with like effect as if the same were had in his proper collection district. Whenever at any sale as aforesaid no sum is bid for the real estate so offered for sale, or an amount insufficient to satisfy the judgment, costs, and fees, the collector or deputy collector is authorized to purchase the same for the United States, subject to redemption as herein provided; and if not redeemed, shall execute a deed as aforesaid, and deposit the same with the district attorney of the United States for the district in which the proceedings in the case were had. The sale herein authorized may be adjourned by the officer making the same for a period not exceeding five days, if he shall think it advisable to do so. The officer making the sale as aforesaid shall be allowed a fee of ten dollars, which, together with the costs of court and all other costs and charges attending the sale, shall be paid from the proceeds of such sale; and the surplus, if any, after satisfying the judgment, shall be disposed of as is provided in this act for like cases arising from the sale of personal property. In case the real estate authorized to be sold as aforesaid shall consist of several distinct tracts or parcels, the officer making sale thereof shall offer each tract or parcel for sale separately, and shall give to the purchaser a certificate of purchase for each of such tracts or parcels bought by him as aforesaid. If the amount bid for any tract authorized to be sold shall not then and there be paid by the person to whom the same is sold, the officer shall forthwith sell the same again, in the same manner, and until the amount for which the same may be sold is paid. And the claim of the United States to lands sold under and by virtue of this section shall be held to have accrued at the time of the seizure thereof.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The committee propose to strike out all that is proposed to be inserted in lieu of section thirty of the act of 1864, by that paragraph, and to insert a substitute which I will send to the Chair. It was omitted, by mistake, in the printed copy of the bill.

The Secretary read the matter proposed to be inserted, as follows:

That in any case where goods, chattels, or effects sufficient to satisfy the taxes imposed by this act upon any person liable to pay the same, shall not be found by the collector or deputy collector whose duty it may be to collect the same, he is hereby authorized to collect the same by seizure and sale of real estate; and the officer making such seizure and sale shall give notice to the person whose estate is proposed to be sold, by giving him in hand, or leaving at his last or usual place of abode, if he has any such within the collection district where said estate is situated, a notice, in writing, stating what particular estate is proposed to be sold, describing the same with reasonable certainty, and the time when and place where said officer proposes to sell the same; which time shall not be less than twenty nor more than forty days from the time of giving said notice. And the said officer shall also cause a notification to the same effect to be published in some newspaper within the county where such seizure is made, if any such there be, and shall also cause a like notice to be posted at the post office nearest to the estate to be seized, and in two other public places within the county; and the place of said sale shall not be more than five miles distant from the estate seized, except by special order of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. At the time and place appointed, the officer making such seizure shall proceed to sell the said estate at public auction, offering the same at a minimum price, including the expense of making such levy, and all charges for advertising and an officer's fee of ten dollars. And in case the real estate so seized, as aforesaid, shall consist of several distinct tracts or parcels, the officer making sale thereof shall offer each tract or parcel for sale separately, and shall, if he deem it advisable, apportion the expenses, charges, and fees, aforesaid, to such several tracts or parcels, or to any of them, in estimating the minimum price aforesaid. And if no person offers for said estate the amount of said minimum price, the officer shall declare the same to be purchased by him for the United States, and shall deposit with the district attorney of the United States a deed thereof, as hereinafter specified and provided; otherwise, the same shall be declared to be sold to the highest bidder. And said sale may be adjourned from time to time by said officer for not exceeding thirty days in all, if he shall think it ad-visible so to do. If the amount bid shall not be then and there paid, the officer shall forthwith proceed to again sell said estate in the same manner; and upon such sale and the payment of the purchase money shall give to the purchaser a certificate of purchase, which shall set forth the real estate purchased, for whose taxes the same was sold, the name of the purchaser, and the price paid therefor; and if the said real estate be not redeemed in the manner and within the time hereinafter provided, then the said collector or deputy collector shall execute to the said purchaser, upon his surrender of said certificate, a deed of the real estate purchased by him as aforesaid, and in accordance with the laws of the State in which such real estate is situated upon the subject of sales of real estate under execution, which said deed shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated; and if the proceedings of the officer as set forth have been substantially in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be considered and operate as a conveyance of all the right, title, and interest of the party delinquent had in and to the real estate thus sold at the time the lien of the United States attached thereto. Any person whose estate may be proceeded against as aforesaid shall have the right to pay the amount due, together with the costs and charges thereon, to the collector or deputy collector, at any time prior to the sale thereof, and all further proceedings shall cease from the time of such payment. The owners of any real estate sold as aforesaid, their heirs, executors, or administrators, or any person having any interest therein, or a lien thereon, or any person in their behalf, shall be permitted to redeem the land sold as aforesaid, or any particular tract thereof, at any time within one year after the sale thereof, upon payment to the purchaser, or in case he cannot be found in the county in which the land sought to be redeemed is situated, then to the collector of the district in which the land is situated, for the use of the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, the amount paid by the purchaser and interest thereon at the rate of twenty per cent. per annum. And any collector or deputy collector may, for the collection of taxes or duties imposed upon any person or for which any person may be liable by this act, and committed to him for collection, seize and sell the lands of such person situated in any other collection district within the State in which such officer resides; and his proceedings in relation thereto shall have the same effect as if the same were had in his proper collection district. And it shall be the duty of every collector to keep a record of all sales of land made in his collection district, whether by himself or his deputies or by another collector, in which shall be set forth the tax for which any sale was made, the dates of seizure and sale, the name of the party assessed, and all proceedings in making said sale, the amount of fees and expenses, the name of the purchaser, and the date of the deed, which record shall be certified by the officer making the sale. And it shall be the duty of any deputy making sale as aforesaid to return a statement of all his proceedings to the collector, and to certify the record thereof. And in case of the death or removal of the collector or the expiration of his term of office from any other cause said record shall be delivered to his successor in office; and a copy of every such record, certified by the collector, shall be evidence in any court of the truth of the facts therein stated. And when any lands sold as aforesaid shall be redeemed as hereinbefore provided, the collector shall make an entry of the fact upon the record aforesaid, and the said entry shall be evidence of such redemption. And when any property, personal or real, seized and sold by virtue of the foregoing provisions, shall not be sufficient to satisfy the claim of the United States for which distraint or seizure may be made against any person whose property may be so seized and sold, the collector may thereafter, and as often as the same may be necessary, proceed to seize and sell, in like manner, any other property liable to seizure of such person until the amount due from him, together with all expenses, shall be fully paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance a question in regard to this twenty per cent. that is required to redeem the property within the year. If in two months the owner proposes to redeem, or does redeem it, is he to pay one sixth of the amount of twenty per cent. to redeem the property?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRAGUE. That is the understanding, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert after the amendment just adopted the following clause:

That section thirty-four be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following: that each collector shall be charged with the whole amount of taxes, whether contained in lists delivered to him by the assessors, respectively, or delivered or transmitted to him by any assistant assessors from time to time, or by other collectors, stamps with the additions thereto, with the par value of all deposited with him, and with all moneys collected for passports, penalties, forfeitures, fees, or costs, and he shall be credited with all payments made as provided by law, with all stamps returned by him uncanceled to the Treasury, with the salary, fees, commissions, and charges allowed by law, and with the amount of duties or taxes contained in the lists transmitted in the manner above provided to other collectors, or by his predecessor in office, and by them receipted as aforesaid; and also with the amount of the duties or taxes of such persons as may have absconded or become insolvent prior to the day when the duty or tax ought, according to the provisions of this act, to have been collected, and with all uncollected taxes transferred by him or by his deputy acting as collector to his successor in office: Provided, That it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that due diligence was used by the collector, who shall certify the facts to the First Comptroller of the Treasury. And each collector shall also be credited with the amount of all property purchased by him for the use of the United States, provided he shall faithfully account for and pay over the proceeds thereof upon a resale of the same as required by this act. In case of the death, resignation, or removal of the collector, all lists and accounts of taxes uncollected shall be transferred to his successor in office as soon as such successor shall be appointed and qualified, and it shall be the duty of such successor to collect the same.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The word "and" at the beginning of line seven hundred and eighty-seven before "assistant assessors" should be stricken out.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. After the word "collectors," at the end of line seven hundred and eighty-seven, the words "or by his predecessor in office" should be inserted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The word "and" should be inserted instead of the word "stamps" at the beginning of line seven hundred and eighty-eight, so that it will read, "and with the additions thereto." The printer has misplaced a word there. Then the word "stamps" should be inserted before the word "deposited" at the beginning of line seven hundred and eighty-nine.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line seven hundred and ninety-one, after the word "payments," I move to insert the words "into the Treasury."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line seven hundred and ninety-four I move to strike out the words "duties or" before "taxes."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line seven hundred and ninety-five, after the word "collectors," I move to strike out the words "or by his predecessor in office."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out the words "duties or" in line seven hundred and ninety-seven, and also the words "duty or" in line seven hundred and ninety-nine.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That section forty-one be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that it shall be the duty of the collectors aforesaid, or their deputies, in their respective districts, and they are hereby authorized, to collect all the duties and taxes imposed by this act, however the same may be designated, and to prosecute for the recovery of any sum or sums which may be forfeited by virtue of this act; and all fines, penalties, and forfeitures which may be incurred or imposed by virtue of this act, shall be sued for and recovered, in the name of the United States, in any proper form of action, or by any appropriate form of proceeding, qui tam, or otherwise, before any circuit or district court of the United States for the district within which said fine, penalty, or forfeiture may have been incurred, or before any other court of competent jurisdiction. And taxes or duties may be sued for and recovered in any proper form of action before any circuit or district court of the United States for the district within which the liability to such tax may have been or shall be incurred, or where the party from whom such tax is due may reside at the time of the commencement of said action. But no such suit shall be commenced unless the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall authorize or sanction the proceedings: Provided, That in case of any suit for penalties or forfeitures brought upon information received from any person, other than a collector, deputy collector, assessor, assistant assessor, or inspector of internal revenue, the United States shall not be subject to any costs of suit, nor shall the fees of any attorney or counsel employed by any such officer be allowed in the settlement of his account, unless the employment of such attorney or counsel shall be authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, either expressly or by general regulations.

The committee proposed to amend this clause by striking out, in line eight hundred and nineteen, the words "duties and" before "taxes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eight hundred and thirty, after the word "taxes," to strike out "or duties."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eight hundred and thirty-one, after the word "recovered," to insert "in the name of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eight hundred and forty-one, after the words "assistant assessor," to insert "revenue agent."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if it is intended to give this right to sue in either of those two districts, either in the district where the liability to the tax is incurred, or in the district to which the party taxed may have removed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It provides that he may be sued "before any district or circuit court of the United States for the district within which the liability to such tax may have been or shall be incurred;" but if the party goes to another district, they may go where he lives and sue him at that place.

Mr. HOWE. Suppose the liability is incurred in one State and he removes to another, if you commence a suit in the State from which he has removed, how would you effect service on him?

Mr. FESSENDEN. If we cannot get service in one district, we would probably go to the other one; and that is the reason we provide that we may go to the other one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin propose an amendment?

Mr. HOWE. No, sir.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That section forty-four be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be, and is hereby, authorized, on appeal to him made, to remit, refund, and pay back all duties erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, and all duties that shall appear to be unjustly assessed or excessive in amount, or in any manner wrongfully collected, and also repay to collectors or deputy collectors the full amount of such sums of money as shall or may be recovered against them, or any of them, in any court, for any internal duties or licenses collected by them, with the costs and expenses of suit, and all damages and costs recovered against assessors, assistant assessors, collectors, deputy collectors, and inspectors, in any suit which shall be brought against them, or any of them, by reason of anything that shall or may be done in the due performance of their official duties; and all judgments and moneys recovered or received for taxes, costs, forfeitures, and penalties, shall be paid to the collector as internal duties are required to be paid: Provided, That where a second assessment may have been made in case of a list, statement, or return which in the opinion of the assessor or assistant assessor was false or fraudulent, or contained any understatement or undervaluation, such assessment shall not be remitted, nor shall taxes or duties collected under such assessment be recovered, refunded, or paid back, unless said list, statement, or return was not false or fraudulent, and did not contain any understatement or undervaluation.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance to this clause was to strike out the word "duties" wherever it occurs and to insert "taxes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eight hundred and seventy-five, after the word "unless," to insert "it is proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that."

Mr. FESSENDEN. The words "to the Commissioner" in that amendment should be stricken out, so that it will read, "it is proved that said list," &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line eight hundred and fifty-four, after the word "collected," I move to insert "all penalties collected without authority;" so as to read:

To remit, refund, and pay back all taxes erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, all penalties collected without authority, and all taxes, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That section forty-eight be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following: that all goods, wares, merchandise, articles, or objects on which taxes are imposed by the provisions of law, which shall be found in the possession or custody or within the control of any person or persons, for the purpose of being sold or removed by such person or persons in fraud of the internal revenue laws, or with design to avoid payment of said taxes, may be seized by any collector or deputy collector, and the same shall be forfeited to the United States; and also all raw materials found in the possession of any person or persons intending to manufacture the same into articles of a kind subject to tax or duty under this act, for the purpose of selling such manufactured articles in fraud of said laws, or with design to evade the payment of said tax or duty; and also all tools, implements, instruments, and personal property whatsoever, in the place or building or within any yard or inclosure where such articles or such raw materials shall be found, may also be seized by any collector or deputy collector, as aforesaid, and the same shall be forfeited as aforesaid; and the proceedings to enforce said forfeiture shall be in the nature of a proceeding in rem in the circuit or district court of the United States for the district where such seizure is made, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction. And any person who shall have in his custody or possession any such goods, wares, merchandise, articles, or objects subject to tax as aforesaid, for the purpose of selling the same with the design of avoiding payment of the taxes imposed thereon, shall be liable to a penalty of $500, or not less than double the amount of taxes fraudulently attempted to be evaded, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction; and the goods, wares, merchandise, articles, or objects which shall be so seized by any collector or deputy collector may, at the option of the collector, be delivered to the marshal of said district, and remain in the care and custody of said marshal, and under his control until he shall obtain possession by process of law, and the cost of seizure made before process issues shall be taxable by the court; Provided, That when the property so seized may be liable to perish or become greatly reduced in price or value by keeping, or when it cannot be kept without great expense, the owner thereof, the collector, or the marshal of the district, may apply to the assessor of the district to examine said property; and if, in the opinion of said assessor, it shall be necessary that the said property should be sold to prevent such waste or expense, he shall appraise the same; and the owner thereupon shall have said property returned to him upon giving bond in such form as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and in an amount equal to the appraised value, with such securities as the said assessor shall deem good and sufficient, to abide the final order, decree, or judgment of the court having cognizance of the case, and to pay the amount of said appraised value to the collector, marshal, or otherwise, as he may be ordered and directed by the court, which bond shall be filed by said assessor with the United States district attorney for the district in which said proceedings in rem may be commenced: Provided further, That in case said bond shall have been executed and the property returned before seizure thereof, by virtue of the process aforesaid, the marshal shall give notice of the pendency of proceedings in court to the parties executing said bond, by personal service or publication, and in manner and form as the court may direct, and the court shall thereupon have jurisdiction of said matter and parties in the same manner as if such property had been seized by virtue of the process aforesaid. But if said owners neglect or refuse to give said bond, the assessor shall issue to the collector or marshal aforesaid an order to sell the same; and the said collector or marshal shall thereupon advertise and sell the said property at public auction in the same manner as goods may be sold on final execution in said district; and the proceeds of the sale, after deducting the reasonable costs of the seizure and sale, shall be paid to the court aforesaid, to abide its final order, decree, or judgment.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance to this clause was in line eight hundred and eighty-seven to strike out the word "any" and insert the word "the" before "collector."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the words "deputy collector," in line eight hundred and eighty-eight, to insert "of the proper district or by such other collector or deputy collector as may be specially authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for that purpose."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eight hundred and ninety-four, and also in line eight hundred and ninety-six, to strike out the words "or duty" after the word "tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line nine hundred and nineteen the word "cost" should be "costs."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That sections fifty-three, fifty-four, fifty-five, fifty-six, fifty-seven, fifty-nine, sixty-two, sixty-three, sixty-four, sixty-five, sixty-six, sixty-seven, sixty-eight, sixty-nine, and seventy, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, to take effect on the 1st day of September, 1866.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendments to this clause.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That section seventy-one be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that no person, firm, company, or corporation shall be engaged in, prosecute, or carry on any trade, business, or profession, hereinafter mentioned and described, until he or they shall have paid a special tax therefor in the manner hereinafter provided.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this clause.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That section seventy-two be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that every person, firm, company, or corporation engaged in any trade, business, or profession, on which a special tax is imposed by law, shall register with the assistant assessor of the assessment district, first, his or their name or style, and in case of a firm or company, the names of the several persons constituting such firm or company, and their places of residence; second, the trade, business, or profession, and the place where such trade, business, or profession is to be carried on; third, if a rectifier, the number of barrels he designs to rectify; if a peddler, whether he designs to travel on foot or with one, two, or more horses or mules; if an inn-keeper, the yearly rental value of the house and property to be kept for said purpose. All of which facts shall be returned duly certified by such assistant assessor, both to the assessor and collector of the district; and the special tax shall be paid to the collector or deputy collector of the district as hereinafter provided for such trade, business, or profession.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to add to the end of the clause the words, "who shall give a receipt therefor."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line nine hundred and eighty-four the words "both to" should be transposed. It should read, "to both the assessor and collector of the district."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That section twenty-three be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any one who shall exercise or carry on any trade, business, or profession, or do any act hereinafter mentioned, for the exercising, carrying on, or doing of which a special tax is imposed by this act, without payment thereof as in that behalf required, shall, for every such offense, besides being liable to the payment of the tax, be subject to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or a fine not exceeding $500, or both, and such fine shall be distributed between the United States and the informer, if there be any, as provided by law.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this clause.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That section seventy-four be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that the receipt for the payment of any special tax shall contain and set forth the purpose, trade, business, or profession for which such tax is paid, and the name and place of abode of the person or persons paying the same; if by a rectifier, the quantity of spirits intended to be rectified; if by a peddler, whether he is traveling on foot, or with one, two, or more horses or mules, the time for which payment is made, the date or time of payment, and (except in the case of auctioneers, produce brokers, commercial brokers, patent-right dealers, photographers, builders, insurance agents, insurance brokers, and peddlers,) the place at which the trade, business, or profession for which the tax is paid shall be carried on; Provided, That the payment of the special tax herein imposed shall not exempt from an additional special tax the person or persons, (except lawyers, physicians, surgeons, dentists, cattle brokers, horse dealers, peddlers, produce brokers, commercial brokers, patent-right dealers, photographers, builders, insurance agents, insurance brokers, and auctioneers,) or firm, company, or corporation doing business in any other place than that stated; but nothing herein contained shall require a special tax for the storage of goods, wares, or merchandise in other places than the place of business, nor for the sale by manufacturers or producers of their own goods, wares, and merchandise at the place of production or manufacture, and at their principal office or place of business, provided no goods, wares, or merchandise shall be kept for sale at said office. And every person exercising or carrying on any trade, business, or profession, or doing any act for which a special tax is imposed, shall, on demand of any officer of internal revenue, produce and exhibit the receipt for payment of the tax, and unless he shall do so may be taken and deemed not to have paid such tax. And in case any peddler shall refuse to exhibit his or her receipt, as aforesaid, when demanded by any officer of internal revenue, said officer may seize the horse or mule, wagon and contents, or pack, bundle, or basket of any person so refusing, and the assessor of the district in which the seizure has occurred may, on ten days' notice, published in any newspaper in the district, or served personally on the peddler, or at his dwelling-house, require such peddler to show cause, if any he has, why the horse or mules, wagon and contents, pack, bundle, or basket so seized shall not be forfeited; and in case no sufficient cause is shown, the assessor may direct a forfeiture, and issue an order to the collector or to any deputy collector of the district for the sale of the property so forfeited; and the same, after payment of the expenses of the proceedings, shall be paid to the collector for the use of the United States. And all such special taxes shall become due on the 1st day of May in each year, or on commencing any trade, business, or profession upon which such tax is by law imposed. In the former case the tax shall be reckoned for one year, and in the latter case proportionably for that part of the year from the 1st day of the month in which the liability to a special tax commenced, to the 1st day of May following.

The committee proposed to amend this clause in line ten hundred and thirty, by striking out after the word "kept" the words "for sale," and in the same line, after the word "office," inserting "or place of business."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That section seventy-five be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that upon the death of any person having paid the special tax for any trade, business, or profession, it may and shall be lawful for the executors or administrators, or the wife or child, or the legal representatives of such deceased person, to occupy the house or premises, and in like manner to exercise or carry on, for the residue of the term for which the tax shall have been paid, the same trade, business, or profession, in or upon the same house or premises as the deceased before exercised or carried on, without payment of any additional tax. And in case of the removal of any person or persons from the house or premises for which any trade, business, or profession was taxed, it shall be lawful for the person or persons so removing to any other place, to carry on the trade, business, or profession specified in the tax receipt at the place to which such person or persons may remove without payment of any additional tax: Provided, That all cases of death, change, or removal, as aforesaid, shall be registered with the assistant assessor, together with the name or names of the person or persons making such change or removal, or successor to any person deceased, under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance to this clause was in line ten hundred and sixty-eight, after the word "profession," to strike out the words "in or upon the same house or premises," and in line ten hundred and sixty-nine, after the words "carried on," to insert the words "in or upon the same houses or premises."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line ten hundred and seventy-nine, after the words "assistant assessor," to insert "and with the collector."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That section seventy-six be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that in every case where more than one of the pursuits, employments, or occupations, hereinafter described, shall be pursued or carried on in the same place by the same person at the same time, except as hereinafter provided, the tax must be paid for each according to the rates severally prescribed: Provided, That in cities and towns having a less population than six thousand persons according to the last preceding census, one special tax shall be held to embrace the business of land-warrant brokers, claim agents, and real estate agents, upon payment of the highest rate of tax applicable to either one of said pursuits.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to this clause, in line ten hundred and ninety to strike out the word "must" and insert "shall."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next clause was read, as follows:

That section seventy-seven be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that no auctioneer shall, by virtue of having paid the special tax as an auctioneer, sell any goods or other property at private sale, nor shall he employ any other person to act as auctioneer in his behalf, except in his own store or warehouse or in his presence; and any auctioneer who shall sell goods or commodities otherwise than by auction, without having paid the special tax imposed upon such business, shall be subject and liable to the penalty imposed upon persons dealing in or retailing, trading, or selling goods or commodities without payment of the special tax for exercising or carrying on such trade or business; and where goods or commodities are the property of any person or persons taxed to deal in or retail, or trade in or sell the same, it shall and may be lawful for any person exercising or carrying on the trade or business of an auctioneer to sell such goods or commodities for and on behalf of such person or persons in said house or premises.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this clause.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That section seventy-eight be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any number of persons, except lawyers, conveyancers, claim agents, patent agents, physicians, surgeons, dentists, cattle brokers, horse dealers, and peddlers, doing business in copartnership at any one place, shall be required to pay but one special tax for such copartnership.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this clause.

The Secretary read the first item of the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That section seventy-nine be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that a special tax shall be, and hereby is, imposed as follows, that is to say:

1. Banks chartered or organized under a general law with a capital not exceeding $50,000, and bankers using or employing a capital not exceeding the sum of $50,000, shall pay $100; when exceeding $50,000, for every additional $1,000 in excess of $50,000, two dollars. Every incorporated or other bank, and every person, firm, or company having a place of business where credits are opened by the deposit or collection of money or currency, subject to be paid or remitted upon draft, check, or order, or where money is advanced or loaned on stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes, or where stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes are received for discount or for sale, shall be regarded as a bank or as a banker under this act. Provided, That any savings bank having no capital stock, and whose business is confined to receiving deposits and loaning or investing the same for the benefit of its depositors, and which does no other business of banking, shall not be subject to this tax.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The next item was read, as follows:

2. Wholesale dealers, whose annual sales do not exceed $50,000, shall pay fifty dollars; and if their annual sales exceed $50,000, for every additional $1,000 in excess of $50,000, they shall pay one dollar; and the amount of all sales within the year beyond $50,000 shall be returned monthly to the assistant assessor, and the tax on sales in excess of $50,000 shall be assessed by the assessors and paid monthly as other monthly taxes are assessed and paid. Every person shall be regarded as a wholesale dealer under this act whose business it is, for himself or on commission, to sell or offer to sell any goods, wares, or merchandise of foreign or domestic production, not including wines, spirits, or malt liquors, whose annual sales exceed $25,000. And the payment of the special tax as a wholesale dealer shall not exempt any such person acting as a commercial broker from the payment of the special tax imposed upon commercial brokers: Provided, That no person paying the special tax as a wholesale dealer in liquors shall be required to pay an additional special tax on account of the sale of other goods, wares, or merchandise on the same premises: And provided further, That, in estimating the amount of sales for the purposes of this section, any sales made by or through another wholesale dealer on commission shall not be again estimated and included as sold by the party for whom the sale was made.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The next item was as follows:

3. Retail dealers shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose business or occupation it is to sell or offer for sale any goods, wares, or merchandise of foreign or domestic production, not including spirits, wines, ale, beer, or other malt liquors, and whose annual sales exceed $1,000 and do not exceed $25,000, shall be regarded as a retail dealer under this act.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The next item was as follows:

4. Wholesale dealers in liquors whose annual sales do not exceed $50,000 shall pay $100, and if exceeding $50,000, for every additional $1,000 in excess of $50,000, they shall pay one dollar, and such excess shall be assessed and paid in the same manner as required of wholesale dealers. Every person who shall sell or offer for sale any distilled spirits, fermented liquors, or wines of any kind in quantities of more than three gallons at one time to the same purchaser, or whose annual sales, including sales of other merchandise, shall exceed $25,000, shall be regarded as a wholesale dealer in liquors.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The next item was:

5. Retail dealers in liquors shall pay twenty-five dollars. Every person who shall sell or offer for sale foreign or domestic spirits, wines, ale, beer, or other malt liquors in quantities of three gallons or less, and whose annual sales, including all sales of other merchandise, do not exceed $25,000, shall be regarded as a retail dealer in liquors under this act.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The next item was as follows:

6. Lottery ticket dealers shall pay $100. Every person, association, firm, or corporation who shall make, sell, or offer to sell lottery tickets or fractional parts thereof, or any token, certificate, or device representing or intending to represent a lottery ticket or any fractional part thereof, or any policy of numbers in any lottery, or shall manage any lottery, or prepare schemes of lotteries, or superintend the drawing of any lottery, shall be deemed a lottery ticket dealer under this act: Provided, That every person doing the business of lottery ticket dealers shall give bond, in the sum of $1,000, with sureties, to be approved by the collector of the district, conditioned that he will not sell any ticket or policy of numbers or supplementary ticket of such lottery which has not been duly stamped according to law.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this item by striking out after the word "provided," in line twelve hundred and seven, the following words—

That every person doing the business of lottery ticket dealers shall give bond, in the sum of $1,000, with sureties, to be approved by the collector of the district, conditioned that he will not sell any ticket or policy of numbers or supplementary ticket of such lottery which has not been duly stamped according to law—

And inserting in lieu thereof:

That the managers of any lottery shall give bond in the sum of $1,000 that the person paying such tax shall not sell any tickets or supplementary ticket of such lottery which has not been duly stamped according to law, and that he will pay the tax imposed by law upon the gross receipts of his sales.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

7. Horse dealers shall pay ten dollars. Any person whose business it is to buy and sell horses or mules shall be regarded a horse dealer under this act: Provided, That one special tax having been paid, no additional tax shall be imposed upon any horse dealer for keeping a livery stable, nor upon any livery stable keeper for dealing in horses.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

8. Livery stable keepers shall pay ten dollars. Any person whose business it is to keep horses for hire, or to let, or to keep, feed, or board horses for others, shall be regarded as a livery stable keeper under this act.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this section.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

9. Brokers shall pay fifty dollars. Every person, firm, or company whose business it is to negotiate purchases or sales of stocks, bonds, exchange, bullion, coined money, bank notes, promissory notes, or other securities, for themselves or others, shall be regarded as a broker under this act: Provided, That any person having paid the special tax as a banker shall not be required to pay the special tax as a broker.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

10. Pawnbrokers using or employing a capital of not exceeding $50,000 shall pay fifty dollars; and when using or employing a capital exceeding $50,000, for every additional $1,000 in excess of $50,000, shall pay two dollars; and such excess shall be assessed and paid in the same manner as required of wholesale dealers. Every person whose business or occupation it is to take or receive, by way of pledge, pawn, or exchange, any goods, wares, or merchandise, or any kind of personal property whatever, as security for the repayment of any money lent thereon, shall be deemed a pawnbroker under this act.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this item by striking out in lines twelve hundred and forty-three and twelve hundred and forty-four the following words:

And such excess shall be assessed and paid in the same manner as required of wholesale dealers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

11. Land-warrant brokers shall pay twenty-five dollars. Any person shall be regarded as a land-warrant broker within the meaning of this act who makes a business of buying and selling land-warrants, or of furnishing them to settlers or other persons.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

12. Cattle brokers, whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000, shall pay ten dollars; and if exceeding the sum of $10,000 one dollar for each additional thousand dollars. Any person whose business it is to buy or sell or deal in cattle, hogs, or sheep, shall be considered as a cattle broker.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this item in line twelve hundred and one by inserting after the word "annual" the words "purchases or," so as to read "cattle brokers whose annual purchases or sales," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twelve hundred and fifty-eight, after the words "each additional thousand dollars," to insert "and such excess shall be assessed and paid in the same manner as required of wholesale dealers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

13. Produce brokers, whose annual sales do not exceed the sum of $10,000, shall pay ten dollars. Every person other than one having paid the special tax as a commercial broker or cattle broker, or wholesale or retail dealer or peddler, whose occupation it is to buy or sell agricultural or farm products, and whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000, shall be regarded as a produce broker under this act.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this item in lines twelve hundred and sixty-four and twelve hundred and sixty-nine by inserting the words "purchases or" before the word "sales."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

14. Commercial brokers shall pay twenty dollars. Any person or firm whose business it is, as a broker, to negotiate sales or purchases of goods, wares, or merchandise, or to negotiate freights and other business for the owners of vessels, or for the shippers, or consignors, or consignees of freight carried by vessels, shall be regarded a commercial broker under this act.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

15. Custom-house brokers shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose occupation it is, as the agent of others, to arrange entries and other custom-house papers, or transact business at any port of entry relating to the importation or exportation of goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be regarded a custom-house broker under this act.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

16. Distillers shall pay $100. Every person, firm, or corporation, who distills or manufactures spirits, shall be deemed a distiller under this act: Provided, That distillers of apples, grapes, or peaches, distilling or manufacturing fifty and less than one hundred and fifty barrels per year from the same, shall pay fifty dollars; and those distilling less than fifty barrels per year from the same shall pay twenty dollars: And provided further, That no tax shall be imposed for any still, stills, or other apparatus used by druggists and chemists for the recovery of alcohol for pharmaceutical and chemical or scientific purposes which has been used in those processes.

The Committee on Finance proposed three amendments to this item. The first amendment was in line twelve hundred and eighty-eight, after the words "manufactures spirits," to insert "or who brews or makes mash, wort, or wash for distillation or the production of spirits."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twelve hundred and ninety-one, after the word "peaches," to strike out the words "distilling or manufacturing fifty and less than one hundred and fifty barrels per year from the same."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twelve hundred and ninety-three, after the words "fifty dollars," to strike out the words "and those distilling or manufacturing less than fifty barrels per year from the same, shall pay twenty dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

17. Brewers shall pay $100. Every person, firm, or corporation who manufactures fermented liquors of any name or description, for sale, from malt, wholly or in part, or from any substitute therefor, shall be deemed a brewer under this act: Provided, That any person, firm, or corporation, who manufactures less than five hundred barrels per year, shall pay the sum of fifty dollars.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

18. Rectifiers who shall rectify any quantity of spirituous liquors, not exceeding five hundred barrels, packages, or casks, containing not more than forty gallons to each barrel, package, or cask, shall pay twenty-five dollars; and twenty-five dollars additional for each additional five hundred such barrels, packages, or casks, or any fractional part thereof. Every person, firm, or corporation, who rectifies, purifies, or refines spirituous liquors or wines by any process, or mixes distilled spirits, whisky, brandy, gin, or wine, with any materials for sale under the name of whisky, rum, brandy, gin, wine, or any other name, shall be regarded as a rectifier under this act.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to this item, in line thirteen hundred and fifteen, after the word "refines" to strike out the following words—

Spirituous liquors or wines by any process, or mixes distilled spirits, whisky, brandy, gin, or wine, with any materials for sale under the name of whisky, rum, brandy, gin, wine—

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Distilled spirits, or wines, by any process, or who, by mixing distilled spirits or wine with any materials, manufactures any spurious, imitation, or compound liquors for sale, under the name of whisky, brandy, gin, rum, wine, spirits, or wine bitters.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

19. Coal-oil distillers shall pay fifty dollars. Any person, firm, or corporation who shall refine, produce, or distill crude or refined petroleum or rock oil, or crude coal oil, or crude or refined oil made of asphaltum, shale, peat, or other bituminous substances, or shall manufacture illuminating oil, shall be regarded as a coal-oil distiller under this act.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this item in line thirteen hundred and twenty-four by inserting, after the words "coal-oil distillers," the words "and distillers of burning fluid and camphene."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line thirteen hundred and twenty-seven to strike out the words "crude or refined" before "petroleum," and after the words "rock oil or" to strike out the words "crude coal-oil, or crude or refined;" and in line thirteen hundred and twenty-eight to insert the word "coal" before "asphaltum."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

20. Keepers of hotels, inns, or taverns shall be classified and rated according to the yearly rental, or if not rented, according to the estimated yearly rental of the house and property intended to be so occupied as follows, to wit: when the rent or valuation of the yearly rental of said house and property shall be $200 or less shall pay ten dollars; and if exceeding $200, for any additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $200, five dollars: Provided, That a payment of such special tax shall be construed to authorize the person so keeping a hotel, inn, or tavern to furnish the necessary food for the animals of such travelers or sojourners without the payment of an additional special tax as a livery stable keeper. Every place where food and lodging are provided for and furnished to travelers and sojourners, in view of payment therefor, shall be regarded as a hotel, inn, or tavern under this act: Provided, That keepers of hotels, taverns, and eating-houses, in which liquors are sold by retail, to be drunk upon the premises, shall pay an additional tax of twenty-five dollars. The yearly rental shall be fixed and established by the assistant assessor of the proper assessment district at its proper value; but if rented, at not less than the actual rent agreed on by the parties. All steamers and vessels, upon waters of the United States, on board of which passengers or travelers are provided with food or lodgings, shall be subject to and required to pay twenty-five dollars: Provided, That any person who shall make a false or fraudulent return of the actual rent mentioned in this paragraph shall be subject to a penalty therefor of double the amount of the tax.

The Committee on Finance reported several amendments to this item. The first was in line thirteen hundred and thirty-eight to insert the word "they" before "shall," so as to read, "they shall pay ten dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

21. Keepers of eating-houses shall pay ten dollars. Every place where food or refreshments of any kind, not including spirits, wines, ale, beer, or other malt liquors, are provided for casual visitors and sold for consumption therein, shall be regarded as an eating-house under this act. But the keeper of an eating-house having paid the tax therefor, shall not be required to pay a special tax as a confectioner, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to add at the end of this clause the following:

And keepers of hotels, inns, taverns, and eating-houses having paid the special tax therefor, shall not be required to pay additional tax for selling tobacco, snuff, or cigars on the same premises, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

22. Confectioners shall pay ten dollars. Every person who sells at retail confectionery, sweetmeats, confits, or other confections, in any building, shall be regarded as a confectioner under this act. But wholesale and retail dealers, having paid the special tax therefor, shall not be required to pay the special tax as a confectioner, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Committee on Finance proposed no amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

23. Claim agents and agents for procuring patents shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose business it is to prosecute claims in any of the Executive Departments of the Federal Government, or procure patents, shall be deemed a claim or patent agent, as the case may be, under this act.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

24. Patent-right dealers shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose business it is to sell, or offer for sale, patent rights, shall be regarded as a patent-right dealer under this act.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

25. Real estate agents shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose business it is to sell or offer for sale real estate for others, or to rent houses, stores, or other buildings or real estate, or to collect rent for others, except lawyers paying a special tax as such, shall be regarded as a real estate agent under this act.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

26. Conveyancers shall pay ten dollars. Every person other than one having paid the special tax as a lawyer or claim agent, whose business it is to draw deeds, bonds, mortgages, wills, writs, or other legal papers, or to examine titles to real estate, shall be regarded as a conveyancer under this act.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to ask the committee if they have any objection to an amendment there so as to exempt justices of the peace from taking out this license as conveyancers.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think that if they act as conveyancers, drawing papers, they ought to have licenses. I think the Government ought to be very careful in licensing them. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, when they draw such papers, they make some mistake or other that involves title.

Mr. HOWE. If it is objected to, I will not move an amendment. I cannot move an amendment now, anyhow.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

27. Intelligence office keepers shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose business it is to find or furnish places of employment for others, or to find or furnish servants upon application in writing or otherwise, receiving compensation therefor, shall be regarded as an intelligence office keeper under this act.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The next item was read by the Secretary, as follows:

28. Insurance agents shall pay ten dollars. Any person who shall act as agent of any fire, marine, life, mutual, or other insurance company or companies, or any person who shall negotiate or procure insurance for which he receives any commission or other compensation, shall be regarded as an insurance agent under this act: Provided, That if the annual receipts of any person as such agent shall not exceed $100, he shall pay five dollars only: And provided further, That no special tax shall be imposed upon any person for selling tickets or contracts of insurance against injury to persons while traveling by land or water.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The next item was read by the Secretary, as follows:

29. Foreign insurance agents shall pay fifty dollars. Every person who shall act as agent of any foreign fire, marine, life, mutual, or other insurance company or companies, shall be regarded as a foreign insurance agent under this act.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

30. Auctioneers whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000 shall pay ten dollars, and if exceeding $10,000 shall pay twenty dollars. Every person shall be deemed an auctioneer within the meaning of this act whose business it is to offer property at public sale to the highest or best bidder: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to judicial or executive officers making auction sales by virtue of any judgment or decree of any court, nor public sales made by or for executors, administrators, or guardians of any estate held by them as such, nor to attorneys in the ordinary prosecution of their business.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this item by striking out the following words at the close: "nor to attorneys in the ordinary prosecution of their business."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

31. Manufacturers shall pay ten dollars. Any person, firm, or corporation who shall manufacture by hand or machinery any goods, wares, or merchandise, not otherwise provided for, exceeding annually the sum of $1,000, or shall be engaged in the manufacture or preparation for sale of any articles or compounds, or shall put up for sale in packages with his own name or trademark thereon any articles or compound, shall be regarded as a manufacturer under this act.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

32. Peddlers shall be classified and rated as follows, to wit: when traveling with more than two horses, or mules, the first class, and shall pay fifty dollars; when traveling with two horses, or mules, the second class, and shall pay twenty-five dollars; when traveling with one horse, or mule, the third class, and shall pay fifteen dollars; when traveling on foot, or by public conveyance, the fourth class, and shall pay ten dollars. Any person, except persons peddling only charcoal, newspapers, magazines, Bibles, religious tracts, or the products of his farm or garden, who sells or offers to sell, at retail, goods, wares, or other commodities, traveling from place to place, in the street, or through different parts of the country, shall be regarded a peddler under this act: Provided, That any peddler who sells, or offers to sell, distilled spirits, fermented liquors or wines, dry goods, foreign or domestic, by one or more original packages or pieces, at one time, to the same person or persons, or who peddles jewelry, shall pay fifty dollars: Provided further, That manufacturers and producers of agricultural tools and implements, garden seeds, fruit and ornamental trees, stoves and hollow ware, brooms, wooden ware, charcoal, and gunpowder, delivering and selling at wholesale any of said articles, by themselves or their authorized agents, at places other than the place of manufacture, shall not therefor be required to pay any special tax.

The Committee on Finance reported two amendments to this item. The first was in line four hundred and sixty-seven to strike out the word "streets" and to insert "town," and after the word "through" to strike out the words "different parts of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of the clause the following proviso:

Provided further, That persons who sell shell or other fish, or both, trundling from place to place, and not from any shop or stand, shall be required to pay five dollars only; and no special tax shall be imposed for selling shell or other fish from hand-carts or wheelbarrows.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The word "trundling" in that proviso should be "traveling," and I move that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

33. Apothecaries shall pay ten dollars. Every person who keeps a shop or building where medicines are compounded or prepared according to prescriptions of physicians, or where medicines are sold, shall be regarded as an apothecary under this act. But wholesale and retail dealers, who have paid the special tax therefor, shall not be required to pay a tax as an apothecary; nor shall apothecaries who have paid the special tax be required to pay the tax as retail dealers in liquor in consequence of selling alcohol, or of selling or of dispensing, upon physician's prescriptions, the wines and spirits official in the United States and other national pharmacopoeias, in quantities not exceeding half a pint of either at any one time, not exceeding in aggregate cost value the sum of $300 per annum.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

34. Photographers shall pay ten dollars. Any person or persons who make for sale photographs, ambrotypes, daguerreotypes, or pictures, by the action of light, shall be regarded as a photographer under this act.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

35. Tobaccoists shall pay ten dollars. Any person, firm, or corporation whose business is to sell, at retail, cigars, snuff, or tobacco in any form, shall be regarded as a tobaccoist under this act. But wholesale and retail dealers, and keepers of hotels, inns, taverns, and eating-houses, having paid the special tax therefor, shall not be required to pay the tax as tobaccoists, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Committee on Finance proposed an amendment, in line fifteen hundred and seven to strike out the words "sell at retail" and to insert "manufacture."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The latter part of the paragraph should come out, as it is provided for in another place; and I therefore move to strike out the words:

But wholesale and retail dealers, and keepers of hotels, inns, taverns, and eating-houses, having paid the special tax therefor, shall not be required to pay the tax as tobaccoists, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

36. Butchers shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose business it is to sell butchers' meat at retail shall be regarded as a butcher under this act: Provided, That no butcher having paid the special tax therefor shall be required to pay the special tax as a retail dealer on account of selling other articles at the same store, stall, or premises: Provided further, That butchers who sell butchers' meat exclusively by themselves or agents, and persons who sell shell-fish or other fish, or both, traveling from place to place, and not from any shop or stand, shall be required to pay five dollars only, any existing law to the contrary notwithstanding. And no special tax shall be imposed for selling shell-fish or other fish from hand-carts or wheelbarrows.

The Committee on Finance reported two amendments to this item. The first was in line fifteen hundred and twenty-one, after the word "agents," to strike out the words "and persons who sell shell-fish or other fish, or both."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line fifteen hundred and twenty-five, after the word "notwithstanding," to strike out the following words:

And no special tax shall be imposed for selling shell-fish or other fish from hand-carts or wheelbarrows.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

37. Proprietors of theaters, museums, and concert halls, receiving pay as entrance money, shall pay $100. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays or performances, not including halls rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theater under this act: Provided, That when any such edifice is under lease at the passage of this act, the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to said lease.

The Committee on Finance reported two amendments to this item. The first was in line fifteen hundred and twenty-nine to strike out the words "receiving pay as entrance money."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line fifteen hundred and thirty-two, after the word "performances," to insert "for admission to which entrance money is received."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

38. The proprietor or proprietors of circuses shall pay $100. Every building, tent, space, or area where feats of horsemanship or acrobatic sports or theatrical performances are exhibited, shall be regarded as a circus under this act: Provided, That no special tax paid in one State shall exempt exhibitions from the tax in another State. And but one special tax shall be imposed under this act for exhibitions within any one State.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to call attention to the language of this clause. It reads as follows:

The proprietor or proprietors of circuses shall pay $100. Every building, tent, space, or area where feats of horsemanship or acrobatic sports or theatrical performances are exhibited, shall be regarded as a circus under this act.

Now, I unfortunately own a piece of ground, and when a circus comes along it generally takes possession of it and performs there. If they go upon a piece of ground belonging to any gentleman, and set up their tent, and perform on an afternoon or evening, he owning the area or space on which these feats of horsemanship are performed becomes, in the eyes of the law, a proprietor of a circus.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It says that "the proprietor or proprietors of circuses shall pay $100."

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir; but then it goes on to say "every building, tent, space, or area where feats of horsemanship or acrobatic sports or theatrical performances are exhibited, shall be regarded as a circus under this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa propose an amendment?

Mr. GRIMES. No, sir; I do not. I simply desire to call the attention of the committee to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read the following items, to which no amendments were proposed by the Committee on Finance:

39. Jugglers shall pay twenty dollars. Every person who performs by sleight of hand shall be regarded as a juggler under this act. The proprietors or agents of all other public exhibitions or shows for money, not enumerated in this section, shall pay ten dollars: Provided, That a special tax paid in one State shall not exempt exhibitions from tax in another State. And but one special tax shall be required under this act for exhibitions within any one State.

40. Proprietors of bowling-alleys and billiard rooms shall pay ten dollars for each alley or table. Every place or building where bowls are thrown or billiards played, and open to the public, with or without price, shall be regarded as a bowling-alley or billiard room, respectively, under this act.

41. Proprietors of gift enterprises shall pay $150. Every person, firm, or corporation who shall sell or offer for sale any real estate or article of merchandise of any description whatsoever, or any ticket of admission to any exhibition or performance, with a promise, express or implied, to give or bestow, or in any manner hold out the promise of gift or bestowal of any article or thing for and in consideration of the purchase by any person of any other article or thing, shall be regarded as a proprietor of a gift enterprise under this act: Provided, That no such proprietor, in consequence of being thus taxed, shall be exempt from paying any other tax imposed by law, and the special tax herein required shall be in addition thereto.

The next item was read, as follows:

42. Owners of stallions and jacks shall pay ten dollars. Every person who keeps a male horse or a jack for the use of mares, requiring or receiving pay therefor, shall be regarded as the owner thereof, and shall furnish a statement to the assessor or assistant assessor, which shall contain a brief description of the animal, its age, and place or places where used or to be used: Provided, That all accounts, notes, or demands for the use of any such horse or jack, the owner or keeper thereof not having paid the tax as aforesaid, shall be void.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this item by striking out the word "male," before "horse."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the following items, to which the committee proposed no amendment:

43. Lawyers shall pay ten dollars. Every person who for fee or reward shall prosecute or defend causes in any court of record or other judicial tribunal of the United States or of any of the States, or whose business it is to give legal advice in relation to any cause or matter whatever, shall be deemed to be a lawyer within the meaning of this act.

44. Physicians, surgeons, and dentists shall pay ten dollars. Every person (except apothecaries) whose business it is, for fee and reward, to prescribe remedies or perform surgical operations for the cure of any bodily disease or ailment, shall be deemed a physician, surgeon, or dentist, within the meaning of this act.

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert after the items last read the following:

45. Architects and civil engineers shall pay ten dollars for each license. Every person whose business it is to plan, design, or superintend the construction of buildings or ships, or of roads or bridges or canals or railroads, shall be regarded as an architect and civil engineer under this act: Provided, That this shall not include a practical carpenter who labors on a building.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

46. Builders and contractors shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose business it is to construct buildings, or ships or bridges or canals or railroads, by contract, whose receipts from building contracts exceed $2,500 in any one year, shall be regarded as a builder and contractor under this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Committee on Finance propose to change "forty-five" to "forty-six," as the number of the clause. This change will be made without a vote.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to change the word "ships" to "vessels," the latter being a more comprehensive term.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert after the item last read the following:

47. Plumbers and gas-fitters shall pay ten dollars for each license. Every person, firm, or corporation, whose business it is to fit, furnish, or sell plumbing materials, gas-pipes, gas-burners, or other gas-fittings, shall be regarded as a plumber and gas-fitter within the meaning of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed to change from "forty-six" the number of the next item, namely:

48. Assayers, assaying gold and silver, or either, of a value not exceeding in one year $250,000, shall pay $100, and $200 when the value exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $500,000, and $500 when the value exceeds $500,000. Any person or persons or corporation whose business or occupation it is to separate gold and silver from other metals or mineral substances with which such gold or silver, or both, are alloyed, combined, or united, or to ascertain or determine the quantity of gold or silver in any alloy or combination with other metals, shall be deemed an assayer for the purpose of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The numbering will be changed without a vote.

The next item was read, as follows:

47. Miners shall pay ten dollars. Every person, firm, or company, who shall employ others in the business of mining for coal, or for gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, zinc, spelter, or other minerals, not having paid the tax therefor, as a manufacturer, and no other, shall be regarded as a miner under this act: Provided, That this shall not apply to any miner whose receipts as such shall not exceed, annually, $1,000.

The Committee on Finance proposed to change the number of the item from "forty-seven" to "forty-nine."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The change will be made without a vote.

The next item was read, as follows:

48. Express carriers and agents shall pay ten dollars. Every person, firm, or company engaged in the carrying or delivery of money, valuable papers, or any articles for pay, or doing an express business, whose gross receipts therefrom exceed the sum of $1,000 per annum, shall be regarded as an express carrier: Provided, That but one special tax of ten dollars shall be imposed upon any one person, firm, or company, in respect to all the business to be done by such person, firm, or company, on a continuous route, and the payment of such tax shall cover all business done upon such route by such person, firm, or company anywhere in the United States; and such tax shall be required only from the principal in such business, and not from any subordinate: Provided further, That draymen or teamsters owning one dray or team shall not be required to pay such tax.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this item by striking out "forty-eight" and inserting "fifty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That requires no vote.

The next amendment was to insert the word "only" before "one;" so as to make the last proviso read:

Provided further, That draymen and teamsters owning only one dray or team shall not be required to pay such tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next item was read, as follows:

39. Grinders of coffee or spices shall pay $100. Any person who manufactures or prepares for use and sale, by grinding or other process, coffee, spices, or mustard, or adulterated coffee, spices, or mustard, or any article or compound intended for use in the adulteration of or as substitutes for coffee, spices, or mustard, shall be regarded as a grinder of coffee or spices under this act: Provided, That any person who shall roast coffee for use or sale shall be required to pay the special tax herein imposed upon grinders of coffee or spices.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The number of this item will be changed from "forty-nine" to "fifty-one."

The Secretary read the next clause of the ninth section of the bill, as follows:

That section eighty be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that the special tax shall not be imposed upon apothecaries, confectioners, butchers, keepers of eating-houses, hotels, inns, or taverns, tobacconists, or retail dealers, except retail dealers in spirituous and malt liquors, when their annual gross receipts shall not exceed the sum of $1,000, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding; the amount of such annual receipts to be ascertained or estimated in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe, and so of all other annual sales or receipts where the tax is graduated by the amount of sales or receipts; and where the amount of the tax has been increased by law above the amount paid by any person, firm, or company, or has been understated or underestimated, such person, firm, or company shall be again assessed, and pay the amount of such increase: Provided, That when any person, before the passage of this act, has been assessed for a license, the amount thus assessed being equal to the tax herein imposed for the business covered by such license, no special tax shall be assessed until the expiration of the period for which such license was assessed.

The committee proposed to amend this clause by striking out the words "and so," in line sixteen hundred and seventy-nine, and inserting "as well as the amount of" before "all other annual sales or receipts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That section eighty-one be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that nothing contained in the preceding sections of this act shall be construed to impose an additional tax upon any person as a dealer for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise, made or produced and sold by the manufacturer or producer at the manufactory or place where the same is made or produced, and at the principal office or place of business: Provided, That no goods, wares, or merchandise shall be kept for sale at such office; nor upon vintners who sell wine of their own growth at the place where the same is made; nor upon apothecaries as to wines or spirituous liquors which they use exclusively in the preparation or making up of medicines; nor shall physicians be taxed for keeping on hand medicines solely for the purpose of making up their own prescriptions for their own patients; nor shall farmers be taxed as manufacturers or producers for making butter or cheese, with milk from their own cows, or for any other farm products: Provided, That the payment of any tax in this act levied or provided shall not be held or construed to exempt any person carrying on any trade, business, or profession, herein specified, from any penalty or punishment provided by the laws of any State for carrying on such trade, business, or profession within such State, or in any manner to authorize the commencement or continuance of such trade, business, or profession contrary to the laws of such State, or in places prohibited by municipal law; nor shall the payment of any tax herein provided be held or construed to prohibit or prevent any State from placing a duty or tax for State or other purposes on any trade, business, or profession taxed by this act.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause by striking out after the word "impose," in line sixteen hundred and ninety-four, these words:

An additional tax upon any person as a dealer for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise, made or produced and sold by the manufacturer or producer at the manufactory or place where the same is made or produced, and at the principal office or place of business: Provided, That no goods, wares, or merchandise shall be kept for sale at such office; nor.

And in lieu thereof to insert the words "a special tax;" so as to make the clause read:

That nothing contained in the preceding sections of this act shall be construed to impose a special tax upon vintners, &c.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I should like to inquire of the committee whether it is their intention, in addition to the tax assessed upon manufacturers of five or six per cent., as the case may be, to oblige them to pay taxes on the sales of their products, as the striking out of this clause would seem to imply.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This is provided for on page 51, and that is the reason it is struck out here. We do not want to provide twice for the same thing.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I should like to understand from the chairman of the committee if it is the intention of the committee, in addition to the percentage of five per cent. that the manufacturer pays on his products, he shall also pay a tax upon his sales.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no change made in the act of last year on that subject.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Then it is not intended to tax sales; there is no intention of that kind?

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is nothing of that kind in the act.

Mr. SPRAGUE. There was by some members of the House of Representatives a fear that the provisions of the bill were not clear enough to settle that point.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is precisely as it was last year; no change.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of the ninth section of the bill, as follows:

That section eighty-six be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any person, firm, company, or corporation manufacturing or producing goods, wares, and merchandise, sold or removed for consumption or use, upon which duties or taxes are imposed by law, shall, in their return of the value and quantity, render an account of the full amount of actual sales made by the manufacturer, producer, or agent thereof, and shall state whether any part, and if so, what part, of said goods, wares, and merchandise has been consumed or used by the owner, owners, or agent, or used for the production of another manufacture or product, together with the market value of the same at the time of such use or consumption; whether such goods, wares, and merchandise were shipped for a foreign port or consigned to auction or commission merchants, other than agents, for sale; and shall make a return according to the value at the place of shipment, when shipped for a foreign port, or according to the value at the place of manufacture or production, when removed for use or consumption, or consigned to others than agents of the manufacturer or producer. The value and quantity of the goods, wares, and merchandise required to be stated as aforesaid shall be estimated by the actual sales made by the manufacturer or by his agent. And where such goods, wares, and merchandise have been removed for consumption or for delivery to others, or placed on shipboard, or are no longer within the custody or control of the manufacturer or his agent, not being in his factory, store, or warehouse, the value shall be estimated at the average of the market value of the like goods, wares, and merchandise at the time when the same became liable to tax.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause by striking out "duties or" before "taxes," in line seventeen hundred and twenty-seven.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of the ninth section of the bill, as follows:

That section eighty-seven be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any person, firm, company, or corporation who shall now be engaged in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or who shall hereafter commence or engage in such manufacture before commencing, or if already commenced, before continuing such manufacture for which they may be liable to be assessed under the provisions of law, shall, in addition to a compliance with all other provisions of law, furnish to the assessor or assistant assessor a statement, subscribed under oath or affirmation, accurately setting forth the place, and if in a city, the street and number of the street where the manufacturing is, or is to be, carried on, the name and description of the manufactured article, and if the same shall be manufactured for or to be sold and delivered to any other person or party, the name and residence and business or occupation of the person or party for whom the said article is to be manufactured or to whom it is to be delivered, and generally the kind and quality manufactured, or proposed to be manufactured; and shall give a bond to the United States, with one or more sureties to be approved by the collector of the district, in the sum of $3,000 for each cutting-machine kept for use, in the sum of $1,000 for each screw-press kept for use in making plug or pressed tobacco, in the sum of $5,000 for each hydraulic press kept for use, in the sum of $1,000 for each snuff-mull kept for use, and in the sum of $100 for each person employed by said person, firm, company, or corporation in making cigars, conditioned that he will comply with all the requirements of law in regard to the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars; that he will not employ others to manufacture cigars who have not obtained the requisite permit for making cigars; that he will not engage in any attempt, by himself or by collusion with others, to defraud the Government of any duty or tax on any manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars; that he will render truly and correctly all the returns, statements, and inventories prescribed for manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, and cigars; that whenever he shall add to the number of cutting-machines, presses, snuff-mulls, or cigar-makers, used or employed by him, he will immediately give notice thereof to the collector who holds the bond that he will pay to the collector of the district all the duty or taxes which may or should be assessed and due on any tobacco, snuff, or cigars so manufactured, and that he will not knowingly sell, purchase, or receive for sale any such tobacco, snuff, or cigars which have not been inspected, branded, or stamped as required by law, or upon which the tax has not been paid if it has accrued or become payable. And the said bond may be renewed or changed from time to time, in regard to the sureties thereof, according to the discretion of the collector, under the instructions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And every person, firm, company, or corporation aforesaid shall exhibit, whenever demanded by any officer of internal revenue, a certificate from the collector, who is hereby authorized and directed to issue the same, setting forth the kind and number of machines, presses, snuff-mulls, and number of cigar-makers for which the bond has been given. And any person, firm, or corporation manufacturing tobacco, snuff, or cigars of any description without first furnishing the bond in the cases herein required, shall be subject to a fine of $300, and in addition thereto, upon conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, at the discretion of the court.

The committee proposed to amend this clause by striking out, in line seventeen hundred and fifty-seven, the word "shall" and inserting "may."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the words "duty or" before "tax," in lines seventeen hundred and eighty-nine and seventeen hundred and ninety-seven.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section eighty-eight be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that it shall be the duty of the assistant assessor of each district to keep a record, in a book or books to be provided for the purpose, to be open to the inspection of any person upon reasonable request, of the name of any and every person, firm, company, or corporation who may be engaged in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars in his district, together with the place where such manufacture is carried on and place of residence of the person or persons engaged therein; and the assistant assessor shall enter in said record, under the name of each manufacturer, an abstract of his monthly returns; and each assessor shall keep a similar record for the entire district.

The Committee on Finance proposed no amendment to this clause.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section eighty-nine be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that in all cases where tobacco, snuff, or cigars, of any description, are manufactured, in whole or in part, upon commission or shares, or where the material from which any such articles are made, or are to be made, is furnished by one party and manufactured by another, or where the material is furnished or sold by one party with an understanding or contract with another that the manufactured article is to be received in payment therefor or any part thereof, the duty or tax imposed by law thereon, when paid by the manufacturer, may be collected at the time, or at any time subsequently, of the party for whom the same was made or to whom the same was delivered, as aforesaid, or of the person or party who made the same as the assessor shall deem best for the collection of the revenue. And in case of fraud on the part of either of said parties in respect to said manufacture, or of any collusion on their part with intent to defraud the revenue, such material and manufactured articles shall be liable to forfeiture; and such articles shall be liable to be assessed the highest rates of tax or duty imposed by law upon any article belonging to its grade or class.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause by striking out "duty or" before "tax," in line eighteen hundred and forty-five, and by striking out "or duty" after "tax," in line eighteen hundred and fifty-six, and by striking out "of," in line eighteen hundred and forty-nine and inserting "upon."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These verbal amendments will be regarded as agreed to without a formal vote.

The committee also proposed to amend the clause by striking out, in lines eighteen hundred and forty-six and eighteen hundred and forty-seven, the words "when paid by the manufacturers may be collected at the time, or at any time subsequently, of" and inserting "may be assessed upon."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was at the close of the clause to strike out the words "belonging to its grade or class" and insert "of like kind."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next clause was read, as follows:

That section ninety be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any person, firm, company, or corporation, now or hereafter engaged in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars of any description whatsoever, shall be, and hereby is, required to make out and deliver to the assistant assessor of the assessment district a true statement or inventory of the quantity of each of the different kinds of tobacco, snuff, flour, snuff, cigars, tinfoil, licorice, and stems held or owned by him or them on the 1st day of January of each year, or at the time of commencing business under this act, setting forth what portion of said goods was manufactured or produced by him or them, and what was purchased from others, whether chewing, smoking, fine-cut, short, pressed, plug, snuff-flour or prepared snuff, or cigars, which statement or inventory shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of such person or persons, and be in manner and form as prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and every such person, company, or corporation shall keep in books an accurate account of all the articles aforesaid thereafter purchased by him or them, the quantity of tobacco, snuff, flour, or cigars, of whatever description, sold, consumed, or removed for consumption or sale, or removed from the place of manufacture; and he or they shall, on or before the 10th day of each month, furnish to the assistant assessor of the district a true and accurate abstract of all such purchases, and sales or removals, which abstract shall be verified by oath or affirmation; and in case of refusal or neglect to deliver the inventory, or keep the account, or furnish the abstract aforesaid, he or they shall forfeit the sum of $500, to be recovered with costs of suit. And it shall be the duty of any manufacturer or vendor of tinfoil or other material used in manufacturing tobacco, snuff, or cigars, on demand of any officer of internal revenue, to render to such officer a correct statement, verified by oath or affirmation, of the quantity and amount of tinfoil or other materials sold or delivered to any person or persons named in such demand; and in case of refusal or neglect to render such statement, or of cause to believe such statement to be incorrect or fraudulent, the assessor of the district may cause an examination of persons, books, and papers to be made in the same manner as provided in the fourteenth section of this act. And all the provisions of law relating to manufacturers generally, so far as applicable and not inconsistent herewith, shall be held to apply to the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, and cigars: Provided, That the tax imposed upon the manufacturer of tobacco, snuff, and cigars, shall be assessed on or before the time of removal from the place of manufacture, and shall be payable at the time of such removal, unless removed to a bonded warehouse; but nothing shall exonerate the manufacturer of tobacco, snuff, and cigars from liability to tax in case of sale before such removal: Provided further, That manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars, whether of domestic manufacture or imported, may be transferred without payment of the tax, to a bonded warehouse established in conformity with law and Treasury regulations, under such rules and regulations and upon the execution of such transportation bonds or other security as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, said bonds or other security to be taken by the collector of the district from which such removal is made; and may be transported from such a warehouse to any other bonded warehouse established as aforesaid, and may be withdrawn from bonded warehouse for consumption on payment of the tax, or removed for export to a foreign country without payment of tax, in conformity with the provisions of law relating to the removal of distilled spirits, all the rules, regulations, and conditions of which, so far as applicable, shall apply to tobacco, snuff, or cigars, in bonded warehouse. And no drawback shall in any case be allowed upon any manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars upon which any tax has been paid either before or after it has been placed in bonded warehouse.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance to this clause was in line eighteen hundred and seventy-seven to strike out "books" and insert "book-form;" so as to read, "shall keep in book-form an accurate account," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "description" and before "sold," in line eighteen hundred and eighty, to insert the word "manufactured."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line nineteen hundred and seven to strike out "assessed on or before the time of," and insert "held to accrue upon the sale or;" after "manufacture," in line nineteen hundred and nine, to strike out "and shall be payable at the time of such removal;" and after "warehouse," in line nineteen hundred and ten, to strike out "but nothing shall exonerate the manufacturer of tobacco, snuff, and cigars from liability to tax in case of sale before such removal;" so as to make the first proviso read:

Provided, That the tax imposed upon the manufacturer of tobacco, snuff, and cigars shall be held to accrue upon the sale or removal from the place of manufacture, unless removed to a bonded warehouse.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "as," in line nineteen hundred and nineteen, to insert "may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue subject to the approval of;" and after "Treasury," in line nineteen hundred and twenty-one, to strike out "may prescribe."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "cigars," in line nineteen hundred and thirty-three, to strike out "upon which any tax has been paid, either before or after it has been placed in bonded warehouse;" so as to make the clause read:

And no drawback shall in any case be allowed upon manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section ninety-one be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that all manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars, whether of domestic manufacture or imported, shall, before the same is used or removed for consumption, be inspected by an inspector appointed under the fifty-eighth section of the act to which this is an amendment, who shall mark or affix a stamp upon the box or other package containing such tobacco, snuff, or cigars, in a manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, denoting the kind, quantity, or number contained in each package, with the date of inspection and the name of the inspector, and the collection district. The fees of such inspector shall in all cases be paid by the owner of the manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars, so inspected. And the penalties for the fraudulent marking of any box or other package of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, and for any fraudulent attempt to evade the taxes on tobacco, snuff, or cigars, so inspected, by changing in any manner the package or the marks thereon, shall be the same as are provided in relation to distilled spirits by existing laws. And all cigars manufactured after the passage of this act shall be packed in boxes or paper packages. And any manufactured tobacco, snuff, and cigars, whether of domestic manufacture or imported, which shall be sold or pass out of the hands of the manufacturer or importer, except into a bonded warehouse, without the inspection marks or stamps affixed by the inspector, unless otherwise provided, shall be forfeited, and may be seized where ever found, and shall be sold, and the proceeds of such sale shall be distributed between the United States and the informer, if there be any, as provided by law. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall keep an account of all stamps delivered to the several inspectors; and said inspectors shall also keep an account of all stamps by them used or placed upon boxes containing cigars, and of all tobacco, snuff, and cigars inspected, and the name of the person, firm, or company for whom the same were so inspected, and shall return to the assessor of the district a separate and distinct account of the same, and also return to the said Commissioner, on demand, all stamps not otherwise accounted for, and shall give a bond for a faithful performance of all the duties to which he may be assigned, and to return or account for all stamps which may be placed in his hands.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Finance to this clause was in lines nineteen hundred and forty-one and nineteen hundred and forty-two to strike out the words "the fifty-eighth section of the act to which this is an amendment," and insert "this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following words from line nineteen hundred and fifty to line nineteen hundred and fifty-six:

And the penalties for the fraudulent marking of any box or other package of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, and for any fraudulent attempt to evade the taxes on tobacco, snuff, or cigars, so inspected, by changing in any manner the package or the marks thereon, shall be the same as are provided in relation to distilled spirits by existing laws.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And any person who shall affix upon any box or other package containing such tobacco, snuff, or cigars, any mark or stamp which shall be false or fraudulent in any of the particulars before recited in this section, or shall, with intent to defraud the United States, or to cause the same to be defrauded, change in any manner such stamp or mark, or such box or package so marked or stamped, shall be liable to a fine of not less than fifty dollars, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, for every such offense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section ninety-two be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that if any person other than the manufacturer shall sell or consign or remove for sale, or part with the possession of any manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars upon which the taxes imposed by law have not been paid, with the knowledge thereof, such person shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each offense. And any person who shall purchase or receive for sale any such tobacco, snuff, or cigars, which has not been inspected, branded, or stamped as required by law, or upon which the tax has not been paid, if it has accrued or become payable, with knowledge thereof, shall be liable to a penalty of fifty dollars for each and every offense. And any person who shall purchase or receive for sale any such tobacco, snuff, or cigars from any manufacturer who has not paid the special tax shall be liable for each and every offense to a penalty of $100, and, in addition thereto, a forfeiture of all the articles, as aforesaid, so purchased or received, or the full value thereof. And every person, before making any cigars after the passage of this act, shall apply for and procure from the assistant assessor of the district in which he resides a permit authorizing such persons to carry on the trade of cigar-making, for which permit he shall pay said assistant assessor the sum of twenty-five cents. And every person employed or working at the business of cigar-making in any other district than that in which he or she is a resident shall, before making any cigars in such other district, present said permit to the assistant assessor of the district where so employed or working, and procure the indorsement of said assistant assessor thereon, authorizing said business in said district, for which indorsement the assistant assessor shall be entitled to receive from the applicant the sum of ten cents. And it shall be the duty of every assistant assessor, upon application of any person residing in his district, to furnish a permit, or to indorse upon the permit of the applicant, if resident in another district, authority to pursue the trade of cigar-making within the proper district of such assistant assessor; and said assistant assessor shall keep a record of all permits granted or indorsed by him, showing the date of each permit, the name, residence, and place of employment of the party named therein, the name and district of the officer who originally granted the same, or who may have made any subsequent indorsements thereon, and the name or names of the party or parties by whom the person named in such permit is employed, or, if working for himself, stating such fact; and every person making cigars shall keep an accurate account in a book of all the cigars made by him, for whom, and their kind and quality; and, if made for any other person, shall state in said account the name of the person for whom the same were made, and his place of business, and shall, on the first Monday of every month, deliver to the assistant assessor of the district a copy of such account, verified by oath or affirmation that the same is true and correct: Provided, That journeymen cigar-makers and apprentices who work for others shall not be included in this provision. And if any person shall make any cigars without procuring such permit, or the proper indorsements thereon, or neglect to keep such account in a book, he shall be punished by a fine of five dollars for each day he shall so offend, or by imprisonment for such time as the court may order for each day's offense, not exceeding thirty days in the whole, upon any one conviction. And if any person making cigars shall fail to make the return herein required, or shall make a false return, he shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment not exceeding thirty days. And any person furnished with such permit may apply to the assistant assessor or inspector of the district to have any cigars of their own manufacture counted; and on receiving a certificate of the number, for which such fee as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be paid by the owner thereof, may sell and deliver such cigars to any purchaser, in bulk or unpacked, without payment of the duty. A copy of the certificate shall be retained by the assistant assessor, or by the inspector, who shall return the same to the assessor of the district. The purchaser shall pack such cigars in boxes or paper packages, and have the same inspected and marked, or stamped according to the provisions of this act, and shall make a return of the same, as inspected, to the assistant assessor of the district, and, wherein the same were manufactured, and, unless removed to a bonded warehouse, shall pay the duties on such cigars within fifteen days after purchasing them to the collector of the district wherein they were manufactured, and before the same have been removed from the store or building of such purchaser, or from his possession; and any such purchaser who shall neglect for more than fifteen days to pack and have such cigars duly inspected, and pay the duties thereon according to this act, or who shall purchase any cigars from any person not holding such permit, the duties thereon not having been paid, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined not exceeding $500, and be imprisoned not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court, and the cigars shall be forfeited and sold, one fourth for the benefit of the informer, one fourth for the officer who seized or had them condemned, and one half shall be paid to the Government. And if any person, firm, company, or corporation shall employ or procure any person to make any cigars who has not the permit or the indorsement thereon required by this act, he shall be punished by a fine of ten dollars for each day he shall so employ such person, or by imprisonment not exceeding ten days. And if any person shall be found making cigars without such permit, or the indorsement thereon, the collector of the district may seize any cigars, or tobacco for making cigars, which may be found in possession of such person, and the same shall be forfeited to the United States and sold; and the proceeds of such sale shall be distributed between the United States and the informer, if there be any, as provided by law.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause by striking out the following proviso in lines two thousand and forty-five, two thousand and forty-six, and two thousand and forty-seven:

Provided, That journeymen cigar-makers and apprentices, who work for others, shall not be included in this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line two thousand and forty-nine to strike out "a book" and insert "book-form."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line two thousand and fifty-eight after "person" to strike out the words "furnished with such permit," and in line two thousand and sixty to strike out "their" and insert "his."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line two thousand and sixty-six to strike out "duty" and insert "tax;" in line two thousand and seventy-three to strike out "and;" and in line two thousand and seventy-five to strike out "duties" and insert "taxes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line two thousand and seventy-nine to strike out "any" and insert "if;" in line two thousand and eighty to strike out "who;" in line two thousand and eighty-one to insert "to" before "pay;" in line two thousand and eighty-one to strike out "duties" and insert "taxes;" after "act," in line two thousand and eighty-two, to strike out "or who shall purchase any cigars from any person not holding such permit, the duties thereon not having been paid, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and," and to insert "he shall;" after "cigars," in line two thousand and eighty-seven, to insert "may be seized by the collector and;" after "forfeited," in line two thousand and eighty-eight, to strike out "and sold, one fourth for the benefit of the informer, one fourth for the officer who seized or had them condemned, and one half to the Government," and insert "to the United States;" so as to read:

And if such purchaser shall neglect for more than fifteen days to pack and have such cigars duly inspected, and to pay the taxes thereon according to this act, he shall be fined not exceeding $500 and be imprisoned not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court, and the cigars may be seized by the collector, and shall be forfeited to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have now arrived at what seems to be a good place to stop, and I think it would be very hard on the Clerk to go any further to-day. I propose, therefore, to stop here with this bill to-day if the Senate is willing.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think we might as well adjourn. It is pretty hard work to attend to this bill for so many hours, and I move an adjournment.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire a short executive session for a particular purpose which will only occupy a few moments.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well, I withdraw my motion.

The motion of Mr. CONNESS was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 20, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

On motion of Mr. CULLOM, leave of absence was granted to Mr. FARNSWORTH for two weeks from Monday last.

IOWA LAND GRANT.

Mr. DONNELLY. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Public Lands House bill No. 413, granting to the State of Iowa land in alternate sections to aid in the construction of the Iowa Central railroad.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object.

SAFETY OF PASSENGERS.

Mr. EGGLESTON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back Senate amendments to House bill No. 477, further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes, with the recommendation that they be non-concurred in.

The amendments were non-concurred in.

Mr. EGGLESTON then moved that a committee of conference be requested on the disagreeing votes between the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

C. T. FAY.

Mr. McRUER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the account of C. T. Fay; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

PUNISHMENT OF CRIMES.

Mr. BOUTWELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to amend an act in addition to the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States, and to repeal the acts therein mentioned, passed April 18, 1818; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER, by unanimous consent, reported, from the Committee on Public Lands, House bill No. 316, for the relief of the inhabitants of towns and villages in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

CONSUL AT QUEBEC.

Mr. SCHIENCK, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making the United States consulate at Quebec a salaried officer, and report by bill or otherwise.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask leave of the House to sign my name to the report of the joint committee on reconstruction. I was absent when it was made.

No objection was made.

RICHMOND EXAMINER.

Mr. INGERSOLL asked unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State and the Postmaster General are hereby directed to inform this House why it is that public printing for their respective Departments is given to the Richmond Examiner, a newspaper published at Richmond, Virginia.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

PENSIONS.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred a resolution of the House in regard to an increase of pensions, with leave to report at any time, reported back the same with an accompanying bill increasing the pensions of widows and orphans, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in full. It extends the provisions of the pension laws to provost marshals, deputy provost marshals, and enrolling officers who have been killed or wounded in the discharge of their duty; and for the purpose of determining the amount of pensions to which such persons and their dependents shall be entitled, provost marshals shall be ranked as captains, deputy provost marshals as first lieutenants, and enrolling officers as second lieutenants. The bill also provides for an increase of two dollars per month for each child of deceased soldiers or sailors under sixteen years of age, and where there is more than one child and no widow, the pension to such children shall be increased to the same amount that would be allowed under the foregoing provisions to the widow if living and entitled to a pension; provided that in no case shall more than one pension be allowed to the same person.

Mr. PERHAM. In presenting this report I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to make a brief statement to the House of our legislation in reference to the subject of granting pensions.

Early in the last Congress and repeatedly during the whole Congress propositions were presented to the committee for an increase of pensions, and the committee became satisfied that the tax-payers of this country generally desired that the pensions of the wounded soldiers and of the dependents of such as have been killed in the service should be increased. The committee fully recognized the propriety of that, believing that the increase in the cost of living would warrant to the fullest extent an increase of pension. The question arose in the committee, how shall that increase be made?

The committee found that there was a large class of persons who, in their opinion, were entitled to pensions, but who were excluded by the provisions of the law and the rules for the administration of the law in that regard. They therefore thought it proper to extend the provisions of the law to that class of people. They also found that a large number of persons who were receiving eight dollars per month were suffering under comparatively slight disability, to whom eight dollars a month is a very fair compensation for their disability. They found, also, that a great many other persons entitled to pensions were entirely disabled, who had lost both hands or both eyes or had been shot almost to pieces, who were in such a condition that absolutely required the constant attention of others to help them along through life. We came to the conclusion that the best way to increase pensions was to increase them to these disabled pensioners in proportion to their disabilities.

Previous to the act of July 14, 1862, privates in the Marine corps were entitled to $3 50 and sailors five dollars per month. Widows of the Florida and Indian and Mexican wars, $3 50, and of the war of 1812 four dollars per month. By this act the pensions to these classes of persons engaged in the war then in progress, as well as all the widows, were increased to eight dollars; and extended to minor children and dependent mothers, and sisters of deceased officers, soldiers, and sailors. By the act of July 4, 1864, the provisions of the pension laws were extended to persons, not enlisted, who volunteered to fight in any organized military force.

It was found that in some instances persons who had been enlisted but not mustered into the service were forced into battle at once and were either killed or disabled before they were mustered in. This act allows pensions to such soldiers the same as if they had been mustered in. It also proposes to increase the pensions of those who had lost two eyes or two hands to twenty-five dollars a month, and those who have lost two feet to twenty dollars per month.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question which was put to me last night by a soldier who has been wounded and who would be entitled to a pension. I am glad of this opportunity of asking the gentleman if there is any law which denies to an invalid pensioner his pension when he goes into the civil service of the Government.

Mr. PERHAM. The law which excluded him has been repealed.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE. I am very glad to hear that announcement, because there is a great deal of anxiety about this matter.

Mr. PERHAM. That provision of the old law was repealed by the act of June 6, 1866.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the provisions of the bill which was recommended by the committee of which he is chairman, and which has been passed by the House and is now a law, do not extend a pension of equal amount to all those that he has named, those who have lost two eyes, two feet, two hands, &c.

Mr. PERHAM. I was just about to state what would be an answer to that question, and would have stated it in a few moments longer. During the present Congress, upon an investigation of the subject, the Committee on Invalid Pensions ascertained that there are a very large number of persons who are equally disabled with those who have lost both hands, or both feet, or both eyes; for instance, persons who had lost the use of both feet or both legs, were excluded under the ruling of the Department, and perhaps very properly under the law. It was also found that there were a great many persons who had lost neither their eyes nor feet, who were still suffering under as severe disabilities as any who had suffered that loss. Therefore the committee agreed to extend the provisions of the law in this manner. And the bill recently passed repeals the provisions of the old law, which provided that those who have actually lost their feet or eyes, &c., shall have an increase of pension, and provides in lieu of that that those who have lost their eyes or their feet, or the use of the same, &c., should have an increase of pension. And it also extends the same pension to those whose disability may be equivalent to such loss, leaving it to the Commissioner of Pensions to determine what shall be regarded as the relative disability.

The same act also provides that those who are under such a disability as by the old law would entitle them to receive a pension of twenty dollars per month, shall still receive that pension, notwithstanding they may not have actually lost their feet, or hands, or eyes, provided they have lost the use of their feet or their hands. The act also provides that in all cases where the disability may be equivalent to those named in this class, the same pension shall follow.

The act also provides that in all cases where an individual has lost one hand or one foot, or where the disability, in the judgment of the Commissioner, may be equivalent to that loss, the pension shall be increased to fifteen dollars per month. That increases the pension to fifteen dollars per month of a large portion of the cases of persons who are entitled under the old law to eight dollars per month.

This act also extends the provisions of the pension law to officers who were killed in service after they were commissioned, but who were in such kind of service, so far away from the proper mustering officer, that it was impossible for them to be properly mustered in; giving them a pension according to the rank for which they were actually commissioned. It also extends the provisions of the pension law to soldiers who were absent on sick furlough; placing them on the same footing as those who were in camp or in the field. It also extends the provisions of the pension law to teamsters, wagoners, artificers, hospital stewards, and all other enlisted men, however employed. It also repeals that provision of the law—and now I answer the question of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TROWBRIDGE]—which excludes pensioners who are in the civil service from the right to draw their pensions. It also provides that claims for pensions and pension money shall be exempt in all cases from attachment or seizure. And now the committee are of opinion that in this direction, so far as this particular class of persons are concerned, the pension law has been extended about as far as it is well to extend it at the present Congress.

But there seems to be another class of persons who demand our attention, another call for the discharge of this debt of gratitude to those heroes of the Republic, which, in the opinion of the committee, the people, the taxpayers of the country, will be glad to meet. I allude to that class of widows who have large families of children dependent upon them for support. A young widow, in good health, with no children dependent upon her for support, may be able to get along very well with a pension of eight dollars per month. But for a widow with four or five, or six or eight or more small children dependent upon her for support, a pension of but eight dollars per month seems to be but a very small pension, indeed; a pension which in the opinion of the committee ought to be increased, and therefore the committee have reported this section of the bill, which provides an increase of pension of two dollars per month in addition to the pension already granted to the widow, for each child dependent upon such widow for support. It also provides the same increase of pension to orphan children.

And we have also reported a section, in accordance with the instructions of the House, extending the provisions of the pension law to those who have been in the provost marshal's department the same as though they were in the military service of the Government.

And now I wish to say, in regard to this subject, that, under the present law, before the passage of the last law, our pensions amounted to about sixteen million dollars per annum. We are now paying, I believe, at the rate of about eighteen million dollars per annum, a portion of it being for back pensions; but the legitimate expenses of the Government for pensions is about sixteen million dollars per annum. It is estimated that the bill already passed, and the bill now pending, if it should pass, will increase the amount of pensions about six million dollars per annum, making the total amount about twenty-two million dollars per annum.

There is also a bill pending to pension all the soldiers and widows of the soldiers of the war of 1812. I am not disposed to discuss the merits of that bill at this time. I will only say that if it shall pass it would increase our pensions about thirteen million dollars per annum, according to the best estimate the committee can make. This would increase our pensions to about thirty-five million dollars per annum.

Now, if no other member desires to say anything upon this bill, I will call the previous question.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Maine yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. PERHAM. I will.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. It will be observed that this bill embraces two sections. The second section provides for increasing under certain circumstances the pensions of widows and orphans; and that is, I think, a very just and proper provision. The first section, however, is of a different character, and embraces cases such as have never before been embraced in any pension law. I ask the Clerk to read the first section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the provisions of the pension laws are hereby extended to and made to include provost marshals, deputy provost marshals, and enrolling officers who have been killed or wounded in the discharge of their duties; and for the purpose of determining the amount of pension to which such persons and their dependents shall be entitled, provost marshals shall be ranked as captains, deputy provost marshals as first lieutenants, and enrolling officers as second lieutenants.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. It will be observed, Mr. Speaker, that this section proposes to give pensions to provost marshals, deputy provost marshals, and enrolling officers, and ranks all of them as officers of the Army, the provost marshals as captains and the deputies as first lieutenants and the enrolling officers as second lieutenants, thus securing to them a pension much larger than that to which any private soldier would be entitled.

Now, sir, the truth in regard to this matter is that there is no reason in the world why provost marshals and deputy provost marshals and enrolling officers should be pensioned in preference to the home guards and thousands of others who rendered important service. Why, sir, there is not a locality on all the border where the home guards and private citizens have not shouldered arms at the risk of their lives. But this class of officers embraced in this section were anxious, so far as my knowledge extends, to secure these positions. They received a much larger compensation than private soldiers—a compensation large enough to make the securing of these offices a matter of great competition. These men were in a very different position from the soldiers who volunteered or were drafted into the service. These provost marshals, deputies, and enrolling officers were not willing to go into the field as volunteers; they staid at home and dodged the danger. And they were, in many cases, of most doubtful loyalty. As a general rule—I admit that there were exceptions—I know of no set of men who have less claim to be made pensioners on the bounty of the Government.

There may be—there doubtless are—peculiar cases in which a provost marshal or deputy provost marshal has been wounded or killed under circumstances entitling him or his widow to be pensioned. But let all such peculiar cases come up on their merits; let private bills be introduced to meet any meritorious cases of this description. A sweeping provision like this should not, it appears to me, receive the approval of the House.

In many parts of the country men of this class were engaged in combinations to speculate on the wants of the people. In some sections on the border people could not carry their produce to market without obtaining the consent of a provost marshal or deputy provost marshal. These men formed combinations in many cases to obstruct the free transportation of produce to market. Having through their agents blocked up the channels of commerce, they would speculate on the misfortunes of the farmers. This was done in Kentucky in various instances. Farmers could not carry their produce to Louisville without a permit from the provost marshal or his deputy. With the channels of trade thus blockaded, combinations were formed by these men and their agents for the purpose of speculating on the wants of the community. At one time a man could not go to Louisville to buy ten pounds of coffee for his family without obtaining the consent of the provost marshal of the district. This was the case all over the State of Kentucky. It seems manifest to me that this class of men are entitled to no favor such as is proposed in this bill.

Now, sir, let every case stand upon its own merits. Where there is an honest, faithful officer who has been wounded and is still living he should be pensioned. If such an officer has been killed in the service his widow and children should receive a pension. I know, sir, that this bill as it now stands will include most infamous and disloyal men, who were engaged in speculations and were guilty of spoliation of private property.

Mr. PERHAM. I hope the gentleman will not take up all of my time.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I know this matter has never been fully considered by the House. I want to test the sense of the House in regard to it. I feel it to be my duty to do so. I know that members desire to do justice to officers who are deserving, but not to pension those who are not deserving. To test the question, I move to strike out the first section of the bill.

Mr. PERHAM. I have the floor, and do not yield to the gentleman to make that motion.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Has the gentleman any objection to my moving an amendment? My amendment is to strike out the first section of the bill, leaving the second section to stand as it is.

Mr. PERHAM. I cannot yield for that purpose. In answer to what the gentleman from Kentucky has said on this subject, I wish to say that the bill does not pension all provost marshals and their deputies indiscriminately. There is no such provision as that in this bill. Many had difficult, delicate, and important duties to perform in arresting deserters and in making enrollment in places where it was exceedingly dangerous to do so, in the border States especially. Some have been wounded and some have been killed; and the bill only applies to that class of cases. So far as that was concerned the committee were not agreed, and one of the members was directed to offer a resolution to test the sense of the House, and a resolution was passed by a large majority instructing the committee to report the bill which I have just presented. I hope it will pass.

Mr. STEVENS. As I sent a resolution to this committee some time ago to double these pensions, I desire to say a single word. No doubt the committee did what they thought for the best, but I am not satisfied with one part of it. I think the pension for the lowest grade of total disability, eight dollars, is too low. I do not think in these times any man who comes in under the total disability provision can live with a family at eight dollars per month. Eight dollars was fixed when the pay was eight dollars, and now, when the pay is sixteen dollars, I think the pension should be increased. While I should dislike to embarrass the committee, still I should like to have the sense of the House on a proviso that the lowest pension granted for total disability shall be twelve dollars per month. Let me have a vote of the House on it.

Mr. PERHAM. I cannot yield for that purpose. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BENJAMIN. In reference to the second section of the bill I have nothing to say. The first section, as I understand, proposes to grant pensions to these provost marshals. To that I am opposed. I think, from the manner in which it has been discussed, gentlemen do not understand fully the proposition of the first section. The gentleman from Kentucky has talked about a class of provost marshals not affected by this bill. There was a large number of provost marshals who were detailed from the Army. They are not affected by this bill. If they were wounded or killed they come under the provisions of the general pension law. The other class did not belong to the Army.

Gentlemen know, under the conscription law, as it was termed, a board of enrollment, to consist of a provost marshal, an enrolling officer, and a surgeon, was provided in each congressional district. The duties were defined by the law. By an order of the War Department or the Provost Marshal General's department, the provost marshal of each district was required to appoint a deputy provost marshal for each county of which his district was composed. They were appointed from among the civilians of the county. They were employees of the Government, and were generally paid $100 a month, but in only a few cases did they have anything to do. I had the honor to discharge the duty of provost marshal in the district in which I lived, and was under the necessity of appointing twelve of these deputies. The office was a perfect sinecure. They were paid $100 a month for a year or two, and I venture to say they were not employed more than five days in the month. All the duty they had to discharge was merely to lie around and see that things were going right. Now, there are instances in which some of these officers were killed or wounded in the discharge of their duties, and this bill proposes to pension them. I see no difference between that class of employees and other employees of the Government. Almost everybody employed by the Government in connection with the war ran some risk of his life. There were a great many bridge-builders employed and sent South to repair bridges. Many of them lost their lives; some were killed and others were wounded by the enemy. A great many persons were employed in various capacities, in connection with railroads and steamboats, and in a thousand other ways, at a salary or a per diem. They sought the employment. None of these have been pensioned. Now, sir, these officers that are proposed to be pensioned by this bill are on the same footing as those I have mentioned, and I see not why we should take these out from among the various civil employees of the Government and place them on the pension-roll. If we are going to pension civilians at all, let us include them all. I am satisfied that this class of employees are no more deserving than the various other civilians employed by the Government. I hope, therefore, that the chairman of the committee will permit the sense of the House to be taken on this distinct proposition in reference to provost marshals, and let us know whether they are to be specially favored.

Mr. PERHAM. I think there is a desire to take the sense of the House on the first section. I will therefore yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HARDING] to make that motion.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. In connection with this matter it might be very well to inquire to what extent this granting of pensions should go. There must be some limit to it. Our present pension law goes beyond anything in the history of the world. It seems to have become very popular in this House to extend the provisions of the pension laws further and further. A few days ago this same committee were directed to bring in a general bill to pension all the soldiers of the war of 1812 without regard to the wealth or poverty of those soldiers, or anything else. And now, here is a proposition to pension all the deputy provost marshals and enrolling officers, giving them the grades of lieutenant and second lieutenant; a set of men who were not, as a general rule, governed by patriotic impulses, who staid at home and were tempted to seek those places by the inducement of $100 a month and very little duty to be performed. Apart from some individual cases of peculiar hardship, there is no sort of justice in extending the pension laws to them.

Now, sir, I had a great mind to offer an amendment in another form, to refer this case back to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, with instructions to inquire into the propriety of providing pensions for all the tax-payers in the United States who are worth only a certain amount.

Mr. PERHAM. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield for any such proposition.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I do not move that as an amendment.

Mr. PERHAM. I decline to yield further.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I move to strike out the first section of the bill.

Mr. PERHAM. I yield for that motion, and I now demand the previous question upon striking out the section.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, being upon striking out the first section of the bill.

Mr. LE BLOND demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 34, nays 73, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Benjamin, Boyer, Davis, Dawson, Denning, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Holmes, John H. Hubbard, Humphrey, Le Blond, Loan, McCullough, Nicholson, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Strouse, Taber, Thorntom, Trimble, Warner, and Winfield—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Defrees, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Ketchum, Kuykendall, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, McClurg, Meltzer, Mercer, Moorhead, Morrill, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Shellabarger, Stevens, Stilwell, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—73.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Anderson, Barker, Bergen, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Culver, Darling, Dawes, Delano, Driggs, Eckley, Farnsworth, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hill, Asabel W. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hubburd, Ingersoll, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Kelso, Kerr, Laffin, William Lawrence, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McDermott, McKee, Miller, Morris, Niblack, Neell, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Radford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Rousseau, Seefeldt, Shanklin, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Whaley, Williams, Woodbridge, and Wright—75.

So the motion was disagreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. BEAMAN said: My colleague, Mr. Urson, is detained from the House by sickness.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Maine, and, if possible, to offer an amendment. In the early part of the session I introduced a bill and had it referred to the Committee on Pensions, and I hoped to see favorable action taken upon it. One section of that bill provides that death in the service shall be considered death by the service unless the cause of death is brought about by the party himself; and as it has not been reported by the committee, I ask to offer it now as a section to the bill under consideration. There are in the country thousands of widows and orphans of men who died of fever and lung disease in hospitals and elsewhere who are deprived of pensions because the Pension Office virtually requires proof to be made by the applicant that the person dying was a healthy and sound man when he entered the service, instead of placing the burden of proof to the contrary on the Government. In all cases of enlistment a careful examination by a United States surgeon is required before the man is mustered in, and if, for example, a man dies of lung disease or typhoid or other fever while in the service, certainly such death should be considered as brought about by the service, whether occurring in camp or hospital or even on furlough. The proviso to my bill protected the Government against paying any pension where death was brought about by the act of the party; and certainly in all other cases the heirs of a soldier, sailor, or marine serving his country and dying in such service should be entitled to a pension.

Mr. PERHAM. This whole subject has been fully considered by the committee, and I must object to any amendment. I demand the previous question.

Mr. STEVENS. I have modified my amendment so as to read:

Provided, That the lowest pension for total disability, where eight dollars are now allowed, shall be twelve dollars.

If the gentleman does not choose to yield, then I hope the previous question will not be seconded.

Mr. PERHAM. I cannot yield for that amendment. I do not think that, under the instructions of the committee, I should be entitled to do so.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I hope the previous question will not be seconded.

The question was put upon seconding the demand for the previous question; and there were—yeas 32, nays 29; no quorum voting.

Mr. PERHAM demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STEVENS and PERHAM were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 55, nays 45.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DOUBLING PENSIONS.

The following resolution had also been reported back by the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill to double the pensions caused by the casualties of the war with the so-called confederate States.

Mr. PERHAM. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of this resolution, and that the same be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed a joint resolution and bill of the House of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 166) to pay the State of Vermont the sum expended for the protection of the frontier against the invasion of Canada in 1864, without amendment; and

An act (H. R. No. 127) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th of June, 1867, with amendments, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (S. No. 317) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862;" and

An act (S. No. 336) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Columbia river to Salt Lake City.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President, by Mr. W. G. MOORE, his Secretary, was received by the House; and the House was further informed that the President had approved and signed joint resolutions of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 120) to extend to the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson, of West Virginia, the provisions of the act approved July 4, 1864, entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States;" and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 143) making an appropriation for the repair of Potomac bridge.

CALIFORNIA AND OREGON RAILROAD.

Mr. SCHENCK. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now commenced. The first business in order is the consideration of the bill of the Senate No. 123, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon.

An amendment was moved on yesterday by Mr. JULIAN, to strike out of the second section the words "and contiguous thereto" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "and within twenty miles of the line of said railroad."

The pending question was upon an amendment to the amendment, moved by Mr. BIDWELL, to strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "thirty."

Mr. BIDWELL. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] will withdraw the amendment which he proposed on yesterday, and I will offer one which I think will meet with his views.

Mr. JULIAN. I decline to withdraw my amendment, at least for the present.

Mr. BIDWELL. I wish to state to the gentleman that if he will withdraw his amendment I will move to insert what he proposes after the word "railroad" in the second section of the bill, so that it will read, "to the amount of ten sections on either side of said railroad, and within twenty miles from the line thereof."

Mr. JULIAN. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. BIDWELL] yield me a few minutes' time, so that I may make a statement to the House?

Mr. BIDWELL. Certainly.

Mr. JULIAN. I find that this bill does not consult the States as to the rights given to the companies, nor individuals as to the right of way granted. For the distance of two hundred miles it grants a margin of eighty miles within which to select forty sections per mile, an unprecedented provision in any land-grant bill that Congress has ever passed.

It further provides that coal and iron lands shall be granted, and that all the timber on the gold and silver lands shall also be granted to these companies. It provides no guarantees for the Government as to any right of transportation of troops or munitions of war, according to the invariable practice in like cases. Nor does it require any amount of work to be done in a given time, on failure of which the land shall be forfeited.

Now, if the gentleman from California will allow this bill to go to the Committee on Public Lands we shall be called in two or three days probably, and I say to him that we have no unfriendly disposition toward this bill if we can make it conform to the ordinary legislation on this subject. I hope the gentleman will allow the bill to go to the Committee on Public Lands, and be considered as other land-grant bills. They will give the gentleman a fair hearing, and report soon after having inserted such provisions as are required.

Mr. BIDWELL. A bill of a precisely similar character was acted upon more than three months ago and ordered to be reported favorably from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad. Now the only thing I fear, if this bill is referred to the Committee on Public Lands, is that the delay in this House, and then the delay it will be sure to meet in the Senate, will defeat the bill.

Now, in reference to the Pacific Railroad Committee, I beg leave to say that on page 131 of the Rules I find the following:

"There shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress a Committee on the Pacific Railroad, to consist of nine members; and it shall be the duty of the said committee to take into consideration all such petitions and matters and things relative to railroads and telegraph lines between the Mississippi valley and the Pacific coast as shall be presented, or shall come in question and be referred to them by the House, and to report their opinion, together with such propositions relative thereto, as to them shall seem expedient."

This bill therefore clearly comes within the provision of that rule, and belongs to the jurisdiction of the Pacific Railroad Committee. Now, if I believed there had been any want of earnest consideration on the part of that committee, I certainly would be willing to have it go to the Committee on Public Lands. If the Pacific Railroad Committee have not fairly considered this bill, have not fairly weighed the provisions which are to guard the rights both of the Government and of individuals, then I am wholly at a loss to know what can be done in order to throw still greater safeguards around a measure of this kind. Besides, sir, this is a Senate bill. It was most thoroughly considered by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate. All its provisions were thoroughly weighed, some of the members of the committee being, I believe, adverse to making the grant. The bill now comes here, not only with the sanction of the Senate, but with the unanimous approval of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad of this House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, without consuming further time upon this point, I will move the amendment which I first proposed, with the understanding that the gentleman from Indiana will accept it. The amendment is to insert after the word "railroad" at the end of the eighth line of the second section the words "within twenty miles from the line thereof."

Mr. KASSON. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that amendment will not effect the purpose which I think he intends.

Mr. BIDWELL. I think there can be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I will state to the gentleman the objection which I think does exist, as the gentleman will find by examination. The bill in its present form provides for granting "every alternate section of public land designated by odd numbers, to the amount of ten sections per mile on each side of said railroad, and contiguous thereto." The limit is that these lands shall be contiguous to the railroad. Then follows a provision that "when any of said sections or parts of sections shall be found to have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, preëempted, or otherwise disposed of, other lands, designated as aforesaid, shall be selected by said companies in lieu thereof, within twenty miles of said road."

It seems to me, therefore, that the amendment proposed enlarges, rather than limits, the present provisions of the bill, for by its present terms it requires the land to be contiguous to the road, while the amendment would appear to allow the company twenty miles' distance in which to select the lands.

Mr. BIDWELL. I can entirely obviate that difficulty, and will do so by moving to strike out the words "and contiguous thereto," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "within twenty miles from the line thereof." I am sure there can be no objection to that. Will the gentleman from Indiana accept this?

Mr. JULIAN. I accept it as a modification of my amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDWELL. I move to amend by striking out in the thirteenth and fourteenth lines of the second section the words "within twenty miles of said road." Those words are now surplusage.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman will permit me to say that they are not surplusage, because the bill provides for other lands to be selected in lieu of the ten sections within twenty miles.

Mr. BIDWELL. There are no other lands within that limit. That is the reason why this language is now surplusage, and why I desire it stricken out. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. JULIAN. This House does not know whether there are any other lands or not. If the language is surplusage it can do no harm. I certainly object to striking out those words.

Mr. BIDWELL. I beg to say to the gentleman from Indiana, with all due respect, that this language will do harm to the bill if it be allowed to remain, and I will state the reason. If any of these lands are settled upon by homestead or preëmption settlers, or have been granted or reserved by the Government, or if they are mineral lands, we ask, in all good faith, that the company may take other lands in lieu of them. As there are no other lands within that limit, we desire to have that language stricken out.

Mr. KASSON. I suppose the gentleman is aware that if that language prescribing a limit be stricken out this company will be left at liberty, in the selection of their lands, to go over the entire States of California and Oregon.

Mr. BIDWELL. By no means. I am willing that a limit shall be fixed. In the grant to the Northern Pacific railroad made in 1864, it is provided that—

"Whenever prior to said time any of said sections or parts of sections shall have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, or preëempted or otherwise disposed of, other lands shall be selected by said company in lieu thereof, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in alternate sections and designated by odd numbers, not more than ten miles beyond the limits of said alternate sections."

Now we ask for that and nothing more. We want the amendment to cover that precise amount and nothing more. I appeal to this House, is it any more than just to ask for a provision in this law such as was in the law granting lands to the Northern Pacific railroad, which has not enabled them to begin, much less complete, the construction of that road? I insist on the amendment to strike out "within twenty miles of said road." To let the words remain would be unjust to the company, and would defeat the object of this bill.

Mr. KASSON. I shall speak on this amendment as it is.

Mr. BIDWELL. This is our last morning hour, and I hope the gentleman will not take up all of the time.

Mr. KASSON. The second section is the one which makes the grant to this railroad company of every alternate section of public land designated by odd numbers, to the amount of ten sections per mile on each side of said railroad, and contiguous thereto; and when any of said sections or parts of sections shall be found to have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, preempted, or otherwise disposed of, other lands, designated as aforesaid, shall be selected by said companies in lieu thereof, within twenty miles of said road, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. It grants ten square miles of land for each mile of railroad. They are limited to twenty miles on each side of the road, which makes forty miles as the range within which they may go. They have this range all over the public lands. If this clause be struck out, I repeat, then there will be no limit in that entire section to prevent them from going all over the State.

Subsequently the bill provides that for two hundred miles of said road, most mountainous and difficult of construction, the lands to be granted shall be double the amount per mile hereinbefore provided, designated as hereinbefore provided, to be selected as the Secretary of the Interior may direct. Thus there is no limit at all for those two hundred miles as to where those lands shall be selected. It is an entire float.

As the gentleman limits me, I merely mention this point to show what precedent it establishes. It should be referred to a committee to inquire into it.

Mr. BIDWELL. We have inquired into it, we have inquired around it, up and down, crosswise, and in every other direction. If you do not strike out these words the road cannot be built. It is provided where the road is rugged, rough, mountainous, for two hundred miles, the lands granted shall be doubled. I only want them selected as they were authorized in the bill for the Northern Pacific railroad. I do not desire to have any more included in this bill. When you give us every alternate section of land within certain limits designated by odd numbers, if they are all taken up by homestead claims, or are otherwise disposed of, we desire leave to select other sections designated by odd numbers. If we are to be told we may go to places where there are no public lands, it amounts to saying that we will pay a man from the money in our hands when there is no money in our hands. Why, sir, the line of this road has been settled for sixteen years, and every available acre of good land has been occupied. You wish to restrict us within limits where there are no public lands.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I came into the House just as the bill was received yesterday in the morning hour, and I have had time only to look over one or two sections. I should like to have some explanation in regard to the first section. It is a departure from the principle heretofore observed in granting these lands to a company directly. Is there anything to qualify that?

Mr. PRICE. This House two years ago granted lands to a company directly.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I know at the last Congress we voted away every acre of the public land we could get at, and I hope we will not indorse any departure then made from the previously established principle in reference to these railroad grants. If we make any grant of land it should be to the States and not to the companies, and my friend will not insist on passing a grant of one hundred thousand acres to this company without full consideration.

Mr. BIDWELL. I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois that this is the last day the committee have.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not know that that makes any difference. I think the House ought to have sufficient time to consider all of these matters. The bill can go over and be upon the Calendar. I do not see the necessity of pressing the measure. It is a mere donation. We are the parties who are to make the gift, and let us take time to consider whether it is proper or not.

Mr. BIDWELL. I am one of the parties to this gift. I was in that country before it belonged to the United States and helped to acquire it. It is a barren and rugged country. The State of California asks for this. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution of the State Legislature of California of 1863, and I think I could present resolutions from every Legislature for the last six, eight, or ten years, if I had the Statutes of the State here.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Whereas there having been a company organized in this State and another in Oregon, both having for their object the construction of a railroad from Marysville, California, to Portland, Oregon, and said companies having jointly completed a survey which demonstrated the practicability of such a line of railroad, and believing that such a road, linking itself with the great Pacific railway, is necessary for the more rapid development of the resources of this coast, and as a means for the prompt defense of our interior by the rapid concentration of troops and military supplies in case of foreign war or domestic insurrection: Therefore,

"Be it resolved by the Senate of California, (the Assembly concurring,) That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives requested, to use their influence to procure the early passage of a law granting national assistance, in right of way, grant of land, and bonds to the companies about to undertake the construction of said California and Oregon railroad, in the same manner as aid has heretofore been extended to the Central Pacific Railroad Company."

Mr. BIDWELL. I ask the Clerk to read also the resolution of the Legislature of Oregon.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved by the House, (the Senate concurring,) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use their influence to obtain from the United States grants of land, floating land-warrants, or direct pecuniary aid equal to such grants made to any other State, to aid in the construction of a railroad from the north line of the State of California, through the Willamette valley, to some point on the Columbia river; and also to obtain the same aid, in proportion to distance, as is granted to the overland railroad, for the purpose of constructing a branch of said road from a point at or near Salt Lake City, through Idaho, to and down the Columbia river."

Mr. STEVENS. If I understand aright the motion of the gentleman from California, it is to strike out the restraining clause which was inserted by the committee, to confine the company to lands within twenty miles on each side of the road. Now, sir, that is the principle which we have adopted, and which the committee have laid down.

Mr. BIDWELL. Let the gentleman, then, move an amendment. He is mistaken as to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir; the bill allows them to go beyond the twenty miles.

Mr. BIDWELL. I am willing that the bill shall be modified so as to limit it just as the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was limited.

Mr. STEVENS. I understand this grant to be unlimited. It is not proposed that they shall be restricted to twenty miles. That is the usual provision. Does the gentleman propose to enlarge it?

Mr. BIDWELL. No, sir. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that these sections are to be selected within twenty miles of the road. Now, sir, the line of this road has been settled for sixteen years. Every valuable section has been taken up. We only ask to be permitted to take up the other lands within twenty miles of the road.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman, then, proposes to get these lands beyond the usual limits.

Mr. BIDWELL. Ten miles beyond; they can only go that distance.

Mr. STEVENS. Then the limit is fixed beyond twenty miles. The motion is to strike that out. I cannot vote for that motion, for this reason: there may be other railroads desiring lands in that portion of the country, and if you allow one road to absorb all the land, you will cut off all others. Now, sir, I do not object, as some of my friends do, to giving land to railroad companies. We have heretofore given it to companies instead of States. We gave it to Illinois and to other States, and I cannot see why Congress cannot give it directly to the company as well as to the State. We can judge of the matter as well as the State Legislatures can. They have Representatives here. But, sir, the public lands are given now to whoever chooses to take them; we do not propose to sell a dollar's worth of public land; if the people choose to settle on the public lands we do not charge them a cent. I object decidedly to the taking off of this restriction upon the railroad company so as to enable them to go, in the selection of their lands, beyond the usual limit.

Mr. BIDWELL. I will modify my amendment so as to make it conform to the provision made in the North Pacific railroad, which I read a few moments ago. I move to strike out the word "twenty," in line thirteen, and insert "thirty," so as to give the company ten miles more.

The question was put; and there were—ayes 27, noes 85; no quorum voting.

Mr. BIDWELL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BIDWELL and MARSHALL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes nineteen, noes not counted.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know if I can make a motion similar to the motion made yesterday, in reference to two bills of a similar character, namely, to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands. It seems to me that there should not be two policies in reference to this question. This bill does not differ in any respect—except that it is a larger bill and more sweeping in its character—from those which were referred yesterday to the Committee on Public Lands. It seems to me about time that Congress should cease this indiscriminate distribution of the public lands; and if it be not inappropriate, I would also add that it is about time that Congress ceased this reckless expenditure of the public money.

Mr. BIDWELL. I must make a point of order on the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Well, then, I submit my motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from California yields for that purpose the motion can be entertained.

Mr. BIDWELL. I do not yield for that purpose.

I desire to make one further remark in reference to this measure. If it be the determination of Congress to refuse to encourage the building of railroads upon the Pacific coast, after it has encouraged the building of them in all the western States, and to make an unjust discrimination against us, then I desire to know it. I believe that if the members of the House understood the merits of this bill there would be no trouble; but for some strange reason it is impossible to have them understand it. The bill has been pending for more than four months, and if there is anything wrong in it I do not wish them to vote for it.

The land which it grants is of no earthly value to the United States without such a road as this; and if it should ever have any value, it will be because of the building of this road. If gentlemen wish to stop the development of the resources of that country, I wish to know it. There never has been a railroad bill introduced into this or any other Congress with greater safeguards than are thrown around this bill. There never has been a grant of lands made so small in proportion to the magnitude of the work to be accomplished. It is not simply to build a railroad over this wild, rugged country, where mountains more than six thousand feet high are to be scaled—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. BIDWELL. To ask a question, but not to make a speech.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would ask the gentleman what is the number of acres of land granted by this bill.

Mr. BIDWELL. About ten or eleven million acres of lands.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is that all?

Mr. JULIAN. I would ask the gentleman from California if this bill does not grant forty sections per mile for two hundred miles of the route, with liberty to find them in a margin of eighty miles wide, and with the privilege of taking all the coal, iron, and timber?

Mr. BIDWELL. There is no coal, or timber of any consequence on a great part of these lands. The gentleman must be opposed to this measure or he would not attack that portion of the road which has to go over the Trinity mountains, the Scott mountains, and the Siskiyou mountains, the first range being four thousand feet, the second range being four thousand feet, and the third range being over six thousand feet high.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. BIDWELL] yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. BIDWELL. I will yield for two minutes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I merely want to say that this road is of great interest to the people of California and Oregon, the inhabitants of the Pacific coast especially. We have not asked Congress to grant large sums of money to build this road. Not long since we voted five or six million dollars to make a canal around Niagara falls, and we have voted other sums to make improvements on this side of the continent. We ask for no money, only for a little of the public lands. The public lands on this side of the continent are all exhausted; and members do not ask for land, but they ask for the cash of the Government, and we vote to give it to them. Now, we ask for a small amount of public land, which is all important to us, and members here appear to be perfectly horrified at the mere idea of granting land, not an amount sufficient to build the road, but merely to give it a start. I will not occupy the time further, as the gentleman from California desires action.

Mr. BIDWELL. I now call the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the previous question will not be seconded. I would like to say one word in reply to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to offer an amendment to this bill.

Mr. JULIAN. I move to refer this bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The motion to refer is not now in order, pending the call for the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from California withdraw that call for a few moments if I will renew it?

Mr. BIDWELL. I must insist upon my call for the previous question.

The question was taken upon seconding the demand for the previous question; and upon a division there were—ayes thirty, noes sixty-two.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I now move to refer this bill to the Committee on Public Lands; and upon that motion I call for the previous question.

Mr. BIDWELL. If that motion is carried I shall move to abolish the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, for I do not see that there will be any use for it.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman from California the same amount of time he allowed me yesterday—three minutes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let him have five minutes. Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Well, I will yield to him for five minutes.

Mr. BIDWELL. I will read the rule I read a short time since in relation to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad; and I do hope gentlemen will listen to it. If this bill has not yet been fairly considered in that committee, why not move to recommit it to that committee?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from California desires an answer to that question I will give it. It is proper that this House should have some fixed policy in reference to the public lands and the manner of donating them. All the other of these land-grant bills have been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and there is no propriety in making a distinction between this bill and those which have preceded it. That is the reason why I make the motion to refer this bill to the Committee on Public Lands, so that the committee may examine all these bills at once. But the gentleman says this reference will kill the bill. On the contrary, I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. JULIAN] that he will probably have an opportunity of reporting all these bills within a few days; and therefore there is additional propriety in making this reference.

Mr. BIDWELL. I ask the Clerk to read the rule in regard to the appointment and the duties of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

The Clerk read as follows:

"There shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress a Committee on the Pacific Railroad, to consist of nine members. It shall be the duty of the said committee to take into consideration all such petitions and matters and things relative to railroad or telegraph lines between the Mississippi valley and the Pacific coast as shall be presented or shall come in question, and be referred to them by the House, and to report their opinion thereon, together with such propositions relative thereto as to them shall seem expedient."

Mr. JULIAN. I now ask the Clerk to read the rule relative to the jurisdiction and duties of the Committee on Public Lands.

The Clerk read as follows:

"There shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress a Committee on the Public Lands, to consist of nine members. It shall be the duty of the Committee on the Public Lands to take into consideration all such petitions and matters or things respecting the lands of the United States as shall be presented, or shall or may come in question, and be referred to them by the House; and to report their opinion thereon, together with such propositions for relief therein as to them shall seem expedient."

Mr. BIDWELL. That rule does not say anything about railroads between the Mississippi valley and the Pacific coast, while the other rule does. And this bill relates to a railroad between the Mississippi valley and the Pacific coast.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I only desire to say that it is evident that both these committees have jurisdiction of this subject. The Committee on Public Lands has just as much jurisdiction of the subject as the Committee on the Pacific Railroad. For the reasons stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] I am in favor of referring the bill to the Committee on Public Lands, because it is desirable that we should have some uniform policy on this subject, and a similar bill has already been referred to that committee.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad?

The SPEAKER. It is not at the present time.

Mr. BANKS. Is it not in order to move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The SPEAKER. It is not, while the call for the previous question is pending.

Mr. BANKS. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw that call.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I cannot consent to do that.

Mr. BANKS. Will the gentleman yield to me that I may say a word on this subject?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. BANKS. Undoubtedly both committees, under the rules, have jurisdiction of this question. But the bill has already been referred to one committee, altogether appropriate—the Committee on the Pacific Railroad. The railroad is the general subject; the grant of lands is an incident. That committee may have misunderstood heretofore the temper of the House on this question and the general course of legislation upon this subject; but from the discussion which has taken place the committee has had full opportunity to ascertain what the House desires. Hence, if the bill is to be again referred, it ought in justice to the committee, and in accordance with the rules of the House, to be recommitted to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. In reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] I would say that I do not know whether the Committee on the Pacific Railroad will have an opportunity to report again this session. I think that the best course for the friends of the bill is to allow it to go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BANKS. The friends of the bill desire that it shall not be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, while the opponents of the bill wish it to have that reference.

Mr. PRICE. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I believe I must insist on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BIDWELL. I trust the gentleman will yield to me.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman from California, because he has charge of the bill.

Mr. BIDWELL. Mr. Speaker, my reason for objecting to a reference of this bill to the Committee on Public Lands is because it appears to me that the Committee on the Pacific Railroad is the appropriate committee. Being a member of the latter committee, I feel that to take the subject out of our hands now and refer it to another committee would be a reflection upon myself and all the other members of that committee. It is a pleasure to a man to give of his own free choice that which he can afford to give, but no man likes to have taken from him by force that which rightfully belongs to him.

If it be in order, Mr. Speaker, I would move to refer this bill to a joint committee consisting of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad and the Committee on Public Lands. I am willing that the two committees shall consider the subject jointly. I am ready to compromise in this way.

The SPEAKER. That would be an unusual motion.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to say to the gentleman from California that his supposition as to an intended reflection upon the Committee on the Pacific Railroad is entirely gratuitous. In submitting my motion, I desired to make no reflection upon the committee. I made the motion in strict accordance with what I deem to be the settled judgment and policy of the House. I renew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BIDWELL. Why not recommit the bill to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, with instructions?

Mr. SPALDING. I object to debate, pending the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was not seconded, there being—ayes 24, noes 59.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend the motion of my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] so as to provide that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad; and on that motion I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment of Mr. STEVENS was agreed to.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, as amended by the adoption of the motion of Mr. STEVENS, was agreed to.

So the bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NORTHERN KANSAS RAILROAD.

Mr. LOAN, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, reported back Senate bill No. 145, for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas railroad and telegraph, with the following substitute:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute the following:

That for the purpose of aiding the Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company, the same being a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Kansas, to construct and operate a railroad from Elwood, in Kansas, westwardly, via Maryville, in the same State, so as to effect a junction with the Union Pacific railroad, or any branch thereof not further west than the one hundredth meridian of west longitude, there is hereby granted to the State of Kansas for the use and benefit of said railroad company every alternate section of land, designated by odd numbers, to the extent of ten sections per mile on each side of said road; but in case it shall appear that the United States have, when the line of said road is definitely located, sold any section, or any part thereof, granted as aforesaid, or that the right of preemption or homestead settlement has attached to the same, or that the same has been reserved by the United States for any purpose whatever, then it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be selected for the purposes aforesaid, from the public lands of the United States nearest to the sections above specified, so much land as shall be equal to the amount of such lands as the United States have sold, reserved, or otherwise appropriated, or to which the right of homestead settlement or preemption has attached as aforesaid, which lands, thus indicated by direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be reserved and held for the State of Kansas for the use of said company by the said Secretary for the purpose of the construction and operation of said railroad, as provided by this act: Provided, That any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States by any act of Congress, or in any other manner by competent authority, for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement or other purpose whatever, be, and the same are hereby, reserved and excepted from the operation of this act, except so far as it may be found necessary to locate the route of said road through such reserved lands, in which case the right of way two hundred feet in width is hereby granted, subject to the approval of the President of the United States: And provided further, That said lands hereby granted shall not be selected beyond twenty miles from the line of said road, nor from the even-numbered sections reserved to the United States.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sections and parts of sections of land which by the aforesaid grant shall remain in the United States within ten miles on each side of said road, shall not be sold for less than double the minimum price of public lands when sold, nor shall any of said lands become subject to sale at private entry until the same shall have been first offered at public sale to the highest bidder at or above the minimum price aforesaid: Provided, That actual, bona fide settlers under the preemption laws of the United States may, after due proof of settlement, improvement, and occupation, as now provided by law, purchase the same at the price fixed for said lands at the date of such settlement, improvement, and occupation: And provided also, That settlers under the provisions of the homestead act, shall be entitled within the said limits of ten miles to patents for an amount not exceeding eighty acres each, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the grant of lands hereby made is upon condition that said company after the construction of its road shall keep it in repair and use, and shall at all times be in readiness to transport troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon its road for the Government when required to do so by any Department thereof, the Government at all times having the preference in the use of the road for all the purposes aforesaid at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not exceeding that paid by private individuals or the average paid for like services on other roads. And the lands hereby granted, held, and reserved as aforesaid, shall inure to the benefit of said company, as follows: when the Governor of the State of Kansas shall certify that any section of ten consecutive miles of said road is completed in a good, substantial, and workmanlike manner as a first-class railroad, then the said Secretary of the Interior shall issue to the said company patents for one hundred sections of the land hereinbefore granted; and when certificates of the Governor, aforesaid, shall be presented to said Secretary, of the completion, as aforesaid, of each successive section of ten consecutive miles of said road, the said Secretary shall in like manner issue to said company patents for one hundred sections of said land for each of said sections of road until said road shall be completed: Provided, That if said railroad company or its assigns shall fail to complete at least one section of said road each year from the date of its acceptance of the grant provided for in this act, then its right to the lands for said section so failing of completion shall revert to the Government of the United States: Provided further, That if said road is not completed within ten years from the date of the acceptance of the grant hereinbefore made, the lands remaining unpatented shall revert to the United States: And provided further, That the said lands shall not in any manner be disposed of or encumbered by said company or its assigns, except as the same are patented under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of enabling said Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company to effect a connection with the Union Pacific railroad or any branch thereof, at a point not further west than the one hundredth meridian of west longitude, the said company is hereby authorized to extend its line from Elwood, in Kansas, to some point to be selected by it within the limitation above prescribed, upon the same terms and conditions, and with the like aid and privileges, that are granted to the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company, by sections eighteen, nineteen, and twenty of an act in relation to the construction of a railroad and telegraph line to the Pacific ocean, approved July 2, 1864: Provided, That no lands in this section granted shall be taken from any grants or reservations heretofore made by the United States.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That as soon as the said company shall file with the Secretary of the Interior maps of its line, designating the route thereof, it shall be the duty of the said Secretary to withdraw from the market the lands granted by this act, in such manner as may be best calculated to effect the purposes of this act and subserve the public interest.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the United States mail shall be transported on said road and its extension, under the direction of the Post Office Department, at such price as Congress may by law provide: Provided, That until such price is fixed by law the Postmaster General shall have power to fix the compensation.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to said Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the construction of a railroad as proposed; and the right is hereby given to said corporation to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road material for the construction thereof. Said way is granted to said railroad to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said road where it may pass through the public domain; also all necessary ground for station buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water stations.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the acceptance of the terms, conditions, and impositions of this act by the said Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company shall be signified in writing, under the corporate seal of the said company, duly executed pursuant to the direction of its board of directors first had and obtained, which acceptance shall be made within one year after the passage of this act and not afterward, and shall be deposited with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LOAN stated that he was directed by the committee to move the following amendments to the substitute:

Page 10, strike out section four.
Page 11, section six, line two, strike out the words "and its extension."
Page 12, section eight, line seven, strike out the words "one year," and insert in lieu thereof "six months."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LOAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill can easily be understood. It will require but a few moments to explain it so the House will be able to comprehend the object intended. It is proposed by this bill to effect a junction with the Union Pacific railroad by a road commencing at Elwood, in Kansas, running westwardly via Maryville, in the same State.

Mr. SPALDING. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved that the House proceed to business upon the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

DIRECT TAXES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House, information as to the collecting of direct taxes in the States whose inhabitants participated in the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF GOLD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury in reply to a resolution of the House in regard to gold sold since February 1, 1866, by whom sold, &c.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I offer the following resolution, and demand the previous question:

Resolved, That the communication of the Secretary of the Treasury, just announced to the House, be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, with instructions to inquire fully into all the facts and statements therein contained; and that the committee also inquire whether any gold has been purchased for the Treasury since the 1st day of January, 1865, the amount of such purchase, by whom and of whom made, the amount of premium paid, the compensation allowed the person acting for the Government; also that the committee report the dates and amounts of the several sales of gold made since the 1st day of January, 1866, the names of the purchasers, the amounts purchased by each, the time of purchase, and all the circumstances attending such purchases and amount paid the agent of the Treasury; that the committee have power to send for persons and papers, and shall report the results of the inquiry hereby directed to the House with such recommendations as may be deemed proper for the interests of the Government.

Mr. LE BLOND. I do not know what there is in this resolution. It implies certain things have taken place of which the House is not advised. I do not see why we should be called on to give power to this committee to act in this manner unless there be good reason for it. If the gentleman can give us any reason for pursuing the course the resolution indicates I shall vote for it; but blindly in this House reflecting on certain officials I shall not vote.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not think there is any reflection in it. For some time past there have been statements made in the newspapers in relation to transactions in gold and bonds by the Treasury Department or its agents. If what has been alleged in relation to these transactions is true the country ought to know it. If the allegations are not true, as I understand the Secretary of the Treasury to insist, it is due to him that we should know it, and for that purpose we should have a report of a committee of this House charged specially with this subject, so that we may understand whether the charges have any foundation or not.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. What charges does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If I should undertake to specify them I would have to state the contents of many articles in the New York papers, and I could not do it perhaps in an hour.

Mr. LE BLOND. Does the report of the Secretary of the Treasury furnish any light on the subject?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have not read the report.

Mr. LE BLOND. I ask to have the report read.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 19, 1866.

DEAR SIR: In answer to the following resolution of the House of Representatives, adopted on the 4th of June, instant, namely:

"On motion of Mr. JAMES F. WILSON,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to this House how much gold belonging to the Government of the United States has been sold since the 1st day of January, 1866, the date and amount, by whom sold, the compensation allowed for such sale, and the premium received; also, whether any gold has been bought for the Treasury since that date, and if so, the amounts and dates of such purchases; amount of premium paid, and who acted as agent in making such purchases; also, whether any bonds of the United States have been bought or sold for the Treasury since that date, the dates and amounts of such purchase, or sales, the amounts paid or received for the same, and the character and denomination of said bonds."

I herewith submit a statement of gold sold by the Treasury Department since the 1st day of January last, the date and amount of such sales, the compensation or commission allowed the agent for selling, and the premium received.

These sales, with the exception of $145,000 sold by the Treasurer at New Orleans, were made through Mr. Van Dyck, the Assistant Treasurer in New York.

It is understood that since the 1st of January Mr. P. M. Myer has been the sole agent for selling gold in that city.

No purchase of coin has been made since the 1st of January last.

I also submit a schedule of bonds purchased since the 1st of January last, the dates and amounts of such purchases, the prices paid for them, and the character and denomination thereof.

These bonds were purchased because this class of bonds were being sold in the market at prices much below their value, and because their depreciation was affecting injuriously the bonds which it was desirable for the Government to negotiate, as well as the national credit.

These bonds, which have been canceled, may be regarded as a purchase on account of the sinking fund or as a redemption of so much of the public debt.

I also submit a schedule of the bonds sold since the 1st of January last to the 4th instant, the date and amount of such sales, the sums received for the same, and the character and denomination of the bonds.

A part of these bonds were sold for cash and a part for compound and seven and three tenths notes. The sales and exchanges were made through Messrs. Jay Cooke & Co., the Treasurer of the United States, and the Assistant Treasurer in New York on the most favorable terms to the Government.

It may be proper also to state that in addition to the bonds named in the schedule, $7,947,700 were exchanged through Messrs. Jay Cooke & Co. for seven and three tenths notes and a small amount of certificates of indebtedness, previous to the 1st of January; the notes and certificates being received by the Department at the time the bonds were delivered; but for lack of time to make the necessary calculation of the interest and the proper entries upon the books, the account of the agents was not settled and the amount of bonds delivered and notes received in exchange was not entered upon the public debt statement until February, and did not appear upon the published statement until the first of March.

It is also proper to remark that $3,747,000 in fifty-two bonds—$3,717,000 of which were issued under the act of March 3, 1864—and which by the schedule appear to have been sold in January and February, were not entered as a part of the public debt until March, and did not appear upon the public statement until April 1. The explanation of which is, that the sales of the bonds were included by the agents in a continuous account, which was not settled and closed until March; the last sale having been made on the 20th of that month; the agents in all instances giving proper certificates of deposit to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, as the bonds were from time to time delivered to them.

I am, sir, very respectfully, yours,

H. McCULLOCH,

Secretary of the Treasury.

HON. SCHUYLER COLFAX,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to yield.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I cannot myself object to any investigation whatever which proposes to hold to a strict accountability public officers. If they have done wrong they must be condemned; if they have done right they will be commended. I believe from what information I have that the Secretary of the Treasury will not suffer from this investigation; but whether he will suffer or not is not material. All such investigations should be made if there be a doubt in regard to the propriety of the conduct of the public officers, and I hope the gentleman from Iowa will extend this investigation, not only to the Treasury Department, but to other Departments of the Government, so that the parties who have been foraging through the South, having permits to take and to sell cotton, may also be brought to public gaze and their conduct also exposed.

I would also like the gentleman's resolution to reach so that we may know every one of the public defaulters during the last four years. I think it is just that the people should know who these people are who have robbed the public Treasury from time to time.

I am glad to see a disposition in this House to ferret out that which is wrong and expose it. I hope, therefore, there will be no objection to the investigation proposed by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I certainly am prepared at any time to join the gentleman from Pennsylvania in instituting investigations into the conduct of any officer, no matter who he may be, against whom anything is alleged. I am not, in this resolution, alleging anything against the Secretary of the Treasury; and the reference of this subject to the Committee on Banking and Currency is a proper one. The subject to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers would require a special committee, because the field is too wide for a regular or standing committee of this House to attend to.

Mr. LE BLOND. I simply wish to add one word. I do not desire to screen any public officer. I believe in a full and complete examination of everything that belongs to the public Departments. But the resolution that has been offered is based upon newspaper accounts. If this House is going to raise a committee upon every charge that is made against public officers where there is some plausible reason for the truth of the statement the time of every member of the House will be taken up in investigating committees.

These charges are numerous enough. The public press of my State has made a charge even against me that on last Monday week when the vote was taken on the question in regard to the confinement of Jefferson Davis I dodged it. The truth was, I was detained in New York on account of the sickness of my wife. If I had been here I should have voted with my Democratic friends.

Now, I suppose it would be proper to raise an investigating committee in many cases, but I do not believe in raising such committees in all cases where newspaper editors see fit to make these charges. That is the only ground upon which I raise an objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This resolution does not provide for a select committee. It refers this subject to an appropriate standing committee of this House. I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] is under some obligation to me for affording him an opportunity to explain his absence on the occasion to which he refers. Probably his speech was intended more for the purpose of making that explanation than anything else. I now hope the resolution will be adopted.

The question being taken on the resolution, it was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the communication be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

CONDUCT OF THE WAR.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the following concurrent resolution of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed for the use of the members of the Thirty-Ninth Congress of the reports of Major Generals W. T. Sherman, George H. Thomas, John Pope, J. G. Foster, A. Pleasonton, and E. A. Hitchcock, made to the joint committee on the conduct of the war, together with such reports as may be received, by the commencement of the next session of Congress, the same number and in the same style as were printed of the reports heretofore made by the said committee.

Mr. JULIAN. I move that the House concur in the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PARIS EXPOSITION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was House joint resolution No 52, to provide for the expenses attending the exhibition of the products of industry of the United States at the Exposition at Paris in 1867, returned from the Senate with an amendment thereto in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the House non-concur in the amendment of the Senate and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I would ask if the amendment of the Senate makes an appropriation. If so, the bill must be considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BANKS. I understand the difference between the two bills to be that the appropriation of the House was in currency and that of the Senate in coin.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That is a very substantial difference with gold at 150.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the Senate's amendment does contain an appropriation.

Mr. BANKS. The question of appropriation does not arise at this stage. I move a non-concurrence.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it contains an appropriation, and must therefore be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Otherwise such a bill would never go to the Committee of the Whole, and the rule would be evaded.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it consider the Senate amendment and non-concur therein.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to that.

Mr. BANKS. I only wish that the House non-concur, believing that an arrangement can be made between the two Houses which will be satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order that this must go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the rules be suspended for that purpose.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules for the purpose of going into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, there were—ayes 53, noes 40.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Messrs. BANKS, and WASHBURN of Illinois.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 35.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 75, nays 39, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Boutwell, Bromwell, Buckland, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Garfield, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, D. mas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Longyear, Lynch, Marshall, Marston, McClurg, McRuer, Mercer, Moorhead, Morrill, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Shellabarger, Taber, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—75.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Baker, Benjamin, Bingham, Blaine, Broomall, Cook, Denning, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goddard, Grider, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Humphrey, Kerr, Loan, Niblack, Paine, Pike, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Sawyer, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stevens, Strouse, Thornton, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, and James F. Wilson—39.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Bergen, Blow, Boyer, Brandegee, Bundy, Chanler, Rendar W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Darling, DeForest, Delano, Driggs, Eckley, Farnsworth, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hart, Hill, Hotchkiss, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hubbard, Johnson, Jones, Kelley, Kelso, Laffin, William Lawrence, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Miller, Morris, Nicholson, Noell, Patterson, Perham, Phelps, Plants, Radford, Raymond, Rousseau, Scofield, Shanklin, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stillwell, Taylor, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Williams, and Wright—68.

So the rules were suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.)

WINNEBAGO RESERVATION—NEBRASKA.

The first business on the Calendar was Senate bill No. 121, to provide for the enlargement of the Winnebago reservation, in the Territory of Nebraska, and for other purposes.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask that the bill may be read.

Mr. BANKS. I move that this bill be laid aside, so as to take up the joint resolution in regard to the Paris Exposition.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I think I have a right to call for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the question must be taken at once upon the motion that this bill be laid aside.

Mr. BANKS. I do not desire to consume any time upon this subject, and therefore I shall move that the House non-concur in the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution relative to the Paris Exposition. It need not take much time to get through with it, unless the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] insists upon having all these bills read.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I am opposed to this resolution ab initio, and I desire to have it defeated by every honorable means. It has come back from the Senate with an appropriation of $25,000 in gold added to the enormous appropriation which was made by the House. And now the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] wants to subordinate all other legislation to this Johnny Crapaud expedition.

Mr. BANKS. I beg permission to say simply that I am opposed to the amendment of the Senate, and shall move that the House non-concur in it. Although the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] has a right to oppose the joint resolution, it is questionable whether he has a right to consume so much of the time of the House in doing so.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. This is not a consumption of time of my seeking. But the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] seeks to get an advantage over every other bill upon the Calendar in order that he may force through his Paris Exposition resolution. Now, as we are in Committee of the Whole, I desire that other bills on the Calendar shall have an equal chance with that joint resolution. In my judgment there are other bills of far more importance than that.

Mr. BANKS. Is my motion in order to lay this Winnebago reservation bill aside for the present?

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is in order. Mr. BANKS. Then I hope the question will be taken.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Have I not the right to have the bill read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will read the rule on that subject:

"In Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the bills shall be taken up and disposed of in their order on the Calendar; but when objection is made to the consideration of a bill a majority of the committee shall decide, without debate, whether it shall be taken up and disposed of or laid aside."

The Chair holds that the question must be taken at once upon the motion to lay this bill aside.

Mr. BANKS. I hope the committee will lay it aside.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. How can the committee determine whether to lay it aside or not unless they know what is in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The title of the bill discloses the subject to which it relates.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. What is the question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] to lay aside Senate bill No. 121.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I ask that that bill be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has just decided that the vote must be taken at once upon the motion to lay the bill aside.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Then I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I hold that I have a right to have the bill read, in order to know what it is I am called upon to lay aside.

Mr. SPALDING. What is the title of the bill that it is moved to lay aside?

The CHAIRMAN. An act to provide for the enlargement of the Winnebago reservation in the Territory of Nebraska, and for other purposes.

Mr. STEVENS. It is very important that that bill should be passed at once, [laughter,] and I hope the committee will consider it now, and not lay it aside.

The CHAIRMAN. An appeal having been taken from the decision of the Chair by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HARDING,] the first question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. STEVENS. Let me understand the question. Does the Chair decide that it is not necessary to read the bill before the vote is taken upon the motion to lay it aside?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the vote must be taken at once upon the motion to lay the bill aside, without debate and without reading the bill. And the question now is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and there were, upon a division—ayes 66, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BANKS, and Mr. WASHBURN of Illinois, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 11; no quorum voting, and the tellers resumed their seats.

The CHAIRMAN announced the vote as—ayes 85, noes 11.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The Chair is in error; the vote was—ayes 75, noes 11; and the rule requires that when the committee finds itself without a quorum the roll of members' names shall be called.

Mr. BANKS. There is a quorum present.

Mr. ANCONA. I call for a new count, as there seems to be some error.

The CHAIRMAN. There is some misunderstanding as to the count by the tellers. If there is no objection, the Chair will direct the tellers to resume their stations, and the question will be again put to the committee.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was accordingly called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Alley, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Bergen, Bidwell, Blow, Brandegee, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Conkling, Cutver, Darling, Defrees, Delano, Eckloy, Farnsworth, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hart, Hill, Hotchkiss, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hulburd, Johnson, Jones, Kerr, Laffin, William Lawrence, McIndoe, McKee, Miller, Morris, Moulton, Nicholson, Noell, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Radford, Raymond, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Seefeld, Shanklin, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Taylor, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Whaley, Williams, Woodbridge, and Wright.

The committee then rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POMEROY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration Senate bill No. 121, to provide for the enlargement of the Winnebago reservation in the Territory of Nebraska, and for other purposes, and finding itself without a quorum, had directed the roll to be called and the names of the absentees to be reported to the House.

The SPEAKER stated that a quorum having answered to their names, the committee would resume its session.

The committee resumed its session, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.)

The question recurring, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. BANKS. I call for tellers. Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BANKS, and Mr. WASHBURN of Illinois, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 85, noes 15.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. BANKS that the bill (S. No. 121) be laid aside, the motion was agreed to—ayes 68, noes 37.

WYANDOTTE TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar was House bill No. 432, for the relief of the Wyandotte tribe of Indians.

Mr. BANKS. I move that this bill be laid aside.

Mr. ROSS. I trust that this bill will be taken up and passed. It is a bill of some importance.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The motion of Mr. BANKS was agreed to—ayes 71, noes 34.

INDIAN DEPREDACTIONS IN IOWA.

The next business on the Calendar was House bill No. 805, for the relief of the citizens of Iowa, for damages sustained by reason of depredations and injuries by certain bands of Sioux Indians.

Mr. BANKS. I move that this bill be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 69, noes 25.

BOUNDARY SURVEY—OREGON AND IDAHO.

The next business on the Calendar was House bill No. 251, entitled "An act providing for the survey of the boundary between the Territory of Idaho and the State of Oregon."

Mr. BANKS. I move that this bill be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 68, noes 26.

APPROPRIATION FOR SANITARY PURPOSES.

The next business on the Calendar was joint resolution (H. R. No. 121) to place funds in the hands of the Commissioner of Public Buildings for sanitary purposes.

Mr. BANKS. I move that this bill be laid aside.

On the motion, there were—ayes 72, noes 5; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN, under the rule, ordered tellers, and appointed Mr. BANKS, and Mr. WASHBURN of Illinois.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 23.

So the motion was agreed to.

RESTORATION OF INSURRECTIONARY STATES.

The next business on the Calendar was House bill No. 623, to enable the States lately in rebellion to regain their privileges in the Union.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. BANKS. I move that this bill be laid aside.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Chairman, on this bill, which I reported, I claim the right to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that an objection to a bill takes precedence of any motion in relation to the bill, and that a member rising to object to a bill has the right to the floor. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise to object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEVENS. This is a bill which I reported, and I desire that it shall be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The ruling of the Chair is that the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] rising to object, has the right to the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. From that ruling I appeal.

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me to suggest that I have the precedence under the practice and rules of the House, first, because I moved to go into the Committee of the Whole; secondly, because I rise to object to the consideration of the bill; and thirdly, because I first addressed the Chair.

Mr. STEVENS. I first rose to address the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

"In Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the bills shall be taken up and disposed of in their order on the Calendar; but when objection is made to the consideration of a bill a majority of the committee shall decide, without debate, whether it shall be taken up and disposed of or laid aside."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. STEVENS. I will state why I appeal. I had the floor.

Mr. BANKS. The question is not debatable.

Mr. STEVENS. I addressed the Chair first; I never surrendered the floor, and nobody can take it from me.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that all debate is out of order.

Mr. STEVENS. I am stating my point of order.

Mr. BANKS. It is not a point of order.
Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman had not the right to make his objection till I had surrendered the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has heard the ruling of the Chair. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The committee sustained the decision of the Chair.

The question then recurred on Mr. BANKS's motion that the bill be laid aside.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 20.

So the motion was agreed to.

EXPOSITION AT PARIS.

The next business on the Calendar was the amendment of the Senate to House joint resolution No. 52, to provide for the expenses attending the exhibition of the products of industry of the United States at the Exposition at Paris in 1867.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that it be laid aside. [Great laughter.]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 75.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That, in order to enable the people of the United States to participate in the advantages of the universal exhibition of the productions of agriculture, manufactures, and the fine arts, to be held at Paris in the year 1867, the following sums, or so much of them as may be necessary for the purposes severally specified, are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated:

First. To provide necessary furniture and fixtures for the proper exhibition of the productions of the United States, according to the plan of the imperial commissioners, in that part of the building exclusively assigned to the use of the United States, $48,000 in coin.

Secondly. To provide additional accommodations in the park, $25,000 in coin.

Thirdly. For the compensation of the principal agent of the Exhibition in the United States at the rate of $2,000 a year: Provided, That the period of such service shall not extend beyond sixty days after the close of the Exhibition, $4,000, or so much thereof as may be found necessary.

Fourthly. For office rent at New York, for fixtures, stationery, and advertising; for rent of store-house for reception of articles and products; for expenses of shipping, including cartages, &c.; for freights on the articles to be exhibited from New York to France and return, and for compensation of four clerks, in conformity with the joint resolution approved on the 15th of January, 1866, and for contingent expenses, the sum of $33,700, or so much thereof as may be found necessary.

Fifthly. For expenses in receiving, bonding, storage, cartage, labor, and so forth, at Havre; for railway transportation from Havre to Paris, going and returning; for labor in the palace; for sweeping and sprinkling compartments for seven months; for guards and keepers for seven months; for linguists (eight men) for seven months; for storing, packing-boxes, carting, and for material for repacking; for clerk hire, stationery, rent, and contingent expenses, the sum of $35,703 in coin, or so much thereof as may be found necessary.

Sixthly. For the traveling expenses of ten professional and scientific commissioners, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, at the rate of $1,000 each, $10,000, it being understood that the President may appoint additional commissioners, not exceeding twenty in number, whose expenses shall not be paid; but no person interested, directly or indirectly, in any article exhibited shall be a commissioner; nor shall any member of Congress, or any person holding an appointment or office of honor or trust under the United States be appointed a commissioner, agent, or officer under this resolution.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That the Governors of the several States be, and they are hereby, requested to invite the patriotic people of their respective States to assist in the proper representation of the handiwork of our artisans, and the prolific sources of material wealth with which our land is blessed, and to take such further measures as may be necessary to diffuse a knowledge of the proposed Exhibition, and to secure to their respective States the advantages which it promises.

SEC. 3. And be it further resolved, That it shall be the duty of the said general agent at New York, and the said commissioner general at Paris, to transmit to Congress, through the Department of State, a detailed statement of the manner in which such expenditures are hereinbefore provided for are made by them respectively.

Amend the title to read as follows: Joint resolution to enable the people of the United States to participate in the advantages of the Universal Exhibition at Paris in 1867.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. SPALDING. How much does this appropriate?

Mr. BANKS. I will give the gentleman the information as near as I can when the committee rises.

Mr. SPALDING. The committee ought to know at once how much money is proposed to be appropriated.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It is not in order to move that the committee rise and report the bill so long as any amendment is pending.

Mr. BANKS. I move to rise in order to close debate.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 48.

So the committee agreed to rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POMEROY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the amendment of the Senate to House joint resolution No. 52, to provide for the expenses attending the exhibition of the products of industry of the United States at the Exposition at Paris, in 1867, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BANKS. As I have already stated, I shall move to non-concur in the amendment of the Senate, and extended debate is not, therefore, necessary. I move that general debate be closed in one minute.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will not gag this through in that way.

The SPEAKER. It will leave the five-minute debate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the amendment of the Senate to joint resolution of the House No. 52, to provide for the expenses attending the exhibition of the products of industry of the United States at the Exposition at Paris in 1867.

Mr. BANKS. I will reply to the question of the gentleman from Ohio, if he desires a reply to his question, that it is impossible to state the difference between the appropriation of the House and that of the Senate, inasmuch as the one is in currency, and the other, partly, in coin. The difference will depend on the price of gold at the time the appropriation is used.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is now closed by order of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I presume the bill will now be read by sections for amendment.

Mr. SPALDING. I am obliged to the gentleman from Massachusetts for his information.

The CHAIRMAN. There is but one amendment. The Senate proposes to strike out the whole bill and to insert.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to amend the amendment by striking out lines sixteen and seventeen, which provide for the appropriation of $25,000 in coin. The gentleman from Massachusetts says, that he proposes to move to non-concur in the amendment of the Senate. I wish the House to understand how the matter will then stand. The bill will be referred to a committee of conference, and the House then will have to pass upon the question whether it will adopt the report of that committee or not. I desire to have a vote of the committee upon this proposition to take $25,000 in American gold out of the Treasury in order to pay the expenses attending this Paris Exposition. I desire to know whether we will go back to our constituents and tell them that we have made an appropriation in gold—that we have reached a time when there is "gold for office-holders and rags for the people." It is not enough that we shall make an ordinary appropriation for our people to go over to Paris and make a "show," there; but we must go further, and vote coin out of the Treasury of the United States for that purpose. Sir, I am opposed to it, and hence I have made the motion to strike out.

Mr. BANKS. I rise, sir, to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. Inasmuch as I proposed to non-concur in the amendment of the Senate, it is not necessary that I should debate it. It is doubtless refreshing to the members of the House that the gentleman from Illinois should instruct us as to the natural course of events in a committee of conference. I do not think, however, that the House is in danger of encountering a surprise from any course such a committee may take. We have plenty of time to consider the report of any committee; and I think we may trust any committee that the Speaker will appoint. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The question was put on Mr. WASHBURN's amendment, and there were—ayes 39, noes 56.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BANKS, and WASHBURN of Illinois, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 55.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to insert after the word "rate," in the forty-sixth line, "per annum," so that it will read, "at the rate per annum of $1,000 each," &c.

Mr. BANKS. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I propose to add, also, after the word "each," in the forty-seventh line, the words "for the time actually employed." I do not propose to leave these men drawing salaries of $1,000 for one month's service.

Mr. BANKS. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the sixth line of the third section:

Provided, That this act shall not take effect until the French troops shall have been withdrawn from Mexico.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to object to that amendment. It is not germane to the subject. If this country objects to the presence of French troops in Mexico, Americans ought to have the good sense to order them to leave this continent, and not to attack the industry of the country in this backhanded, underhanded, and unjust effort to carry out a policy. If the member from Illinois will, in the name of the people he represents, introduce a bill for the ejection of the French troops from Mexico, I will give him my support. But I demand, in the name of the mechanics of the country, that a matter vital to their interests and honor shall not be embarrassed by a proposition of this kind.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is now in order. There is an amendment to the amendment pending.

Mr. STEVENS. No, sir; the amendment of the Senate is the text upon which we are acting.

Mr. BANKS. Let us have the question.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the gentleman will not be quite so impetuous. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs says that he is ready to do justice to this country in regard to Mexican affairs. I would suggest whether it is not nearly time that the distinguished committee of which he is chairman should take some action in this direction. As the committee have not done it, I shall vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I have no doubt, sir, that the Committee on Foreign Affairs will discharge its duty faithfully upon all the subjects referred to it; and I promise the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if he will leave this question to stand upon its own merits, and will refrain from drawing into this discussion topics which have no relation to it and no connection with it, he will have an opportunity hereafter to express his opinion and to give his vote as he may think proper on the subject of the occupation of Mexico by the French.

Mr. STEVENS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I renew the amendment for the purpose of saying one word in reply to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts. He suggests that I am giving a backhanded blow at the mechanics of the country. I do not understand what the gentleman means by that assertion, when all I propose is that before this country is represented in the French Exposition they shall put aside this little tin crown in Mexico. I do not propose, so far as I am concerned, in the present state of things, looking to the conduct of the French nation in regard to us, to send representatives to the Paris Exposition; and I want to know of my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who talks here so boldly and so bravely in regard to this Mexican question, why he has not taken some initiative step to vindicate the honor and glory of this country. I wish, sir, he would travel on the same path that I am traveling, having no connection, having nothing whatever to do with the French nation so long as she keeps up this perpetual threat upon our borders. Sir, this is no new proposition. This very proposition was introduced when this question was before the House. It was introduced also into the Senate; and I regret that the Senate did not pass it, so that we might stand fairly and justly before the country when dealing with this question.

Sir, this is no matter affecting the mechanics of the country, about whom the gentleman talks. It is a question which concerns not only them, but every American, every man who has a drop of pure American blood in his veins; and when you tell the mechanics of the country that this stigma must be put upon the national honor for their benefit and in their name, they will repudiate it. They desire nothing of the kind. They feel, as we all feel, the deep humiliation to which we are subjected by the existing state of things. I trust the committee will adopt the amendment.

Mr. BANKS. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. The reason why I said that his proposition was a "backhanded" blow at this measure was this: that it is indirect; that it is evasive of the merits of the question before the House, and one which, strictly considered, is not before the House either for debate or vote.

I make no question upon the presentation or consideration of this question. But I repeat to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] that it is evasive of the merits of the question before the committee. I do not wish to consume the time of the House by any discussion of this measure. I will say in a word that this is a measure deeply interesting to all the friends of American industry. There is scarcely a State in the Union which holds relations with the General Government which has not applied to be represented at this Exposition. And if they are to be represented at all, it is necessary that the decision should be made early. It is for that reason I ask an early decision of this question by the House.

Now, in regard to the Mexican question I have this to say: whether I may or may not travel with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] upon all questions, upon that which pertains to the maintenance of the republic of Mexico I travel with him or with any man who goes for the support of that republic. But I prefer to fight the battle of Mexico against Maximilian, if the gentleman pleases, or against the Emperor of France, if he pleases, or against any other Power that shall occupy the territory of Mexico and not under cover of a measure that is designed to extend and benefit the industrial interests of this country, and which concerns alone the honor and dignity of our Government and the welfare and prosperity of the mechanics and working men of this country, who have preserved it to this hour against its enemies.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I renew the amendment to the amendment. I feel inexpressible repugnance to giving my vote in favor of a measure appropriating coin for the purpose proposed.

Mr. BANKS. I am reluctant to have the time of the committee consumed unnecessarily; and therefore I must raise the point of order that the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] are not pertinent to the amendment now pending.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Perhaps my remarks were not precisely appropriate to the specific proposed amendment of my colleague, [Mr. WASHBURN.] The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] seems to be sensitive upon this question, and any widening of the debate so as to touch the merits of this joint resolution appears to be objectionable to him. And if I travel beyond the strict limits of the proposed amendment to the amendment, I suppose I shall be liable to be called to order by him.

I will, however, venture to say in reference to the amendment, that it has been maintained by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that the proposed amendment is not germane to this joint resolution; that it is a measure of war, while in fact, this is a measure of peace. Now, I think the amendment is perfectly proper and highly appropriate and important, in view of the pregnant and potent announcement of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that he is ready to sustain war measures against France—at least I so understood the gentleman—to sustain a bill which should propose the expulsion of the French troops from Mexico, or something to that effect.

Mr. BANKS. I said I was willing to sustain the republic of Mexico against anybody.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Very well; then he proposes to sustain it, of course, in a mode by which it can be sustained, by the only efficient mode, which is by arms and loans. Now, I submit to this committee whether, in view of the prospect of an immediate outbreak of hostilities upon this question, we should send these delectable young gentlemen across the ocean with our coin in their pockets. They might all be captured before they reached that country or could return to this, and what a loss that would be to us.

A MEMBER. And lose the money, too.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Yes, and lose the money, too. [Laughter.] I am not in jest, and if what I say excites mirth, such is not the feeling of my heart. I feel a deep regret that this nation is asked to humiliate itself, while holding the relations it does toward France and toward Mexico, by sending a representation to the court of Napoleon, for that will take away from the moral effect of our protest against his action in regard to our sister republic. I would not withdraw one particle of the moral power by which the gentleman chooses to fight the battle of Mexico. I would not withdraw one particle of the moral influence which our protest is supposed to exert upon that question in Europe. But I do insist upon it that by sending this representation there, by accepting this invitation of Napoleon, we do in effect give the go-by to our protest. It will be so understood in Mexico, and it will be so understood by the world.

Now, sir, our protest in reference to the occupation of Mexico is answered by the declaration from the throne of France, that France will consult her honor; that she knows how to preserve it; that she will remove her troops when the purposes for which they were sent to Mexico shall have been accomplished. If that declaration is not in direct antagonism to the principles announced by the Baltimore convention, to the solemn pledges involved in our national policy, and the repeated protests of our Administration, then I am very greatly mistaken.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I renew the amendment to the amendment. I think that under existing circumstances we should be unwise to indicate to the French Emperor or to the world that this nation has not dignity and common sense enough to legislate on a question of this kind without passion. What is the purpose of this Exhibition? Simply to invite the attention of France and the world to the productions of our domestic industry. We are solicited to make this exhibition of our products. This Exposition is no warlike measure on the part of France. It has nothing to do with French interests in Mexico. It has nothing to do with the Monroe doctrine. It is simply a question of international comity in reference to an enterprise looking to the advancement of the interest of industry and art. I regret to observe the spirit which is manifested in this House at the present time. I trust, sir, that we shall regard this question upon its own merits, as one affecting the character and dignity of the nation, and that when the proper time comes for the American people to express their sentiments in respect to the occupation of Mexico, we here shall be found ready to meet that question and to vindicate the honor of the country. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 33, noes 63.

Mr. BANKS. I move that the committee rise and report the bill, with a recommendation that the House non-concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POMEROY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration joint resolution (H. R. No. 52) to provide for the expenses attending the exhibition of the products of the industry of the United States at the Exposition at Paris in 1867, had directed him to report the resolution to the House, with a recommendation that the House non-concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. BANKS. I move the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the Senate amendment be laid on the table so that members of the House may have an opportunity to vote directly upon the question of paying these men in gold. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BANKS. What will be the effect of that motion?

The SPEAKER. It will carry the bill with it.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 40, nays 74, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Baker, Beaman, Benjamin, Blaine, Bromwell, Cook, Defrees, Deming, Eldridge, Finch, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Kerr, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, McCullough, Niblack, Paine, Pike, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Sawyer, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stevens, Thornton, Trimble, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburne, Wentworth, Whaley, and James F. Wilson—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ancona, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Boyer, Buckland, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eliot, Farquhar, Garfield, Henderson, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenekes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Ketchum, Kuykendall, Latham, Longyear, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McKuer, Mercur, Moorhead, Morrill, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Schenck, Smith, Stillwell, Strouse, Taber, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—74.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Bergen, Blow, Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Delano, Denison, Dodge, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hart, Higby, Hill, Hotchkiss, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Laffin, William Lawrence, Lynch, McIndoe, McKee, Miller, Morris, Nicholson, Noell, Patterson, Phelps, Plants, Price, Radford, Raymond, Ross, Rousseau, Scofield, Shanklin, Sloan, Starr, Taylor, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wright—68.

So the amendment of the Senate was not laid upon the table.

The question then recurred on seconding the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS moved that the House insist on its disagreement and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 127) entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1867."

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the amendments of the Senate be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I wish to call the attention of the House to an error in the engrossment of this bill. I offered an amendment in regard to the Illinois Central railroad, referring the question for adjudication to the United States court of the seventh judicial district. By an error of the engrossing clerk it has been made "the eleventh judicial district." I ask to have the bill corrected in accordance with the original proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is beyond the power of the House now to do that. The Senate has stricken out the provision in which that clause occurred. The matter might be arranged in a committee of conference.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I supposed that, being a mistake in copying the bill, it could certainly be corrected.

The SPEAKER. The Senate has acted upon the bill as engrossed here and sent to that body.

The motion of Mr. STEVENS was agreed to; and the amendments of the Senate were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BARKS MARGET AND GOLDEN FLEECE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was joint resolution (S. R. No. 104) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue American registers to the barks Marget and Golden Fleece; which was read a first and second time, and, on motion of Mr. ELIOT, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 137, to amend the acts approved August 6, 1861, and July 16, 1862, establishing a Metropolitan police force in the District of Columbia, to increase the efficiency thereof, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 290, to incorporate the National Life and Accident Insurance Company of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

LEVY COURT OF WASHINGTON.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 325, to give certain powers to the levy court of the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

EDWARD ST. CLAIR CLARKE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 283, for the relief of Edward St. Clair Clarke; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

FRANCIS S. LYON.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 373, releasing to Francis S. Lyon the interest of the United States in certain lands; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

COLUMBIA RIVER AND SALT LAKE RAILROAD.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 336, to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Columbia river to Salt Lake City; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

MAJOR GENERAL HIRAM G. BERRY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 375, to amend an act entitled "An act granting a pension to the widow of the late Major General Hiram G. Berry;" which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LAND GRANT TO KANSAS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 320, to amend an act entitled "An act to grant lands to the State of Kansas in alternate sections to aid in the construction of certain railroads and telegraph lines in said State."

Mr. STEVENS. Let the bill lie on the table for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 317, to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, approved July 1, 1862,' approved July 2, 1864;" which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider all the votes by which the bills were severally referred; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARMY BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I demand that the House now proceed to the consideration of the regular order.

The House accordingly resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 361, to reorganize and establish the Army of the United States, the pending question being on the amendment to section twenty-seven, offered by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, as follows:

Provided, That in applying the rule of promotion no distinction shall be made between officers of regiments composed of colored men and those composed of white men, but the promotion shall be by interchange equally open to all said officers.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. This bill being a special order after the morning hour would not come under the category of unfinished business tomorrow, but would come up after the morning hour.

Mr. SCHENCK. I withdraw the motion to adjourn, and yield to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENJAMIN.]

ROBERT BALDWIN.

Mr. BENJAMIN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of Robert Baldwin; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

DEATH OF HON. JAMES HUMPHREY.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to state that two members of the committee, my colleague [Mr. WINFIELD] and myself, appointed by the Chair to attend the funeral of the late Hon. JAMES HUMPHREY were obliged to decline, and that two other members from New York [Messrs. HALE and HULBURD] took their places by arrangement. I desire that their appointment be formally made, and that my colleague [Mr. WINFIELD] and myself be excused.

The gentlemen were accordingly excused; and the Chair appointed in their stead Messrs. HALE and HULBURD.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. HOLMES: The petition of Elizabeth S. Miller, and 120 others, women of Madison county, New York, for universal suffrage.

By Mr. HUBBARD, of New York: The petition of C. Button, and 54 others, citizens of Chenango county, for a mail route from Plymouth, via the southwest part of Otsego, called Brown Meadow, to South Otsego, in said county.

By Mr. McCLURG: The claim of Mr. Eunice A. Porch, of Missouri, for $500.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 21, 1866.

On motion of Mr. CONNESS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has received and been requested to present to the Senate the memorial of the Mechanics' Bank, of New Haven, Connecticut, praying that that bank may be exempt from the tax of ten per cent. upon its circulation until the 1st of July, 1867, for reasons stated in the memorial. As this subject has been reported upon by the Committee on Finance, this petition, if there be no objection, will be received and laid on the table.

Mr. MORGAN. I present the petition of Sturges, Arnold & Co., and other merchants of New York, dealers in coffees, teas, sugars, and other foreign merchandise, in which they represent that nearly all their goods, or a large proportion of them, are sold by and through licensed commercial brokers, for the account of wholesale dealers, as the mere agents of the same; that it has been the custom of most of the assessors to assess and collect from such commercial brokers an additional tax of one eighth of one per cent. on sales made by them for wholesale dealers, thereby collecting a double tax on sales of this nature; that this tax is too onerous for the commercial brokers to pay from their brokerage without recourse to their principals, the importers and wholesale dealers. As it is practically a double tax, and contrary to the spirit and intent of the acts of Congress, they pray that the law may be changed in this respect. I ask that this petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

It was so referred.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 364) to authorize the establishment of a repertory in Germany, to illustrate the physical, political, and social condition, the natural products, and the resources of the several States of the Union, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a memorial of the board of trustees of the Indiana Agricultural College, praying for a modification or change of the act of July 2, 1862, granting to the several States a quantity of land for the building of agricultural colleges, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Dr. Henry Clok, late a veterinary surgeon in the United States Army, in relation to his experience in the treatment of the rinderpest, and tendering his services, whenever they may be required, in arresting its progress, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. WILLEY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 361) to authorize W. J. Sibley and others, trustees, to sell and convey lot No. 9, in square No. 76, in the city of Washington, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Lewis Dyer, late surgeon in the eighty-first regiment Illinois volunteers, praying for compensation for services rendered the Government in that capacity, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 383) for the relief of Lewis Dyer, M. D., late surgeon of the eighty-first regiment Illinois volunteers. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee to whom was referred the petition of Sarah A. Monroe, widow of the late Rev. T. H. W. Monroe, praying that she may be allowed compensation for services alleged to have been rendered by her husband as chaplain in East Washington Methodist Episcopal Church Hospital while it was in possession of the Government, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

MRS. ABBY GREEN.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Abby Green, praying for relief, have instructed me to report a joint resolution (S. R. No. 112) for the relief of Mrs. Abby Green. This is a case which appeals in the strongest degree to the justice and to the generosity of Congress. It is a joint resolution for the relief of a woman in Richmond through whose agency one hundred and nine of our men escaped from the Libby prison. The services which she rendered to them were at the risk of her life, and at the sacrifice of her property. The committee having had the amplest testimony to the fact, from Colonel Streight, and the other officers who escaped through her exertions, have instructed me to report a joint resolution granting her $1,500, which is the same amount that was paid to another woman who well deserved it, but who did not render so much service as this lady. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was read twice by its title and considered as in Committee of the Whole. As it appears from the evidence of General H. C. Hobart, Colonel A. D. Streight, and Captain John F. Porter, jr., late of the United States Army, that Mrs. Abby Green, then of Richmond, Virginia, by her courage, patriotic devotion, and assistance, from May, 1863, to February, 1864, in enabling one hundred and nine officers and soldiers of the United States to make their escape from the Libby prison in Richmond, Virginia, and from the hands of our enemies, has deserved well of the country, the joint resolution proposes that the sum of $1,500 be paid to her, her heirs, or administrator in compensation for her services.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CHANDLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 381) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of marine hospitals and revenue-cutters," approved April 20, 1866; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TRUMBULL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 382) to change the place of holding court in the northern district of Georgia; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask that that bill be printed and go upon the Calendar, as it has already been considered in committee.

It was so ordered.

NATIONAL PARK—PRESIDENTIAL MANSION.

Mr. WADE. I offer the following resolution of inquiry, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire into the expediency of the United States acquiring the title to the land between Maryland avenue and Pennsylvania avenue, east of the Capitol to Nineteenth street, for the purposes of a national park in which to erect a new presidential mansion, and to report by bill or otherwise.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. GRIMES. Just such a resolution as that is already before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. FESSENDEN. And they now have the subject under consideration.

Mr. WADE. I am told that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have this subject under consideration, and I will change the reference of the inquiry to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will require an alteration of the phraseology of the resolution inasmuch as the resolution directs the inquiry to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WADE. I move to amend it, then, by striking out "Committee on the District of Columbia" and inserting "Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so amended at the instance of the mover.

The resolution, as modified, was adopted.

PRINTING OF BILLS.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move to take up the post route bill.

Mr. CRAGIN. Before that is done I desire to have an order to print two bills which I introduced yesterday and which were then referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, Senate bills Nos. 377 and 378. I move that they be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

POST ROUTE BILL.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If there is no further morning business, I desire to move to take up for consideration—

Mr. CONNESS. I wish to say to the Senator that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads are very anxious to pass the annual post route bill this morning; it will excite no discussion. The committee desire to have it sent to the other House as soon as possible.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to take up a private claim, but I give way to that.

Mr. CONNESS. I move, then, to take up Senate bill No. 369.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota has already made that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 369) to establish certain post roads, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY. The committee have several amendments, and I believe it is first in order for them to submit their amendments.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are no amendments reported with the bill.

Mr. RAMSEY. But the committee instruct me to move certain amendments. I move to insert, after the forty-seventh line, on page 3, under the head of "Minnesota:—"

From Monticello via Buffalo to Watertown.
From Buffalo via Maple Lake to Fremont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. The committee further instruct me to move this amendment to come in at the close of the bill as now printed.

Illinois:—

From Winchester to Manchester.
From Elkhart, in Logan county, to Sweetwater, in Minard county.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I now offer my amendment, to come in at the close of the bill:

Indiana:—

From Nashville, in the county of Brown, to Morgantown, in the county of Morgan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLEY. I offer the following amendment to come in after line one hundred and two, under the head of "West Virginia:—"

From Sago, in Upshur county, to Huttonsville, in Randolph county.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I propose the following amendment at the end of line eighty-nine, under the head of "Oregon:—"

From Cañon City, via Susanville, Elk district, True's Station, Olin Creek, Independence, and Obern to Baker City.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. RAMSEY. I understand from the Senator from Michigan [Mr. HOWARD] that he desires to make certain amendments to this bill, but has not the memoranda with him to enable him to do so; he desires, therefore, to have the bill laid over for to-day. It is quite agreeable to the committee to let it pass over informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be postponed until to-morrow if there be no objection. The bill is so postponed.

PAYMENT OF ARMY SUPPLIES.

Mr. POLAND. I move that Senate bill No. 217 be taken up for consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 217) to provide for the payment for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe this bill was up before. It is a very important bill certainly.

Mr. POLAND. Yes, sir; it is a bill of some importance.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is there any written report accompanying the bill?

Mr. POLAND. There is not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator will allow it to lay over until to-morrow. It is a very important matter.

Mr. POLAND. I can hardly allow that. I have been at work for about three months trying to get it before the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us have it read, then.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the bill read, at any rate, before the vote is taken on its passage. I hope it will either be read at the desk or that I shall be allowed time to read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all claims of loyal persons, not exceeding $500, for quartermaster's stores actually furnished to the Army of the United States and receipted for by the proper officer receiving the same, or which may have been taken by such officer without giving such receipt, may be submitted to the Quartermaster General of the United States, accompanied with such proofs as such claimant can present of the facts in his case; and it shall be the duty of the Quartermaster General to cause such claim to be examined, and if convinced that such claim is just, and that such claimant, at the time such claim accrued, was loyal to the Government of the United States and has ever since so remained, and has never in any way voluntarily aided the rebellion, and that such stores were actually received or taken for the use of and used by said Army, then to report each case to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, with a recommendation for settlement.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That all claims of loyal persons not exceeding $500, for subsistence actually furnished to said Army, and receipted for by the proper officer receiving the same, or which may have been taken by such officers without giving such receipt, may be submitted to the Commissary General of Subsistence, accompanied with such proof as each claimant may have to offer; and it shall be the duty of the Commissary General of Subsistence to cause each claim to be examined, and if convinced that it is just, and that the claimant at the time such claim accrued was loyal to the Government of the United States, and has ever since so remained, and has never in any way voluntarily aided the rebellion, and that the stores were received or taken actually for the use of and used by said Army, then to report each case to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, with a recommendation for settlement.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That all loyal persons having claims exceeding $500 for quartermaster's stores or for subsistence actually furnished to the Army of the United States, and receipted for by the proper officers receiving the same, or which may have been taken by such officers without giving such receipt, for the use of and actually used by said Army, may prosecute such claims against the United States in the Court of Claims, in the manner and to the extent now provided by law for the prosecution of claims against the United States in such court. And if such claimant shall establish by evidence that at the time his claim accrued he was loyal to the United States and has ever since so remained, and that he has never in any way voluntarily aided the rebellion, such court shall render judgment in favor of such claimant for so much of his claim as is found to be justly due; and such judgments shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury appropriated for the payment for quartermaster's stores and subsistence respectively.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have an amendment that I desire to offer to the bill. I was called out of the Chamber at the time the bill was taken up. With a view to offer my amendment, I move to reconsider the vote ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time. The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now before the Senate, and open to amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the second and third sections of the act of Congress approved July 4, 1864, entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," be so amended that all claims of loyal citizens in States not in rebellion at the date of the passage of the act aforesaid, for quartermaster's and commissary's stores furnished to, or taken by the Army of the United States, under and by direction of any officer acting at the time under competent authority, may be submitted to the Quartermaster General and Commissary General, with such proofs as each claimant can present of the facts in his case; and it shall be the duty of those officers to cause such claims to be examined, and after an investigation thereof, to report each case, with their action thereon, to the Third Auditor of the Treasury for final adjudication and settlement. That the provisions of this act shall extend to such persons only as were loyal at the inception of their claims, and have so continued to the present time.

I will state that the object of this amendment is to allow cases to go from the Quartermaster General to the accounting officers in case he rejects the claim; that notwithstanding that rejection it shall go, with his rejection and his report, to the accounting officers. The amendment also provides for cases where the property is taken, not by the commissary or quartermaster's department, but under the order of the officer commanding. I understand that this class of cases are not provided for. The act of 1864 only allows payment where the property has been taken by the proper officer, either of the commissary or quartermaster's department; but there are many cases in which the property has been taken by the order of the commanding general, or person commanding at the place, where it was necessary and proper, and the law does not provide for the payment of those claims. This amendment contemplates payment for that class of claims; and I cannot see why they should not be paid. I cannot see why the decision of the Quartermaster General should be final in regard to a claim, providing the Third Auditor and the Comptroller think the claim is right. The amendment proposes that, with the opinion of the Quartermaster General, the claim shall go to the accounting officer to be considered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I was not in when the amendment was offered, but I believe I know what it is. It is to extend this law so as to pay for property which has been taken without the order of the proper officer. I think it would be very unsafe to make that amendment. There was great hesitation, a year or two ago, in passing the law which was then enacted. It is a very difficult subject to touch, because we do not know the extent to which these claims are to be brought in against the Government.

The law that was passed provided for paying for quartermaster's and commissary stores which were taken by our Army, by the proper officer, from loyal men in loyal States, when the property was receipted for or was actually used by the Army. That is as far as I am willing to go. This amendment would throw it open still further. The only difference between the amendment and the law as it stands is in this clause: the amendment provides to pay for property furnished under the circumstances I have mentioned, "when taken by the Army of the United States, under and by direction of any officer acting at the time under competent authority." I do not know what that would mean, exactly. I suppose an officer is always acting under competent authority. There has been a great deal of property destroyed and a great deal of property taken during the rebellion that I think the Government ought not to pay for, under circumstances which imposed no obligation on the Government to pay for it. I think if we now undertake to pay, as is provided by the bill under consideration, of which the Senator from Vermont has charge, for property in all these disloyal States—for it is proposed now to extend the provisions of the law of 1864 over all the States in the Union—to pay every loyal man who was loyal when the property was taken and who continues loyal when he files his claim for any property which has been taken by a proper officer and used by our armies; that is going far enough.

Mr. FESSENDEN. A great deal too far, I think.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This amendment would extend it to property that was taken under the direction of anybody who was acting as an officer. The law as it stands extends it to the "proper officer." It must have been a proper person. I think this amendment goes entirely too far.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The objection that occurs to me with regard to the bill is the danger, unless it is guarded very carefully—I have not read it—of not making any distinctions, not laying down any rules for the examination of this property. The language is very general, and the whole matter is left to the Quartermaster General and the Commissary General. We do not know what rules may be established by them. I think the rules ought to be established by Congress, or else a report on all these claims should be made to Congress. I think it but proper that we should make some provision instead of referring all these claims to any individual with a view to payment, because they may cover immense amounts, and we do not know what effect they may have on the Treasury. I do not know but that the bill is properly guarded; I have not read it; but it strikes me that it would be the safer mode to have the report of these officers submitted to Congress before the claims are paid, as they must necessarily involve very large amounts of money.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We have been furnished with a copy of the rules and regulations which were adopted by the Quartermaster General's and Commissary General's departments. They were very carefully framed. This law has been in operation one year or more.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Was it not confined to the loyal States?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, it was confined to the loyal States. That was the original law; and they adopted rules by which they required the necessary evidence to establish all the facts provided for in the law. If the Senator will read this bill he will see that it is carefully guarded.

All claims of loyal persons for quartermaster's stores actually furnished to the Army of the United States and receipted for by the proper officer receiving the same—

That is, the first class—or which may have been taken by such officer without giving such receipt.

Now, what is it necessary to establish? The rules of the departments, in the first place, require evidence of the loyalty of the party. I have the rules here and will read from them:

Proofs required in support of the above classes of claims.

I. That the claimant is a loyal citizen of a State not in rebellion.

Then they go on to enumerate those States.

II. Citizenship. The claimant will be required to show by his own affidavit, supported by the certificate of the clerk or recorder of the town or county of which he claims to be a citizen, that said claimant is a citizen of said town or county.

III. Loyalty. The claimant will be required to file with his claim the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States, as prescribed by the President's proclamation of the 8th of December, 1863, supported by the certificate of a United States officer, civil or military, that the said claimant was at the date his claim originated, and has been ever since, loyal to the United States, or the sworn statement of the same facts of at least two witnesses, whose loyalty and credibility shall be vouched for by the certificate of the officers before mentioned.

IV. Claims arising under this act must be presented by the claimant, or his authorized attorney, and in the latter case it must be shown by the certificate of the assessor or collector of his district, that he has been duly licensed and authorized to act as a claim agent.

V. Validity of Claims. 1. When quartermaster's stores or subsistence supplies have been taken by officers and receipted for, such receipts or vouchers must be filed.

2. When such stores or supplies have been taken by officers without giving such receipts, the claim must set forth the kinds and quantity of stores or supplies, when, where, and by what officer taken, the price or value thereof, and must be supported by the affidavit of the claimant as to the correctness of the claim; that the articles named in the claim were actually delivered to, or taken by, said officer for the use of the Army; that no receipt or voucher has been received therefor; that no payment has been made or compensation received in any way, or from any source whatever, for the whole or any part of said claim; that it has not been transferred to any person or persons whomsoever, and that the rates or prices charged are reasonable and just, and do not exceed the market rate or price of the article at the time and place stated.

3. In all cases, whether or not receipts have been given for the stores or supplies, the affidavit required by the next preceding paragraph must be supported by such additional affidavits, or other proof, in relation to the facts stated as may be attainable. The credibility of the claimant and of the witnesses must be vouched for by the certificate of an officer of the United States, civil or military.

4. Proof must be furnished, as far as attainable, that the quartermaster's stores or subsistence supplies mentioned have been actually used by the Army of the United States.

VI. Under the internal revenue law each affidavit and certificate must have affixed to it a five cent internal revenue stamp, which must be canceled by the party affixing it by writing across thereof his initials and the date.

VII. Claims for damages, or for losses sustained by thefts, or depredations committed by troops, will not be considered under the act above referred to.

These rules were signed by M. C. Meigs, Quartermaster General, and A. E. Shiras, Acting Commissary General of Subsistence. The bill under consideration extends these claims over the whole United States. I think it is as well guarded as it could be, unless we were to define what is meant by "loyalty." That ought to be done if there is any way of doing it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Those rules are binding at present while they exist; but it is in the power of the Quartermaster General and Commissary General to change them at any time. The rules made in these bureaus, although signed by the officer at the head, are generally made by those who have charge of the examination of the particular case, and who they may be and what their character may be, and what may be their views of loyalty, &c., from time to time, it is impossible to anticipate. The idea which I wished to suggest was that it is very dangerous for Congress to part with the ultimate control of cases of this description. So far as they may go into court, let them go.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This provides for going into court.

Mr. POLAND. All claims above $500 are required to go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My impression is that the safer way always would be to have a commission to examine these claims under certain rules.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is not half as safe.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have not examined the subject sufficiently to undertake to say that the committee are not right; and where a committee have thoroughly examined a subject and have made up their minds about it, I always feel a delicacy in obtruding any opinion of mine. But because of, possibly, the very great extent of these claims, and because, perhaps, of my former connection with the Treasury, I think it better that we should define specifically the rules which shall be followed, and make them a part of the law, and then put the matter under the final control of the accounting officers of the Treasury for them to examine and see whether all the requirements of the law are fully made out. If you leave it to the bureaus to settle these claims, they will contend that their decision is final. I do not know whether this bill provides that it shall be final, or whether it sends them to the accounting officers of the Treasury for examination; but if the intention is to send them to the accounting officers of the Treasury, it should specifically provide that their decision should not be founded simply upon the examination of the vouchers, but extend to the entire claims in all respects.

Mr. POLAND. But a very small proportion of these claims will go to the Departments at all. We procured from the Quartermaster General and the subsistence department schedules of the claims that had been presented under the present law, and the amount of the claims under $500 is not one per cent. of the gross amount.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But when you come to let in claims from all the States where our armies actually operated, it strikes me there may be a multitude of small claims; but at any rate, if the clause is left in the bill which provides not only for cases where supplies were actually receipted for, but those where no receipts were given, it opens a very wide door.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The limitation is that the supplies must have been taken by the proper officer, and actually used by the Army. Surely the amount cannot be very large.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Perhaps not; but the Senator knows how easy it is to make proof. We have had great experience in regard to the proof made of all these facts, and how easily a claim may be trumped up, especially at a distance of time. If this is to be allowed at all, I think it is important that there should be a limitation of time. In the law providing for the settlement of these claims there should be something in the nature of a limitation that claims not presented before a particular time shall not be considered.

Mr. POLAND. There is a general limitation in relation to the presentation of claims to the Court of Claims that we thought would apply to this. I drew a section with a view to that, but it was the opinion of the committee, upon examination, that the general provision of law in relation to the prosecution of suits against the Government in the Court of Claims would apply to it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But if you take them out of the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims that may well admit of question. I suggest the point. It seems to me it is a matter that ought to receive very careful consideration.

Mr. POLAND. We have given it a good deal.

Mr. HENDERSON. While this subject is before the Senate, I desire to state that there are a good many claims arising in my State under this act of July 4, 1864, referred to by the Senator from Illinois, and that in my opinion the construction which has been given to the act by the quartermaster's department prevents the benefits intended by this act. I do not complain that every act should be construed in favor of the Government in reference to claims as much as it possibly can be. I make no complaint on that subject, because, as a member of the Committee on Claims, I think I have been as particular and as careful about the allowance of claims as perhaps any other member of this body. The Senate will see, however, that from the construction given to the law already passed very few claims can be allowed. For instance, they say that before any claims can be allowed they must be shown to have arisen under circumstances that would have laid the ground for an action of assumpsit, not of trespass, as between individuals. Where supplies have been taken by force or violence, they seem to think that act does not cover it; that there must be an implied assumpsit, as it were, between the individual whose property was taken and the officer of the Government. There must have been a promise; that is, the property must have been taken under circumstances that would create a promise. In other words, there is no relief if a quartermaster took a man's property vi et armis, as was frequently done in my State, and had to be done, the armies marching across the State, and marching so very rapidly that they scarcely had time to stop and execute receipts. They did not know exactly what they had taken. The quartermaster's department, under some opinion, given by Judge Holt, I believe, has come to the conclusion that those claims cannot be allowed. Then, on another point which I now propose to mention, they have rejected a great many claims. The law is that claims of loyal citizens in States not in rebellion for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies shall be allowed. A question arises, where must the claim have arisen? A claim arising in Arkansas, it being a seceded State, the quartermaster says we cannot recover for, although the owner of the claim is an inhabitant of my State.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This bill is intended to remedy that.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that. Now, my understanding of the original law was that it did not matter where the property was taken, provided the claim itself was made by a loyal man; that if the quartermaster's stores and commissary stores were taken from a loyal man, it did not matter whether they were taken in Arkansas or not. For instance, a man living in my State had a farm over in Arkansas; the quartermaster's department says he can be allowed for the quartermaster's stores and commissary stores taken from his farm in Missouri; but he cannot be allowed for those taken over in Arkansas, because the point at which they were taken was in a disloyal State. That was not my understanding of the law.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I submit to the Senator from Missouri whether it is material to discuss that question now. The bill under consideration provides for it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am speaking rather of the necessity of passing some such act as the Senator from Vermont now proposes. I do not know, for I have not examined his bill, that he does not go too far; I do not know but that much that has been said against this bill may be correct. We have had the subject up frequently before the Committee on Claims, and I am satisfied that some legislation ought to be had to remedy these difficulties.

I will state further, that my understanding is that the quartermaster's and commissary departments together have not allowed over one hundred and fifty or two hundred thousand dollars under this law. Indeed, I do not know that the amount allowed exceeds $50,000; it is, at any rate, a comparatively small sum.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is several hundred thousand.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the two departments?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think it can be over $200,000 altogether; and I know it was very small indeed, or I was so informed a short time ago by the quartermaster's department, because of the fact that most of the claims presented had been set aside under the construction given to the law by these two departments under an opinion given, as I understand, by Judge Holt or some of the law officers of the Government.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not want to spend one moment of the time of the Senate, because it is very desirable that the bill should pass, but I wish to say, in reply to the Senator from Illinois, that the amendment which I offer is, I think, a safe one, and upon principle is right. I have modified it by inserting the words "and used," so that it shall read, "for quartermaster's and commissary stores furnished to, or taken and used by, the Army of the United States, under and by direction of any officer acting at the time under competent authority."

Is it right to say that they shall not be paid for, simply because the agent of the quartermaster's department or commissary department has not taken them, but a major general has directed them to be taken? The fact that the property is taken from a man true to the Union, and used by the Government, is the reason we pay for it. If the evidences were sufficient now, if the vouchers were sufficient, it would not be necessary to have any law on the subject. I do not think the decision of the Quartermaster General ought to be conclusive; but if the accounting officers find a claim to be right under the law it should be allowed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not satisfied that this bill ought to pass. No doubt the passage of it will involve the expenditure of millions of dollars, and I very much doubt the expediency of putting this vast expenditure of money entirely beyond the control or the reach of Congress. Certain claims under $500 are to be presented to the proper Departments of the Government, and claims exceeding $500 are to be submitted to the Court of Claims, and so the entire matter is put under the control of the Departments and of the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is House bill No. 513.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for printing the reports of Major Generals William T. Sherman, George H. Thomas, John Pope, J. G. Foster, A. Pleasonton, and E. A. Hitchcock, made to the joint committee on the conduct of the war, together with such other reports as may be received by the commencement of the next session of Congress.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 477) further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. E. B. WASHBURN of Illinois, Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. DONALD C. McRUER of California, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 526) for the relief of the heirs of Horace I. Hodges;

A bill (H. R. No. 531) for the relief of the legal representatives of Major John A. Whitall, late paymaster in the United States Army, deceased; on account of lost or stolen vouchers; and

A bill (H. R. No. 692) increasing the pensions of widows and orphans, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following Senate bill and joint resolution without amendment:

A bill (S. No. 225) for the relief of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 100) for the restoration of Lieutenant Commander Richard L. Law, United States Navy, to the active list from the reserved list.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 52) to provide for the expenses attending the exhibition of the products of industry of the United States at the Exposition at Paris in 1867, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. N. P. BANKS of Massachusetts, Mr. SAMUEL S. MARSHALL of Illinois, and Mr. R. P. SPALDING of Ohio, managers at the same on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; which thereupon received the signature of the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 492) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 661) changing the name of Emil Cohen;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) to authorize the distribution of surplus copies of the American State Papers in the custody of the Secretary of the Interior;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 166) to pay the State of Vermont the sum expended for the protection of the frontier against the invasion from Canada in 1864; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 108) for the relief of Samuel Norris.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1865; which, with the accompanying documents, on motion of Mr. TRUMBULL, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 692) increasing the pensions of widows and orphans, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. No. 526) for the relief of the heirs of Horace I. Hodges—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. No. 531) for the relief of the legal representatives of Major John A. Whitall, late paymaster in the United States Army, deceased, on account of lost or stolen vouchers—to the Committee on Claims.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION LAW.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 477) further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House, agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The motion was agreed to.

PARIS UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 52) to provide for the expenses attending the exhibition of the products of industry of the United States at the Exposition at Paris in 1867, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL TAXATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 513) to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, beginning with the following clause of the ninth section:

That section ninety-three [of the act of June 30, 1864] be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that all goods, wares, and merchandise, or articles manufactured or made (except refined petroleum, refined coal oil, gold and silver, spirituous and malt liquors, manufactured tobacco, snuff, and cigars) by any person or firm, where the product shall not exceed the rate of $1,000 per annum, and shall be made or produced by the labor of such person or firm, or by his or their family, shall be, and are hereby, exempt from tax; where the product shall exceed such rate and not exceed the rate of $3,000, the tax shall be levied, assessed, and collected only upon the excess above the rate of $1,000 per annum; and in all other cases the whole annual product, including any business or transaction where one party has been furnished with materials or any part thereof, and employed by another party to manufacture, make, or finish the goods, wares, and merchandise, or articles, paying or promising to pay therefor, and to whom the same are returned when so made and finished, shall be assessed and the tax paid thereon by the producer or manufacturer: Provided, That whenever a producer or manufacturer shall use or consume, or shall remove for consumption or use, any articles, goods, wares, or merchandise, which, if removed for sale, would be liable to taxation, he shall be assessed upon the salable value of the articles, goods, wares, or merchandise so used, or so removed for consumption or use.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause by striking out "or" before "made," in line twenty-one hundred and eight, and inserting "or produced" after "made;" so as to read, "all goods, wares, and merchandise, or articles manufactured, made, or produced," &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move, after the word "oil," in line twenty-one hundred and nine, to insert "cotton;" so as to read, "except refined petroleum, refined coal oil, cotton, gold, and silver," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance also proposed, in line twenty-one hundred and thirty, to strike out "upon the salable value of," and insert "for the tax upon."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. At the close of line twenty-one hundred and thirty-two I move to insert "but naphtha, the product of the distillation of petroleum, and other similar bituminous substances, when used or consumed on the premises for fuel or cleaning."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I presume that is all right; but would it not be better to put it in the free list?

Mr. SHERMAN. This proviso provides that where the producer consumes a portion of his own manufacture he shall still pay the tax. I propose to except naphtha consumed in the process of distillation. I think this is probably the best place for it, because it is an exception to this proviso.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of the ninth section of the bill, as follows:

That section ninety-four be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that upon the articles, goods, wares, and merchandise hereinafter mentioned, except where otherwise provided, which shall be produced and sold, or be manufactured or made and sold, or be consumed or used by the manufacturer or producer thereof, or removed for consumption, or for delivery to others than agents of the manufacturer or producer within the United States or Territories thereof, there shall be assessed, collected, and paid the following taxes, to be paid by the producer or manufacturer thereof, that is to say:

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert the words "or use" after "consumption" in line twenty-one hundred and forty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made.

The next item was read, as follows:

On candles, of whatever material made, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The next item was read, as follows:

On gas, illuminating, made of coal wholly or in part, or any other material, when the product shall not be above two hundred thousand cubic feet per month, a tax of ten cents per one thousand cubic feet; when the product shall be above two and not exceeding five hundred thousand cubic feet per month, a tax of fifteen cents per one thousand cubic feet; when the product shall be above five hundred thousand and not exceeding five million cubic feet per month, a tax of twenty cents per one thousand cubic feet; when the product shall be above five millions, a tax of twenty-five cents per one thousand cubic feet. And the general average of the monthly product for the year preceding the return required by this act shall regulate the rate of tax herein imposed. And where any gas-works have not been in operation for the next year preceding the return as aforesaid, then the rate shall be regulated upon the estimated average of the monthly product: Provided, That the product required to be returned by law by any gas company shall be understood to be, in addition to the gas consumed by said company or other party, the product charged in the bills actually rendered by the gas company during the month preceding the return: Provided further, That all gas furnished for lighting street lamps or for other purposes, and not measured, and all gas made for and used by any hotel, inn, tavern, and private dwelling-house, shall be subject to tax whatever the amount of product, and may be estimated; and if the returns in any case shall be understated or underestimated, it shall be the duty of the assistant assessor of the district to increase the same as he shall deem just and proper: And provided further, That gas companies located within the corporate limits of any city or town, whether in the district or otherwise, or so located as to compete with each other, shall pay the rate of tax imposed by law upon the company having the largest production.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line twenty-one hundred and fifty-nine the word "regulate" should be "determine;" and in line twenty-one hundred and sixty-two the words "regulated upon" should be "determined by."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those corrections will be made.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this item by inserting after "return," in line twenty-one hundred and sixty-eight, at the end of the first proviso, these words:

And all gas companies whose price is fixed by law are authorized to add the tax herein imposed to the price per thousand feet on gas sold.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend the amendment by adding, "and all such companies which have heretofore contracted to furnish gas to municipal corporations are in like manner authorized to add such tax to such contract price."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I approve the principle of the amendment, but I suggest to the Senator from Maine whether contracts made since the passage of the first law ought not to be excepted. There may have been contracts made within the last year.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suspect there are none. They have been very careful about that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit whether it ought not to read in this wise: "all gas companies whose price is fixed by law or by contract made prior to July, 1864," the date of the passage of the previous act.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think there is any danger about that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-one hundred and eighty-one to insert the word "same" before "district."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

The next amendment reported by the committee was in line twenty-one hundred and eighty-three, after the word "production" at the end of the clause, to insert:

And provided further, That coal tar and ammoniacal liquor produced in the manufacture of illuminating gas, and the products of the redistillation of coal tar, and the products of the manufacture of ammoniacal liquor thus produced shall be exempt from duty.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend that by striking out "duty" and inserting "tax" at the end of line twenty-one hundred and eighty-eight.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next item was read, as follows:

On illuminating, lubricating, or other mineral oils, marking not less than thirty-six nor more than fifty-nine degrees Baume's hydrometer, the product of the distillation, redistillation, or refining of crude petroleum, twenty cents per gallon; and all such oils between the specific gravity, by Baume's test, of thirty-six and fifty-nine degrees, inclusive, shall be deemed refined illuminating oil, and any person or persons who, for purposes of sale or consumption, shall mix any of the heavier paraffine oils with illuminating oils, or with naphtha, or either one with the other, shall be deemed manufacturers of illuminating oil, and taxed as such, and said oil thus mixed, either with or without further distillation, shall be subject to a tax of twenty cents per gallon, if, after said mixing or distillation, the product marks, by Baume's hydrometer, between said points of thirty-six and fifty-nine degrees, inclusive.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out "purposes," in line twenty-one hundred and ninety-six, and to insert "the purpose."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made, no objection being interposed.

The committee further proposed to amend in line twenty-one hundred and ninety-eight, after the word "with" to insert "such."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made, there being no objection.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

On illuminating, lubricating, or other mineral oils, marking not less than thirty-six nor more than fifty-nine degrees Baume's hydrometer, the exclusive product of the refining of crude oil produced by a single distillation of coal, shale, asphaltum, peat, or other bituminous substances, not otherwise provided for, ten cents per gallon.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

On oil, naphtha, benzine, benzole, or gasoline, marking more than fifty-nine degrees Baume's hydrometer, the product of the distillation, redistillation, or refining of crude petroleum, or of crude oil produced by a single distillation of coal, shale, peat, asphaltum, or other bituminous substances, a tax of ten cents per gallon: Provided, That distillers and refiners of illuminating, lubricating, or other mineral oil, naphtha, benzine, benzole, or gasoline, shall be subject to all the provisions of law applicable to distillers of spirits, with regard to special taxes, bonds, returns, assessments, removing to and withdrawing from warehouses, liens, penalties, drawbacks, and all other provisions designed for the purpose of ascertaining the quantity distilled and securing the payment of duties, so far as the same may, in the judgment of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and under regulations prescribed by him, be deemed necessary for that purpose: And provided further, That distillers and refiners of coal or mineral oil, whose product shall not exceed twenty-five barrels per day, on a monthly average, shall not be required to make returns oftener than once in thirty days.

The Committee on Finance proposed an amendment to this clause, in line twenty-two hundred and twenty-two to insert the word "forfeitures" before "drawbacks," and in line twenty-two hundred and twenty-four to strike out "duties" and insert "taxes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next item, to which no amendment was proposed, was read, namely:

On spirits of turpentine, ten cents per gallon.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

On coffee, roasted or ground, on all ground spices and dry mustard, and upon all articles intended for use as substitutes for or as adulterations of coffee, spices, or mustard, and upon all compounds and mixtures prepared for sale, or intended for use and sale as coffee, spices, or mustard, or as substitutes therefor, one cent per pound: Provided, That the exemption of $1,000 in annual value of product manufactured shall not apply to any of the above-specified articles.

The Committee on Finance reported on amendment to this item.

The Secretary read the following items:

On molasses produced from the sugar-cane, and not from sorghum or imphee, a tax of three cents per gallon.

On sirup of molasses or sugar-cane juice, when removed from the plantation, concentrated molasses or melado, and cistern bottoms, of sugar produced from the sugar-cane and not made from sorghum or imphee, a tax of three fourths of one cent per pound.

On sugar not above number twelve Dutch standard in color, produced from the sugar-cane and not from sorghum or imphee, other than those produced by the refiner, a tax of one cent per pound.

On sugars above number twelve and not above number eighteen Dutch standard in color, produced directly from the sugar-cane and not from sorghum or imphee, a tax of one and one half cent per pound.

On sugar above number eighteen Dutch standard in color, produced directly from the sugar-cane and not from sorghum or imphee, a tax of two cents per pound.

The Committee on Finance proposed an amendment to these items, to strike out the words "and not from sorghum or imphee" wherever they occur.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

On the gross amount of the sales of sugar refiners, including all the products of their manufactories or refineries, a tax of two and one half of one per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That every person shall be regarded as a sugar refiner, and pay the taxes required by law, whose business it is to advance the quality and value of sugar upon which a tax or duty has been paid, by melting and recrystallization, or by liquoring, claying, or other washing process, or by any other chemical or mechanical means, or who shall by boiling or other process advance the quality or value of molasses, concentrated molasses or melado, upon which a tax has been paid.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to this clause, in line twenty-two hundred and sixty-six, after the word "tax," to strike out the words "or duty."

Mr. FESSENDEN. That amendment should be disagreed to. In that particular connection, the words "or duty" should remain in the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The words "or duty" should be inserted after the word "tax" in line twenty-two hundred and seventy-one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

On sugar candy and all confectionery made wholly or in part of sugar, valued at not exceeding twenty cents per pound, a tax of two cents per pound including the tax; exceeding twenty and not exceeding forty cents per pound including the tax, a tax of four cents per pound; when exceeding forty cents per pound, including the tax, or sold by the box, package, or otherwise than by the pound, a tax of ten per cent. ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance proposed an amendment to this clause, in line twenty-two hundred and seventy-four, after the word "pound" to insert the words "including the tax," and after the word "pound," at the end of the same line, to strike out the words "including the tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the following items, to which the Committee on Finance proposed no amendment, namely:

On chocolate and cocoa prepared, a tax of one and a half cent per pound.

On gun-cotton, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On gunpowder, and all explosive substances used for mining, blasting, artillery, or sporting purposes, not otherwise provided for, when valued at thirty-eight cents per pound or less, including the tax, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem; and when valued at above thirty-eight cents per pound including the tax, a tax of ten cents per pound.

On varnish or Japan, made wholly or in part of gum copal, or other gums or substances, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert after the above clauses the following:

On sulphate of barytes, a tax of twelve cents per one hundred pounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the following items, to which no amendment was proposed, namely:

On glue and gelatine of all descriptions, in the solid state, a tax of one cent per pound.

On glue and cement, made wholly or in part of glue, sold in the liquid state, a tax of forty cents per gallon.

On pins, solid head or other, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On photographs, ambrotypes, daguerreotypes, or other pictures taken by the action of light, and not hereinafter exempted from tax, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On screws, commonly called wood screws, a tax of ten per cent. ad valorem.

On clocks and time-pieces, and on clock movements, when sold without being cased, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On all soaps valued at above three cents per pound, not perfumed, and on salt-water soap made of coconut oil, a tax of five mills per pound.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

On all other perfumed soaps, a tax of three cents per pound.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out "other" before "perfumed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The following items, to which the Committee on Finance reported no amendment, were read, namely:

On all uncompound chemical productions not otherwise provided for, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On essential oils of all descriptions, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On all furniture, or other articles made of wood, sold in the rough or unfinished, not otherwise provided for, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That all furniture, or other articles made of wood, previously assessed, and a tax paid thereon, shall be assessed a tax of five per cent. ad valorem upon the increased value only thereof when sold in a finished condition.

On salt, a tax of three cents per one hundred pounds.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment, to insert after the above items the following:

On reapers, mowers, threshing machines, and separators, corn-shellers, wooden-ware, mills, and the machinery for the manufacture of sugar, sirup, and molasses from sorghum, imphee, beet, and corn, and machinery driven by horse power, three per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to amend that amendment. The word "separators" should be "separators," and after the word "machinery" the words "exclusively adapted to be" should be inserted; so as to read, "and machinery exclusively adapted to be driven by horse power."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CLARK in the chair.) That amendment will be made if there be no objection; and the question is on the amendment of the committee, as amended.

Mr. GRIMES. Upon that question I shall be constrained to ask a separate vote of the Senate. I should like to have the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. In looking at the bill as it came from the House of Representatives I notice on page 166 that "reapers, mowers, threshing-machines, and separators, corn-shellers, and wooden-ware" were placed in the free list; but this amendment proposes to subject them to a tax of three per cent. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. It is striking directly at the people among whom I live in a very severe way, and I hope the Senate will not agree to it. I notice upon page 166 that the committee have amended the bill as it came from the House by inserting "saws, looms, spinning-machines, pumps, steam-engines, hot-air and hot-water furnaces, and sewing-machines" in the free list, while they have amended the same page by striking from the free list "reapers, mowers, threshing-machines, and separators, corn-shellers, and wooden-ware," and now they propose to put them in the tax list. I hope the Senate will not consent to it. These "reapers, mowers, threshing-machines, and separators, corn-shellers, wooden-ware, mills, and the machinery for the manufacture of sugar, sirup, and molasses from sorghum, imphee," &c., are absolutely indispensable in the northwestern States. We cannot do anything without them. You might just as well tax our plows and harrows. The scarcity of labor in that country is such that we cannot do our work otherwise than by this machinery.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Has the Senator suffered very much within the last two or three years as the tax stood?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Our people have been compelled to pay enormously high prices for these articles during the last two or three years, and the sellers of them allege, as one reason for it, the amount of tax imposed upon their production and upon the articles used in the production. They have doubled in price, I think I am justified in saying, within the last two or three years. I think my colleague will bear me out in that assertion.

Mr. GRIMES. While agricultural products have been diminished in price.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, the tax last year from this kind of machinery, I am told, amounted to six or seven hundred thousand dollars. It is a pretty important item. The answer to the objection made is simply this: the amendment striking out this tax was not reported by the Committee of Ways and Means in the House of Representatives, but was made in the House, where everything that had the most remote connection with a farm, especially with a western farm, went with a rush throughout. The Committee of Ways and Means struck down the duty from six per cent. to three per cent., took off one half of it. When that was done there was not a remonstrance against the tax, or a petition or a request from anybody to take it off; they were perfectly satisfied with it as it stood; but the motion was made in the House in the interest of the farmers in the West, and it went upon that principle and for that reason. That was all that was said about it. Why should we not take the tax off shovels, and a great many other agricultural implements which, being manufactures, pay taxes, as well as these machines? On some of them the tax is taken off, and they are put upon the free list; but a great many continue to pay the tax from day to day. A shovel is just as much an agricultural implement as one of these articles.

The manufacture of every one of these articles is a monopoly. They are in the hands of patentees who make enormous profits, who have the exclusive control of them, and manage them to satisfy themselves, and can fix their own prices; and the taking off of this tax will not be for the benefit of the farmers, but will be for the benefit of those who sell the machines. They may make the tax a pretense for high prices now; but they will make some other pretense, such as the high wages for workmen and matters of that kind, if the tax is taken off, as an excuse for not lowering the price. If we take off the tax the money which we now get from it will be simply presented to them. That is the amount of it. No petition or remonstrance has been received from anybody against this tax.

Sir, there is no class of men—and they are very large and very numerous—that are so much favored throughout this bill, in every particular, as the agricultural interest. Everything is in their favor. I can understand very well why a noise is made about it. The agricultural interest has so many more votes than any other, that it is always very important to make a stir in favor of the agricultural interest. It is so in my section of the country—not so much so, perhaps, as in others. Perhaps we have not so large a portion of the population engaged in farming. That is all the difference.

Mr. TRUMBULL. More engaged in ship-building, I presume.

Mr. FESSENDEN. More engaged in ship-building than in agriculture, I take it. But there is not an interest anywhere that is so looked after and so guarded, so sought to be protected in everything, and so well protected as the farming interest, not only in the West, but in the North, or wherever they are. It is like the question of the soldiers' bounties, everybody is afraid to vote against it, because the soldiers have so many votes, and they may be thrown against a man.

Mr. HOWE. What is the special protection to farmers by this system of taxes?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I cannot stop to enumerate; I state the fact. The Senator will find it out if he examines the bill. At the present time I cannot make a long speech enumerating them. The fact is so, and it always has been so, from the beginning. It is so in this bill. The tax is taken off very many agricultural implements, and they are put on the free list. Farmers do not pay, as a matter of fact, anything like, under the income tax, what every other class of the community does, and cannot be made to pay, because the law cannot be manipulated so as to make them pay, whatever may be the provision. The bill that was last passed, I believe, allowed them to support their families out of their farms, and they pay upon the surplus, while everybody else had to pay upon what he receives, without reference to the fact that he supports his family out of it.

Mr. GRIMES. In this bill?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The last bill. With regard to this bill, we have left it just as it was before; we have struck out the alterations made in the House. That is the fact with regard to it. The Senate will of course do what it likes in relation to the matter, but that is the simple truth with reference to it. Nobody complained; nobody asked any alteration when this tax was fixed at three per cent. It is an important item of revenue; and if you strike off this tax, it will be merely for the benefit of monopolists who hold patents and manufacture these machines, although it is put on the ground of aiding the farmers. If you take the tax off these machines, why not take it off shovels and everything of that sort? You cannot make the distinction.

With reference to the alteration that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KIRKWOOD] says was made on page 166, it was no alteration except by specification, and the specification there made is the castings for machinery, not the machinery itself. Castings for all kinds of machinery, as specified there, are placed on the free list.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not wish it to be understood that the farmers are seeking any exemption from the payment of their proper share of the public burdens; and as one of the representatives from a purely agricultural State I must repel that idea.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator misapprehends me. I do not suppose that the farmers are seeking any such thing. It is the representatives of the farmers, not the farmers themselves. The farmers do not ask for it. They are willing to pay the tax.

Mr. GRIMES. I am unwilling to have anybody infer that I, as one of the representatives of the farmers, seek or desire any such thing. If it be necessary that everything shall be taxed in the hands of the farmer that is necessary for him to use in order to produce his crops, I am content that that tax shall be levied, provided it be levied upon everything else that is necessary, both in commerce and in manufactures as well as in agriculture. My whole objection to this proposition is, that it seems to look, from the general scope and tenor of the bill, that there are exceptions in favor of manufactures and commerce to a very considerable extent in the free list, while there are not corresponding exemptions to the agriculturists and the manufacture of the implements used in agriculture.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator point them out?

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir, I think I can. On page 163, in the free list, I find "masts, spars, ship and vessel blocks, and treenail wedges, and deck-plugs, cordage, ropes, and cables made of vegetable fiber." That includes almost all of the rigging of a ship. In addition to those the "hulls of ships and other vessels" are exempt. All I have to say in regard to that is, that if it be necessary to the protection of commerce, to encourage the production of ships in the commercial sections of the country, I am content to exempt them; but I want a corresponding relief afforded to the other important interests of the country.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I turn the Senator's attention to page 165, line one hundred and seven. He will find there, "plows, cultivators, harrows, straw and hay cutters, planters, seed-drills, horse-rakes, hand-rakes, cotton-gins, grain-cradles, and winnowing-mills." They are exempt.

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir; a plow that costs eight dollars and a shovel that costs one dollar are exempt.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No; shovels are taxed.

Mr. GRIMES. The rake that costs fifty cents is exempt. I suppose the secret of its exemption really is, if we could only get at the motives that prompt the Committee of Ways and Means to recommend it, that it costs more to collect the tax than the tax is worth.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir, by no manner of means. They could be taxed as manufactures at the factories. Take plows. What is there a larger manufacture of in this country than of plows? What would pay a larger amount, comparatively? Everybody must have a plow.

Mr. GRIMES. Everybody must have a plow; but then there is not one tenth of the capital locked up in plows in our section of the country that there is in reapers and mowers.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They must buy the plows.

Mr. GRIMES. They buy the plows; but I say there is ten times as much capital invested in this other machinery necessarily, and we are compelled to do it in order to save our crops. The same rule does not apply to a reaper and mower that does apply to a plow or a harrow or any of these small agricultural implements.

The Senator says that these reapers and mowers and various other agricultural implements are in the hands of monopolists; that they have patents for them. It is true some of them are. Some of them are not, however. But there are different kinds of patents for each one of these particular implements, and those patentees are in rivalry, the one with the other; so that they have not really an opportunity to oppress the agricultural community, as they would have if there was only one variety of each one of those patents. The effect of the imposition of this tax has been to increase, as my colleague has told you, nearly double, the value of each one of these particular implements.

Mr. FESSENDEN. How could it be?

Mr. GRIMES. I cannot say by what process it is done. I am only stating the fact.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I deny the fact. The fact cannot be so. I have no question the price has doubled; that may be; but there are a great many other matters that have gone into the increase of price—the increase of the rate of wages, and of all sorts of materials, and everything of that sort.

Mr. GRIMES. I believe the tax itself amounted to about twenty-five dollars on a reaper or mower. If we omit the tax it certainly would reduce the price that much.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No; they would find some excuse to charge just as much.

Mr. GRIMES. We are willing to run that risk. As this is the only proposition there is in the whole bill, it seems to me, in which the section of country that I have the honor to live in is peculiarly interested, I trust we shall not have this burden thrown upon us, if the free list, at any rate, is to remain as it now is.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The Senator from Maine, I am satisfied, cannot understand the condition of our people with regard to these matters. It is substantially the same as taxing men in our State. There is not one acre out of a hundred of our wheat that is cut in any other way than with a reaper. There is not one acre out of a hundred that is cut in any other way than with a mower. We have not the men in our State to collect our crops without these machines. If you would give us your superabundant population to do the work, we should be content; but these machines are used by us instead of men. Without them we could not gather our crops at all. We could not begin to save the crops we put in the ground unless we had this machinery. It is just like taxing men in a State where men are abundant for you, in a State like ours where they are scarce, to tax these machines.

Mr. BROWN. It is taxing labor.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Yes, sir, it is substantially the same thing.

Let me call the attention of the Senator from Maine again to this change on page 166, lines one hundred and forty, one hundred and forty-one, and one hundred and forty-two. He says it is merely a specification instead of generalization. The purpose is to exempt spindles and castings; but if he will look at the list closely he will see that as the clause stood originally it exempted spindles and castings for machinery; but now it is made to specify "saws, looms, spinning-machines, hot-air and hot-water furnaces, pumps, steam-engines, and sewing-machines." Spindles and castings enter into mowers and reapers, but in this specification they are left out, while these articles, used East, I apprehend, are inserted. If the word "machinery" had been left in the clause perhaps the spindles and castings in mowers and reapers would have been exempted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I can state to the Senator that the clause as it stood was thought to cover too much. The amendment came from the Committee of Ways and Means of the House, putting in what they intended to cover on that subject, and what they had taken testimony upon. We have just put in what they intended it should be originally, and what they understood to be necessary.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The effect of it, however, would be that while the spindles and castings for a mower and reaper would be taxed, the spindles and castings for a spinning-machine would not be taxed. I must say that it would be hard for us on the west side of the Mississippi river to render a reason for that, why the spindles and castings in a spinning-machine should be exempt from taxation and the spindles and castings in a reaping-machine or a mowing-machine should be taxed.

Mr. ANTHONY. Spinning-machines are not exempt.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Spindles and castings for spinning-machines are exempt by this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The reason is that one pays five per cent. and the other only three.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. They are put in the free list here.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But they are to pay five per cent. tax when made up. It is to avoid a double tax. The clause goes on to provide, "and not sold or used for any other purposes, and upon which a tax is assessed and paid on the article of which the casting is a part." It is to avoid paying two taxes.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Let me call the attention of the Senator to another item or two on page 163. "Machines driven by horse power and used exclusively for cutting fire-wood, staves, and shingle-bolts, and hand-saws" are exempt from taxation; while in the matter we are considering machinery driven by horse power is not exempt.

Mr. FESSENDEN. "And used exclusively" for what follows.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The clause reads, "machines driven by horse power and used exclusively for cutting fire-wood, staves, and shingle-bolts, and hand-saws."

Mr. FESSENDEN. "And used exclusively for cutting fire-wood, staves," &c.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. We do not make staves and shingle-bolts out in our country; but our machinery driven by horse power is to be taxed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. You buy them and use them; do you not?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Yes; but we may use machinery driven by horse power for other purposes, and that machinery is taxed with us when it is not taxed elsewhere.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The design is to exempt some small articles that everybody uses, instead of large corporations which make large amounts of money. That is the difference exactly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before the vote is 39TH CONG. 1ST SESS.—No. 208.

taken on the amendment of the committee I desire to amend it by striking out the word "sorghum;" and I will state the reason why I do so. The production of sugar and molasses from this growth is rather an experiment as yet, and the machinery necessary for the production is being changed from time to time as experiments show the necessity of change. Every year there is some improvement made in this machinery. It is not like that class of machinery which is supposed to have approached perfection. The success in the growth of sorghum and the production of molasses and sugar from it has been very great. It has now become a production of much importance in the West; but nobody supposes that the machinery is yet perfected. A great deal of expense is to be incurred in experiments upon it. I shall vote against the entire amendment of the committee; but as the attempt to defeat it may not succeed, I desire to strike out this word "sorghum." I think there are peculiar reasons for it.

Mr. HOWARD. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that he may as well include the word "imphee" in his motion, and strike them both out. I believe imphee is but a species of sorghum.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. HOWARD. It belongs to the same family of plants and produces sirup, which is supposed to be a little richer, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HOWARD. I move to amend that by including the word "imphee."

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will accept that amendment if the same reasons apply. I do not know much about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan is not in order at the present time, the amendment of the Senator from Indiana being an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understood the Senator from Indiana to say he would accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana may modify his own amendment as may be agreeable to him.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I accept the modification of the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I presume more of these reapers and mowers are used in the State which I in part represent than in any other State in the Union. We could not carry on the agriculture of Illinois to the extent that we now do without this machinery. Farming, to a very great extent, is carried on upon our prairies through the instrumentality of machinery. We could not gather our crops at all if we had to rely upon manual labor, as in former years, to gather them; and hence we are very much interested in the manufacture of this machinery. These machines are manufactured extensively in my State. The productions of that State, as we all know, go to support the people of the whole country. They are not peculiar to Illinois. The beef and pork that are fattened there and the wheat that is gathered there go to the sustenance of the people of the whole Union, in the State of Maine as well as elsewhere. The ship-builders of Maine, who are entirely free from taxes upon all the articles which they use—

Mr. FESSENDEN. They are taxed more than any other set of men in the country.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They are on the free list in this bill. "Masts, spars, ship and vessel blocks, and trenail wedges, and deck-plugs, cordage, ropes, and cables made of vegetable fiber," and also "sails" and "chains" are all upon the free list in this bill. The Senator from Maine very candidly told us that not so many of the people in his State were engaged in agriculture as in some other States of the Union, and therefore he did not feel this pressure so strongly as some others did in favor of the agricultural interest of the country, which he rather seemed to intimate was a pressure that operated upon Senators to a greater extent than it ought to do; but he seems to have felt the pressure of that class of people who are largely engaged in ship-building in his own State. At any rate, we find that persons engaged in that branch of industry, which occupies very much of the labor of Maine, are not taxed on the articles I have mentioned and many others.

I do not wish to go over this free list. The House of Representatives placed reapers and mowers in the free list. The Committee on Finance has thought proper to change it. I trust the Senate will not agree to that change. I understand that in the House of Representatives this was done deliberately. The Senator from Maine is entirely mistaken in supposing that no complaints have come from the manufacturers. I have had quite a number of letters from different parts of my State from persons engaged in the manufacture of these implements. I did not send them to the Committee on Finance, because I had not the least apprehension, after seeing that the bill upon due consideration had passed the House of Representatives with a provision placing these articles upon the free list, that there was any probability that the Senate was going to change it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I did not say that there was no effort made to change it. The tax heretofore was six per cent. There was an effort made to reduce it. The committee of the House reduced it to three per cent. After the modification was made reducing it one half I say they were perfectly satisfied; there was no complaint whatever.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Perhaps the best answer I can give to that would be to read a letter which I have in my hand from Rockford, in Illinois, from a manufacturer of reapers and mowers, in which he makes a statement why reapers and mowers should be placed on the free list. The writer says:

"I write to ask your attention to the tax on agricultural implements, more particularly reapers and mowers."

"The House have placed them on the free list, where I think they belong, and I hope to see the Senate continue them there, and believe it but just to us that they do so."

"I have been in the business since 1854; paid into the revenue office last year over $28,000, my losses exceeding that sum."

He paid a revenue of $23,000 last year, and lost more than that sum last year in the manufacture of these articles.

Mr. FESSENDEN. By bad debts?

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir:

"Because of excessive taxes and an unfortunate year."

"From all that I learn, my competitors have met about the same success, in proportion to their business."

"Our business is, at best, particularly hazardous for the following reasons:

"1. We must buy the stock at the close of harvest to manufacture for sale during the next harvest."

"2. Our sales are crowded in less than sixty days, three fourths of them taking place between June 10 and July 10."

"3. If our product is not done in time to be shipped to points of sale when the season commences, it must be held a year, for the next season's sale."

"4. We cannot know what the demand will be, but must be prepared to meet it when sales commence."

"5. Sales are governed by the crops, and if crops are discouraging the farmers do not buy."

"6. The farmer is seldom prepared to pay down, but requires from six to eighteen months' credit upon the sale of a reaper to him."

"7. Interest, insurances, storage, commissions, and losses are a heavy expense, for the above reasons, in the reaper and agricultural business than in any business the capital of which may be turned every sixty or ninety days."

We cannot add the tax to the price of our product. Reaper men tried to do it last year, and utterly failed."

Mr. FESSENDEN. That does not agree very well with what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kirkwood] said; and I leave the Senator from Illinois to settle that question with him. The Senator from Iowa said that the price was increased one half in consequence of the tax.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This letter goes on:

"While our business is large, the per cent. of profit is small, and the charge of a small per cent. either way makes a large sum difference in the year's result.

"Thus, on three thousand reapers, netting, in sale, $160 each, the tax at six per cent. amounts to $28,800, and is of itself a handsome profit.

"We are doing in our business, according to the best of our judgment, with good facilities and rigid economy, but unless the tax on sales be rebated in our business we can have little hope for a profit this year.

"As a class, the reaper men are enterprising and liberal men; were so especially during the war, giving freely of time and money for the raising of men and forwarding the interests of the Government. Do not want to shrink from taxes, but like to, and will, stand up to the rack as far as it is in their power to do so, but if they cannot do business and pay their taxes at a profit they must stop paying taxes sooner or later."

I will not read further from this letter; I have read it in answer to the Senator from Maine, who said that there was no complaint from these manufacturers. I have another letter from another portion of the State, three hundred miles distant, also from manufacturers, upon this same subject.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is complaining of the six per cent. tax; is it not?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It was written after the bill had passed the House, and it is in favor of having them upon the free list. It contradicts specifically the statement of the Senator from Maine. The writer says that they ought not to be taxed. I think the whole country is interested in having these articles on the free list. These are the particular articles in which my State, perhaps, is more interested than any other State in the Union, though I think the whole Union is interested.

Now, in regard to the manufacture of sugar, we are endeavoring to introduce into the West, into Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, and these other States, the culture of sorghum. We are raising a good deal of molasses in those States, and making some sugar. It is with difficulty that you can get a sorghum mill put up. The production is in its infancy; and there is not business enough to keep a mill employed all the time. It wants to be encouraged. It is very desirable to have these mills erected wherever we can; and it is the last article that should be taken out of the free list and upon which a tax should be imposed at the present time. I trust that the Senate will not agree to this amendment of the committee, but that we shall suffer the bill, in this respect, to remain as it came to us from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HOWE. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, and yet that amendment of itself will not help the interest that he and I both desire to aid. It will require another amendment, I suppose. I believe by the bill as it stands the effect of striking out the word "sorghum" here would be to subject this kind of machinery to the tax imposed on other manufactures. I shall vote for the amendment, however, with the expectation that those articles will be transferred to the free list. I think it very essential that if any kind of manufacture should be protected that of these machines should. It is true, as the Senator from Indiana has remarked, that this product is in its infancy, is now on the footing of an experiment. It is very desirable to everybody in the United States that it should be made a success, if possible, and I believe it is the invariable policy of the United States to protect these enterprises which promise success, but which need aid in their infancy to insure that success. I see here that wine made from grapes is placed upon the free list. I suppose it is upon the idea that it is of general and national interest to protect that product for the present while we are experimenting with it.

Mr. CONNESS. It is an agricultural crop, and all agricultural crops are exempt.

Mr. HOWE. Wine is not exactly an agricultural crop; I suppose grapes are, however. I think molasses is quite as essential as wine, though I do not object to either; they are both good in their place. But if we can raise our own molasses, I think we shall do quite as much for the public good as by raising our own wine; and if wine should be protected, I think the manufacture of molasses or sugar from sorghum should also be protected.

But I shall also vote against this whole amendment as reported by the committee. I dissent from the correctness of the statement made by the Senator from Maine, that the agricultural communities are especially protected by this or by any former tax bill. If they have received any such protection, I never have been able to discover it, and I do not think they have ever felt it. I do not know of anything that you put a tax upon, that they do not buy; and it is the almost inflexible rule, I believe it is the principle which guides all this taxation, that you will not put a tax on anything that cannot be charged over to the consumer and the purchaser. The very argument which is used here for putting a tax on this kind of machinery is that the manufacturers are protected by patents, so that they can inevitably charge over whatever you assess on it to the consumer. That is the rule, as I understand, which governs all this taxation. You tax nothing that the farmer does not buy. True, the manufacturer advances the tax to the Government, but he gets, in consideration of that advance, a sort of roving commission by which he is authorized to levy it back again on the community, with just such commissions as the market will enable him to charge for making the advance, and he does it. This manufacturing, I know, is generally in the eastern sections of the Union; but the West does its own share of the wearing out, the purchasing, the consuming. I have heard it said before that all these tax bills were peculiarly lenient upon the farmers. I have had occasion to deny it before, and I feel bound to deny it as often as I hear the statement. You tax their incomes, if they have any, just as you tax other incomes, and to precisely the same amount, and you exempt, I believe, precisely the same amount. You have done so heretofore. I have not looked at this bill; but I suppose it is done here. Wherever they buy an article that is taxed, they pay the tax just as others do.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I understand that if the amendment of the committee should be adopted, it will still be amendable; and as it involves two votes, I will withdraw my amendment, with the consent of the Senator from Michigan who modified it, until we see what shape the result of the vote on the committee's amendment will leave this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana withdraws his amendment. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to say just this: the class of machinery that is included within this amendment can be used but a very short time in the year, say for one month, and for the rest of the year it lies idle. It is entirely unlike machinery that is used in almost any other pursuit in that regard. The machinery that is found in manufacturing establishments is used constantly; the investment is not dead upon the hands of the purchaser for the greater portion of the year, as it is upon this class of machinery.

Mr. CHANDLER. I notice on the freelist a very large number of articles, and among others, these identical reapers and mowers. I find also "anvils," "barrels and casks other than those used for the reception of fluids; packing-boxes made of wood;" and also "plows, cultivators, harrows, straw and hay cutters, planters, seed-drills, horse-rakes, hand-rakes, cotton-gins, grain-cradles, and winnowing-mills." Then I find "reapers, mowers, threshing-machines, and separators, corn-shellers, and wooden-ware," and also "spokes, hubs, bows and felloes; poles, shafts, and arms for carriages or wagons;" "wooden tanks," "ships' masts," and so on through the list, including the very items that are here taxed. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine why these other articles will not as well bear a tax as mowers and reapers.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose the Senator can inform himself on that subject. The Senator is mistaken in regard to the whole of those matters. He does not notice the brackets around the words that strike them out.

Mr. CHANDLER. I know they are stricken out here. They were introduced into the free list in the House, but it is proposed to strike them out in the Senate. I notice that "fertilizers of all kinds" are placed in the free list, as the bill now stands. Why were not fertilizers stricken out? It is true that we do not use them in the Northwest, but in New England they do use them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That exception was made expressly for the agricultural interests of the country.

Mr. CHANDLER. I notice a long free list here. I was looking over the list carefully the other day. I believe sewing-machines are placed on the free list. If reapers, mowers, threshing-machines, separators, and corn-shellers can pay a tax, I am very certain sewing-machines and ships' masts can.

Mr. SHERMAN. Sewing-machines are not on the free list.

Mr. CHANDLER. I may be mistaken about them; but I have read sufficient to show that there is here made a distinction without a difference, and a distinction made against the Northwest. I do not suppose there is a threshing-machine in all New England.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is about as correct as most of what the Senator has said.

Mr. CHANDLER. I go there every year, and I never saw a threshing-machine in New England in my life. I will guaranty that there are not twenty in the whole of the New England States. I never saw one. They thresh with the flail, as they did forty years ago, and it does not take long to thresh out what they raise, with that. [Laughter.] But with us there is not a town without a goodly number of threshing-machines, and they are kept in constant use. I hope that these articles will be put back on the free list where the House placed them, and where they belong.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator seems to think that what he has seen he knows all about, and what he has not seen does not exist in the world. There are some things that he has seen.

Mr. CHANDLER. I never saw a threshing-machine in New England.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There are a few things he has not seen in the country, I presume. This, I believe, was about the only thing that we changed here. I stated the reason for it. I believe, if I am not mistaken, that it was done by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. There was one exception. I did not support it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I thought the Senator voted for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; I did not.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Perhaps it would have been surprising if the Senator had done so under the circumstances, he being a western man.

Now, with reference to the motion made by the Senator from Indiana, as I presume it will come up again, I propose simply to say a word. We really had some doubt whether the cultivation of sorghum and imphee had not reached such a point that there ought to be a tax levied upon the machinery used in that production as well as upon other things. The article itself is protected from the fact that all other sugars pay a heavy import duty; and whether this machinery could not pay a slight duty was a question. We could see no reason, the manufacture having advanced so far as it has, having been so much enlarged as it has, why the machinery for the manufacture should not be taxed just like the machinery for the manufacture of anything else. They put up their mills and they have machinery. Where the thing itself is protected by a heavy discriminating duty in its favor, and has increased and enlarged itself so much through all the section of the country where it is raised, it seemed to us to be enough protection without making any exception in favor of the machinery of the mills that were used to manufacture it. That was the simple reason upon which we acted with reference to that matter, and the reason holds good in my mind now.

I stated before the argument, as I understood it, in favor of taxing reapers and mowers. If the Senate is of a different opinion, I shall be entirely content with that opinion when expressed; but I really cannot see why articles of this description, manufactures so very large and so very extensive used for the production, to be sure, of the necessities of life in one particular, and perhaps those things that are most necessary to the support of life, should not be taxed moderately compared with other articles of the same description, especially when, as a general rule, they are in the hands of large establishments. I believe it is a very notorious fact that proprietors of the patents for these machines all get very rich.

Mr. GRIMES. Oh, no; nothing of the sort.

Mr. FESSENDEN. With those I have known it has been so; and I have known several. Some of them do at any rate.

One word more, sir. I should really like to understand which is the right side of the argument against this amendment. One Senator from the West—the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kirkwood]—rises here and deliberately informs us that this tax has added one half to the price of this machinery, and that these men in selling the machinery make the tax an excuse for raising the price. The Senator from Illinois rises and reads a letter from a manufacturer in which he says that they cannot and do not add the tax to the price, and gives that as a reason why we should exempt the manufacturer.

Mr. TRUMBULL. He says some tried it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He says they do not do it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. He says he does not do it, but some tried it and failed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Some tried it and failed, and therefore he could not, and he lays it down that it cannot be done; it is not added. Now, where does the rule apply in this matter? The argument seems to be double, but directly running one point against the other. The only trouble that I have about the matter is, that it is an important item with reference to the revenue. It raises some six or seven hundred thousand dollars; I do not know exactly the amount; but I was so informed. That being the case, and the tax being reduced one half, from six per cent. to three per cent., was satisfactory, I repeat, to those who represented this interest; and the movement to place these articles on the free list was made in the House, and not by the committee who made the examination, but contrary to the protest of the committee as to the necessity of the case. The Senate understand it perfectly, I suppose; the whole argument is before them; and they will undoubtedly do as they please.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to say one word in explanation of my vote. I shall vote for this amendment as it was reported by the committee, notwithstanding I recognize the force of some of the arguments that have been offered against the amendment—arguments derived from other portions of the free list. I am not certain but that an argument could be made upon this free list to prove that everything that is used or consumed in the country should be exempted from taxation. I am opposed to the extension of the free list, and I am ready to vote to reduce it. I believe it is bad policy to make this large free list, because it is impossible to do it without more or less discrimination for or against some particular class of persons, or some particular kind of business; and so long as it is necessary to maintain this system of taxation, it seems to me it ought to be made as equal in its operations as possible on all classes of the community and all kinds of business. I suppose that the object of this free list is chiefly to exempt those kinds of business that are in their infancy, that are experiments at this time, the success of which is somewhat doubtful. To that extent I would be willing to go with a free list; but I do not concur in the idea that ships and all sorts of things that are included in the free list ought to be exempted. I am in favor of reducing, rather than extending, the free list, and therefore I vote for this amendment, and will vote for other amendments of a similar nature if I have an opportunity to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Finance, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 10, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clark, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Fessenden, Guthrie, Henderson, Morgan, Van Winkle, and Williams—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Grimes, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane of Indiana, Poland, Pomeroy, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, and Yates—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bucknow, Cragin, Creswell, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Foster, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Ransley, Riddle, Salisbury, Sumner, Wiley, Wilson, and Wright—22.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

On senos, pumps, garden engines, hydraulic rams, a tax of three per cent. ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause by inserting the word "and" after "engines."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The alteration will be made.

The Secretary read the following items, to which no amendment was proposed, namely:

On tin-ware of all descriptions, not otherwise provided for, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That in all cases in which such ware shall be delivered to agents or peddlers employed by the manufacturer for the disposal of the same, such ware so delivered shall be deemed to have been sold at the time of delivery, and the tax to be paid thereon shall be computed upon the value known to the trade as the five-pound rate or price for tin-ware.

On all iron, not otherwise provided for, advanced beyond muck-bar, blooms, slabs, or loops, and not advanced beyond bars, and band, hoop, and sheet iron, not thinner than number eighteen wire-gauge, and plate iron not less than one eighth of an inch in thickness, a tax of three dollars per ton: Provided, That a ton shall, for all the purposes of this act, be deemed and taken to be two thousand pounds.

On band, hoop, and sheet iron, thinner than number eighteen wire-gauge, plate iron less than one eighth of an inch in thickness, and cut nails and spikes, not including nails, tacks, brads, or finishing nails, usually put up and sold in papers, whether in papers or otherwise, a tax of five dollars per ton: Provided, That rods, bands, hoops, sheets, plates, spikes, and nails, not including such as are usually put up in papers as before mentioned, manufactured from iron upon which the tax of three dollars has been levied and paid, shall be subject only to a tax of two dollars per ton in addition thereto, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

On stoves and hollow ware, in all conditions, whether rough, tinned, or enameled, and castings of iron, not otherwise provided for, a tax of three dollars per ton.

On tubes made of wrought iron, a tax of five dollars per ton.

On steam, locomotive, and marine engines, including the boilers, and on railroad cars, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That when the boilers, tubes, wheels, tire, axles, bells, shafts, cranks, wrists, or head-lights of such engines, or cars, shall have been once assessed, and a tax previously paid thereon, the amount so paid shall be deducted from the taxes on the finished engine or cars.

On boilers of all kinds, water tanks, sugar tanks, oil stills, sewing-machines, lathes, tools, planes, planing-machines, shafting and gearing, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On railings, gates, fences, furniture, and statuary made of iron, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On copper and brass tubes, nails, or rivets, sheet lead, and lead pipes and shot, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On goat, calf, kid, sheep, horse, hog, and dog skins, tanned or dressed in the rough, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On goat, calf, kid, sheep, horse, hog, and dog skins, curried or finished, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That all goat, calf, kid, sheep, horse, hog, and dog skins upon which duties or taxes have been actually paid, shall be assessed on the increased value only when curried or finished.

The next item was read, as follows:

On patent, enameled, and japanned leather and skins of every description, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That when a tax has been paid on the leather in the rough the duty or tax shall be assessed and paid only on the increased value.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out the words "duty or" before "tax," in line twenty-three hundred and ninety-three. The amendment was agreed to.

The following items were read:

On oil-dressed leather a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On leather of all descriptions, tanned or partially tanned in the rough, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On leather of all descriptions, curried or finished, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That all leather in the rough upon which duties or taxes have been actually paid shall be assessed on the increased value only when curried or finished.

No amendment was proposed to these items.

The next item was read, as follows:

On wine made of grapes, further advanced than juice or must, a tax of five cents per gallon: Provided, That grapejuice or must, when sold to vintners immediately from the vineyard, shall not be taxed.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to strike out this item.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next item was read, as follows:

On all liquors known or denominated as wine, not made from grapes, currants, rhubarb, or berries, produced by being rectified or mixed with other spirits, or into which any matter whatever may be infused to be sold as wine, or by any other name, and not otherwise provided for in this act, a tax of fifty cents per gallon: Provided, That the return, assessment, collection, and the time of collection of the duties on such wines, and wine made of grapes, shall be subject to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And any person who shall willingly and knowingly sell or offer for sale any such wine made after the passage of this act, upon which the tax herein imposed has not been paid, or which has been fraudulently evaded, shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of $500 or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, at the discretion of the court.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this item by striking out, in line twenty-four hundred and sixteen, the word "duties" and inserting "taxes;" and in the same line, after "such wines," to strike out "and wine made of grapes;" so as to read:

That the return, assessment, collection, and the time of collection of the taxes on such wines, shall be subject to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. As we are in that clause, I desire to move an amendment to it now, if the chairman of the Committee on Finance has no objection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to amend by striking out the word "rhubarb," in line twenty-four hundred and ten, so as to read, "wine, not made from grapes, currants, or berries," &c.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that will not be done. There is a very harmless liquid made from rhubarb in the State of Ohio to a trifling extent, and I do not see why the distinction should be made against rhubarb wine. This provision is to exempt domestic liquors and wines made in the households of farmers and people for their own use, from grapes, currants, rhubarb, or berries. I do not know why the exemption should be made in favor of wine or liquor made from grapes, currants, or berries, and not in favor of that made from rhubarb. In the country where I live this domestic rhubarb wine has to some extent superseded the currant wine, but it is not made an article of commerce to any considerable extent.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator misapprehends the condition of things. No man is compelled to pay anything for the manufacture of wine unless he makes $600 worth in a year. I ask him if there is any farmer in Ohio who makes $600 worth of rhubarb wine or currant wine for his own use. I know, however, what does exist, and what will continue under such a provision as this. Men have set out large gardens and are making rhubarb wine, which they pass off on the world, after having doctored it, as they term it, as grape wine, as Catawba wine, and it is deleterious to the health. It interferes with the legitimate cultivation of the grape, and has a bad effect in every way. Hence, I propose to strike out the word "rhubarb" in this clause.

Mr. SHERMAN. You might as well for the same reason tax cider, which is the basis of nearly all the champagne wine drunk in this country; but that is not done. This is a harmless commodity. If a liquor is made from it, and it assumes some other form, it is then covered by the law; but mere rhubarb wine, which I have drank often, and which, as I said before, is made by farmers in Ohio and used as a substitute for currant wine, I do not think should be taxed unless you tax all other of these domestic wines.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator, I should think, knows very well that farmers do not make $600 worth of domestic wine, and hence the striking out of this word will not affect the farmer or the man who manufactures it for the use of his family.

Mr. SHERMAN. The $600 clause does not apply.

Mr. GRIMES. I have asked the Commissioner, who is sitting near me, and he says it does; and hence there is no protection to the farmer by allowing this word to remain.

Mr. SHERMAN. The $600 exemption applies to the whole of a man's products. Suppose a farmer's products are $1,000, and a small portion consists of a little rhubarb wine made for his family—a barrel is the most I have ever known made—he should not be taxed on that. It is but a small matter.

Mr. GRIMES. My purpose is to reach the men who are deceiving the public by making rhubarb wine at home, paying no tax upon it to the assessor when he comes along, and then sending it to Cincinnati and Chicago and Philadelphia and New York, and passing it off as Catawba wine. I know of my own knowledge that that is done to a very great extent. I know that in the town in which I live, where the tuns or vessels are manufactured in which the wine is put after it is run from the press, there have been purchased by one man in one year, vats or tuns or whatever they are called, to the extent of twenty-five hundred gallons capacity.

The amendment was rejected.

The next item was read, as follows:

On cloth and all textile or knitted or felted articles, or fabrics of cotton, wool, or other materials, before the same has been dyed, printed, or bleached, and on all cloth painted, enameled, shirred, tarred, varnished, or oiled, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this item by striking out in line twenty-four hundred and twenty-eight, after "painted," the word "enameled."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made, no objection being interposed.

The next item was read, as follows:

On thread and twine, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance proposed no amendment to this item.

The next item was read, as follows:

On articles of clothing manufactured or produced for sale by weaving, knitting, or felting; on hats, bonnets, and hoop-skirts; on articles manufactured or produced for sale as constituent parts of clothing, or for trimming or ornamenting the same, and on articles of wearing apparel manufactured or produced for sale from India-rubber, gutta-percha, or from fur, or fur skins dressed with the fur on, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend by inserting "silk" before "hats."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next item was read, as follows:

On boots and shoes, a tax of two per cent. ad valorem; to be paid by every person making, manufacturing, or producing for sale boots and shoes, or furnishing the materials or any part thereof, and employing others to make, manufacture, or produce them: Provided, That any boot or shoe maker making boots or shoes to order as custom work only, and not for general sale, and whose work, exclusive of the materials, does not exceed annually in value $1,000, shall be exempt from this tax.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend in line twenty-four hundred and forty, after "boots," by striking out "and," and after "shoes" inserting "and shoe-strings," so as to read, "on boots, shoes, and shoe-strings, a tax of two per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. SPRAGUE. I hope that amendment will not prevail. Shoe-strings, I understand, are made from hemp, a new manufacture just about being created in this country by the introduction of linen machinery. It has been brought before the attention of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. This was put in at the request of the shoe-string makers. Under the present law they are taxed six per cent., and they came to us with specimens of shoe-strings and we put them on the same footing with other manufacturers of the same character, "boots, shoes, and shoe-strings." This reduces the tax from six to two per cent.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I propose, if this is not agreed to, to put them on the free list.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend that item by inserting the word "leather" before "shoe-strings" in line twenty-four hundred and forty; and after the word "sale" in line twenty-four hundred and forty-two by striking out "boots and shoes" and inserting "boots, shoes, or leather shoe-strings."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon. The Senate committee have amended the bill in line twenty-four hundred and forty by inserting "and shoe-strings," at a tax of two per cent. Now, the amendment suggested by the Senator from Oregon to insert "leather" before "shoe-strings" carries back shoe-strings made from linen to five per cent. I should like to have that reduced, in addition to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator will get it by striking out "leather," and letting all shoe-strings stand at two per cent.

Mr. SHERMAN, [to Mr. SPRAGUE.] Move a reconsideration of the vote on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that reconsideration.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. WILLIAMS.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the committee have it about right. There is no use in making a distinction between leather shoe-strings and any other kind.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line twenty-four hundred and forty-two the word "and" between "boots" and "shoes" should be stricken out and the words "or shoe-strings" added after "shoes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

The Committee on Finance further proposed to amend the item in line twenty-four hundred and forty-six, after the word "whose," by striking out the "work, exclusive of materials, does not exceed annually in value $1,000," and in lieu thereof inserting "annual product does not exceed $2,000;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That any boot or shoe maker making boots or shoes to order as custom work only, and not for general sale, and whose annual product does not exceed $2,000, shall be exempt from this tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next item was read, as follows:

On ready-made clothing, gloves, mittens, moccasins, caps, and other articles of dress for the wear of men, women, and children, not otherwise assessed and taxed, a tax of one per cent. ad valorem, to be paid by every person making, manufacturing, or producing for sale clothing, gloves, mittens, moccasins, caps, and other articles of dress, or furnishing the materials or any part thereof, and employing others to make, manufacture, or produce them: Provided, That any tailor, or any maker of gloves, mittens, moccasins, caps, or other articles of dress to order as custom work only, and not for general sale, and whose work, exclusive of the materials, does not exceed annually in value $1,000, shall be exempt from this tax; and articles of dress made or trimmed by milliners or dressmakers for the wear of women and children shall also be exempt from this tax.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this item by inserting after the word "caps," wherever it occurred, the words "felt hats."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-four hundred and fifty-three to strike out "one" before "per cent." and insert "two;" so as to read:

On ready-made clothing, gloves, mittens, moccasins, caps, felt hats, and other articles of dress for the wear of men, women, and children, not otherwise assessed and taxed, a tax of two per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-four hundred and sixty-one, after "whose," to strike out "work, exclusive of the materials, does not exceed annually in value $1,000," and in lieu thereof to insert "annual products do not exceed $2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee further proposed to amend by inserting the following proviso, after line twenty-four hundred and sixty-six, at the end of the item:

Provided, That the branching into sprays, branches, or wreaths of artificial flowers, on which an impost or internal tax has already been paid, shall not be considered a manufacture within the meaning of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next item was read, as follows:

On cotton upon which no tax has been levied, collected, or paid, and which is not exempted by law, a tax of two cents per pound, which shall be and remain a lien thereon until said tax shall have been paid, in the possession of any person or persons whomsoever: Provided, That this paragraph shall be and remain in force until July 1, 1886, and no longer.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike this item from the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, at this point, to move an amendment to be inserted after line twenty-four hundred and seventy-seven:

On paper not otherwise provided for, a tax of three per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

On all manufactures, not otherwise provided for, of cotton, wool, silk, worsted, flax, hemp, jute, India-rubber, gutta-percha, wood, glass, pottery-ware, leather, paper, iron, steel, lead, tin, copper, zinc, brass, gold, silver, horn, ivory, bone, bristles, wholly or in part, or of other materials, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That on all cloths or articles dyed, printed, or bleached, on which a tax shall have been paid before the same were so dyed, printed, or bleached, the said tax of five per cent. shall be assessed only upon the increased value thereof: And provided further, That any cloth or fabrics or articles, as aforesaid, when made of thread, yarn, or warps, imported, or upon which a duty shall have been assessed and paid, shall be assessed and pay a tax on the increased value only thereof; and when made wholly by the same manufacturer shall be subject to a tax only of five per cent. ad valorem: And provided further, That brown earthen and common or gray stoneware shall be subject to a tax of two and one half per cent. ad valorem, and no more.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend by inserting "enameled" after "printed," in lines twenty-four hundred and eighty-four and twenty-four hundred and eighty-six.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed to strike out after the word "warps," in line twenty-four hundred and ninety, the words "imported or;" and in line twenty-four hundred and ninety-one to strike out "a duty," and insert "an internal tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the following items, to which no amendment was proposed, namely:

On all diamonds, emeralds, precious stones, and imitations thereof, and all other jewelry, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That when diamonds, emeralds, precious stones, or imitations thereof, imported from foreign countries, and upon which import duties have been paid, shall be set or reset in gold or any other material, the tax shall be assessed and paid only upon the value of the settings.

On bullion in lump, ingot, bar, or otherwise, a tax of one half of one per cent. ad valorem, to be paid by the assayer of the same, who shall stamp the product of the assay as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe by general regulations. And all sales, transfers, exchanges, transportation, and exportation of gold or silver assayed at any mint of the United States, or by any private assayer, unless stamped as prescribed by general regulations, as aforesaid, are hereby declared unlawful; and every person or corporation who shall sell, transfer, transport, exchange, export, or deal in the same, shall be subject to a penalty of $1,000 for each offense, and to a fine not exceeding that sum, and to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years nor less than six months. No jeweler, worker or artificer in gold or silver shall use either of those metals except it shall have first been stamped as aforesaid as required by this act. No person or corporation shall export, or cause to be exported, from the United States any gold or silver in its natural state, not coined, assayed, or stamped as aforesaid; and for every violation of this paragraph every offender shall be subject to the penalties herein provided: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall apply to the reworking of old gold or silver in lump, ingot, or bar, as aforesaid.

The next item was read, as follows:

On snuff, manufactured of tobacco, or any substitute for tobacco, ground, dry, or damp, pickled, scented, or otherwise, of all descriptions, when prepared for use, a tax of forty cents per pound.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The words "or sale," after "use," in line twenty-five hundred and thirty-four, should be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next item, as follows:

On cavendish, plug, twist, and all other kinds of manufactured tobacco, not herein otherwise provided for, a tax of forty cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next item was read, as follows:

On tobacco twisted by hand, or reduced from leaf into a condition to be consumed without the use of any machine or instrument, and without being pressed, sweetened, or otherwise prepared, a tax of thirty cents per pound.

The committee proposed to amend this item after the word "prepared," in line twenty-five hundred and forty-two, by inserting "and on fine-cut shorts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next item was read, as follows:

On fine-cut chewing tobacco, whether manufactured with the stems in or not, or however sold, whether loose, in bulk, or in rolls, packages, papers, wrappers, or boxes, a tax of forty cents per pound.

No amendment was reported to this item.

The next item was read, as follows:

On smoking-tobacco, sweetened, stemmed, or butted, a tax of forty cents per pound.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this item.

The next item was read, as follows:

On smoking-tobacco of all kinds, not sweetened, nor stemmed, nor butted, including that made of stems, or in part of stems, and imitations thereof, a tax of twenty cents per pound.

The Committee on Finance proposed in line twenty-five hundred and fifty-two, after "tax of," to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen;" so as to read, "fifteen cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next item was read, as follows:

On cigarettes, or small cigars, made of tobacco inclosed in a wrapper, or binder, and not over three and a half inches in length, and on cigars made with twisted heads, and on cheroots, and on cigars known as short-sixes, the market value of which is not over eight dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand.

No amendment to this item was reported.

The next item was read, as follows:

On all other cigarette and cigars, the market value of which is over eight dollars and not over twelve dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand.

The committee proposed to amend by striking out "other" before "cigarettes" and inserting "cheroots;" so as to read, "cheroots, cigarettes, and cigars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next item was read, as follows:

On all other cigarettes and cigars, a tax of four dollars per thousand, and, in addition, forty per cent. ad valorem on the value beyond twelve dollars per thousand, to be assessed on the excess beyond twelve dollars per thousand: Provided, That any person who shall offer or expose for sale any cigars, cheroots, or cigarettes, whether the articles so offered or exposed are imported or are of foreign or domestic manufacture, shall be deemed the manufacturer thereof, and shall be subject to all the duties, liabilities, and penalties imposed by law in regard to the sale of domestic articles without the use of the proper stamp or stamps denoting the duty or tax paid thereon. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe such regulations for the inspection and valuation of cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, and the collection of the tax thereon, as shall, in his judgment, be most effective for the prevention of inequalities and frauds in the payment of such tax. And, in addition to other regulations, it shall be the duty of the inspector or assessor who appraises any cigars, cigarettes, or cheroots to examine the manufacturer thereof or his agent under oath, which oath shall be administered by the inspecting and appraising officer, and reduced to writing, and signed by such manufacturer or his agent, with a view to ascertaining whether such manufacturer has any interest, direct or indirect, in any sale that has been made, or any resale to be made of said cigars, cigarettes, or cheroots, by the concealment of which he seeks to obtain a false, fraudulent, or deceptive appraisal.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this item by inserting "cheroots," in line twenty-five hundred and sixty-four, after "cigarettes;" and after the words "tax of," in line twenty-five hundred and sixty-five, to strike out "four" and insert "ten," so as to read, "on all other cigarettes, cheroots, and cigars, a tax of ten dollars per thousand."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee also proposed to strike out after "thousand," in line twenty-five hundred and sixty-five, the following words:

And, in addition, forty per cent. ad valorem on the value beyond twelve dollars per thousand, to be assessed on the excess beyond twelve dollars per thousand: Provided, That any person who shall offer or expose for sale any cigars, cheroots, or cigarettes, whether the articles so offered or exposed are imported or are of foreign or domestic manufacture, shall be deemed the manufacturer thereof, and shall be subject to all the duties, liabilities, and penalties imposed by law in regard to the sale of domestic articles without the use of the proper stamp or stamps denoting the duty or tax paid thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed to insert in lieu of the words thus stricken out the following:

Provided, That upon all imported cigars and cheroots, but not including cigarettes, an internal revenue tax shall be levied and collected, in addition to the duties paid upon importation thereof, of ten dollars per thousand, and stamps denoting the payment of such tax shall, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, be affixed to every box or package of imported cigars or cheroots before the same are sold or offered for sale; and any cigars or cheroots so imported, which shall be sold or offered or exposed for sale without having stamps affixed, shall be forfeited to the United States, and the importer of such cigars or cheroots shall be deemed the manufacturer thereof, and shall be subject to all the duties, liabilities, and penalties imposed by law upon the manufacturer of domestic cigars or cheroots.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The committee do not now recommend the adoption of that amendment. It is probable it will not work well, and it can be better provided for at the customhouse by a provision in the tariff bill. I hope, therefore, this amendment will be rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish now to go back to page 88, to make an amendment to conform to the action we have just taken. In line nineteen hundred and thirty-nine, on page 88, I move to strike out "whether of domestic manufacture or imported."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In the same connection, I move, on page 89, to strike out "by the inspector" after "affixed," in line nine hundred and seventy-one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert, after line twenty-six hundred and eight, the following clause:

That section ninety-eight be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: That there shall be levied and collected and paid on all sales of real estate, goods, wares, merchandise, articles, or things at auction, including all sales of stocks, bonds, and other securities, a duty of one tenth of one per cent. on the gross amount of such sales; and every auctioneer or other person making such sales, as aforesaid, shall, at the end of each and every month, or within ten days thereafter, make a list or return to the assistant assessor of the district of the gross amount of such sales, made as aforesaid, with the amount of duty which has accrued or should accrue thereon, which list shall have annexed thereto a declaration, under oath or affirmation, in form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that the same is true and correct, and shall, at the same time, as aforesaid, pay to the collector or deputy collector the amount of duty or tax thereupon, as aforesaid, and in default thereof shall be subject to and pay a penalty of $500. In all cases of delinquency in making said list or payment the manner prescribed in making shall be made in the manner prescribed in the general provisions of this act: Provided, That no duty shall be levied under the provisions of this section upon any sales by or for judicial or executive officers making auction sales by virtue of a judgment or decree of any court, nor to public sales made by guardians, executors, or administrators.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the word "monthly" after "paid" in line twenty-six hundred and twelve.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out all after the word "sales," in line twenty-six hundred and fifteen, to "provided" in line twenty-six hundred and thirty-one. The same provision is in the bill before.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The word "duty," in line twenty-six hundred and thirty-two, should be "tax."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

That section ninety-eight be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: That there shall be levied and collected and paid monthly on all sales of real estate, goods, wares, merchandise, articles, or things at auction, including all sales of stocks, bonds, and other securities, a duty of one tenth of one per cent. on the gross amount of such sales: Provided, That no tax shall be levied under the provisions of this section upon any sales by or for judicial or executive officers making auction sales by virtue of a judgment or decree of any court, nor to public sales made by guardians, executors, or administrators.

The next clause was read, as follows:

That section ninety-nine be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: That there shall be paid, on all sales made by brokers, banks, or bankers, whether made for the benefit of others or on their own account, the following taxes, that is to say: upon all sales and contracts for the sale of stocks, bonds, foreign exchange, gold and silver bullion and coin, promissory notes, or other securities, a tax at the rate of one cent for every hundred dollars of the amount of such sales or contracts; and on all sales and contracts for sale negotiated and made by any person, firm, or company not paying a special tax as a broker, bank, or banker, of any gold or silver bullion, foreign exchange, coin, noncurrent money, promissory notes, stocks, bonds, or other securities, not his or their own property, there shall be paid a tax at the rate of five cents for every hundred dollars of the amount of such sales or contracts; and on every sale and contract for sale, as aforesaid, there shall be made and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill or memorandum of such sale or contract, on which there shall be affixed a lawful stamp or stamps in value equal to the amount of tax on such sale, to be determined by the rates of tax before mentioned; and in computing the amount of the stamp duty or tax in any case herein provided for, any fractional part of $100 of value or amount on which tax is computed shall be accounted as $100. And every bill or memorandum of sale or contract of sale, before mentioned, shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale or contract, and the matter or thing to which it refers. And any person or persons liable to pay the tax as herein provided, or any one who acts in the matter as agent or broker for such person or persons, who shall make any such sale or contract, or who shall, in pursuance of any sale or contract, deliver or receive any stocks, bonds, bullion, coin, noncurrent money, foreign exchange, promissory notes, or other securities, without a bill or memorandum thereof, as herein required, or who shall deliver or receive such bill or memorandum without having the proper stamps affixed thereto, shall forfeit and pay to the United States a penalty of $500 for each and every offense where the tax so evaded, or attempted to be evaded, does not exceed $100, and a penalty of $1,000 when such tax shall exceed $100, which may be recovered with costs of suit in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, at any time within one year after the liability to such penalty shall have been incurred; and the penalty recovered shall be awarded and distributed by the court between the United States and the informer, if there be any, as provided by law, who, in the judgment of the court, shall have first given the information of the violation of the law for which the recovery is had: Provided, That where it shall appear that the omission to affix the proper stamp was not with intent to evade the provisions of this section, said penalty shall not be incurred. And the provisions of law in relation to stamp duties in schedule B of the act to which this is an amendment, shall apply to the stamp taxes herein imposed upon sales and contracts of sales made by brokers, banks, or bankers, and others as aforesaid. And there shall be paid on all sales by commercial brokers of any goods, wares, or merchandise, a tax of one twentieth of one per cent. upon the amount of such sales; and on or before the 10th day of each month every commercial broker shall make a list or return to the assistant assessor of the district of the gross amount of such sales, as aforesaid, for the preceding month, with the amount of tax which has accrued or shall accrue thereon, in form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and pay to the collector the amount of tax thereon before the end of the month: Provided, That no stamping shall be required on sales of stocks, bonds, and merchandise for the purpose of this section, any sales made by or through another broker, upon which a tax has been paid, shall not be estimated and included as sold by the broker for whom the sale was made.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause after the word "bonds" by striking out, in line twenty-six hundred and forty-three, "foreign exchange."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee also proposed to strike out, in line twenty-six hundred and fifty, before the word "coin," the words "foreign exchange."

Mr. SPRAGUE. I would ask the chairman of the committee, why strike out "foreign exchange" from taxation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Because there is a large stamp duty on it.

Mr. SPRAGUE. More than the amount of this tax would be?

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is quite a heavy stamp tax on foreign exchange, and it was thought to be too burdensome to put this on besides.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee also proposed, in line twenty-six hundred and fifty, to strike out "uncurrent money" after "coin."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise more for the purpose of inquiry. The preceding section in regard to the tax on sales did not attract my attention before. I ask the chairman if it is the purpose to tax ordinary sales of stocks at the "public exchange one tenth of one per cent."

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, that is the tax in the previous clause.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems a very heavy tax, higher than the usual commissions charged by those engaged in that business.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The tax is one cent on $100 on sales of stocks.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is in the clause now before us, but I am referring to the provision on page 115. Sales at auction at the exchange, New York, are taxed one tenth of one per cent. for ordinary securities, railroad stocks, &c., which are sold daily. One tenth of one per cent. is a very heavy charge; it is much larger than the next section, which provides only one hundredth of one per cent. I wish simply to call attention to it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is reduced from one fourth to one tenth.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is the present tax one fourth of one per cent.?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is on auction sales.

Mr. SHERMAN. But does not apply to the ordinary exchange sales, brokers' sales.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to strike out "duty or" before "tax" in line twenty-six hundred and sixty-one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed, in line twenty-six hundred and eighty-three, to strike out after "costs" the words "of suit."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line twenty-six hundred and seventy-three, after "coin," I move to strike out "uncurrent money, foreign exchange."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. That matter of foreign exchange I desire to call attention to. There is also a stamp tax on promissory notes, perhaps as much as on foreign exchange. There is a very large tax on promissory notes.

Mr. VAN WINKLE and Mr. FESSENDEN. Very small.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary read the next amendment to this clause proposed by the Committee on Finance, which was in line twenty-six hundred and ninety-five, after the word "of," to strike out "the act to which this is an amendment" and insert "this act."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that amendment will not be made. We have made several amendments of that kind which have been passed over, but on looking at it I am satisfied it is wrong. This is a separate and distinct act of itself, and there are no stamp duties imposed by this act that I know of. It refers to the stamp duties in schedule B of another act, and I am apprehensive, indeed I am very certain, the amendment is wrong. I hope, therefore, it will not be made.

The amendment was rejected.

The committee proposed to insert the word "monthly" after "paid," in line twenty-six hundred and ninety-eight.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed, after the word "month," at the end of line twenty-six hundred and four, to strike out "with the amount of tax which has accrued or shall accrue thereon."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made, unless there be objection. The Chair hears none.

The committee also proposed in line twenty-seven hundred and seven, after "Internal Revenue," to strike out "and pay to the collector the amount of tax thereon before the end of the month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section one hundred be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, including schedule A, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That there shall be levied, annually, on every carriage, gold watch, and billiard table, and on all gold or silver plate, the tax or sums of money set down in figures against the same, respectively, or otherwise specified and set forth in schedule A, hereto annexed, to be paid by the person or persons owning, possessing, or keeping the same on the 1st day in May, in each year, and the same shall be and remain a lien thereon until paid.

SCHEDULE A.

Carriage, phaeton, carrivall, rockaway, or other like carriage, and any coach, hackney coach, omnibus, or four-wheeled carriage, the body of which rests upon springs of any description, which may be kept for use, for hire, or for passengers, and which shall not be used exclusively in husbandry or for the transportation of merchandise, valued at exceeding $300 and not above $500 each, including harness used therewith, six dollars.

Carrriages of like description, valued above $500, each ten dollars.

On gold watches, composed wholly or in part of gold or gilt, kept for use, valued at $100 or less, each one dollar.

On gold watches composed wholly or in part of gold or gilt, kept for use, valued at above $100, each two dollars.

Billiard tables, kept for use, each ten dollars: Provided, That billiard tables kept for hire, and upon which a special tax has been imposed, shall not be required to pay the tax on billiard tables kept for use, as aforesaid, anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

On plate, of gold, kept for use, per ounce troy, fifty cents.

On plate, of silver, kept for use, per ounce troy, five cents: Provided, That silver spoons or plate of silver used by one family to an amount not exceeding forty ounces as aforesaid, belonging to any one person, plate belonging to religious societies, and souvenirs and keepsakes actually given and received as such and not kept for use; also, all premiums awarded as a token of merit by any agricultural society, corporation, or association of persons, for any purpose whatever, shall be exempt from tax.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause by striking out in the last proviso, after the word "ounces," in line twenty-seven hundred and fifty-four, the words "as aforesaid" and inserting "troy."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine of the bill, as follows:

That sections one hundred and one and one hundred and two be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

No amendment was reported to this clause.

The next clause was read, as follows:

That section one hundred and three be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that every person, firm, company, or corporation owning or possessing or having the care or management of any railroad, canal, steamboat, ship, barge, canal-boat, or other vessel, or any stage-coach or other vehicle, except hacks or carriages not running on continuous routes, engaged or employed in the business of transporting passengers for hire, or in transporting the mails of the United States upon contracts made prior to the passage of this act, shall be subject to and pay a tax of two and one half per cent. of the gross receipts from passengers and mails of such railroad, canal, steamboat, ship, barge, canal-boat, or other vessel, or such stage-coach or other vehicle: Provided,

That the tax hereby imposed shall not be assessed upon receipts for the transportation of persons or mails between the United States and any foreign port; but such tax shall be assessed upon the transportation of persons from a port within the United States through a foreign territory to a port within the United States, and shall be assessed upon and collected from persons, firms, companies, or corporations within the United States, receiving hire or pay for such transportation of persons or mails; and so much of section one hundred and nine as requires returns to be made of receipts hereby exempted from tax when derived from transporting property for hire is hereby repealed: Provided also, That any person or persons, firms, companies, or corporations owning, possessing, or having the care or management of any toll-road, ferry, or bridge, authorized by law to receive toll for the transit of passengers, beasts, carriages, teams, and freight of any description, over such toll-road, ferry, or bridge, shall be subject to and pay a tax of three per cent. of the gross amount of all their receipts of every description; but when the gross receipts of any such bridge or toll-road, for and during any term of twelve consecutive calendar months, shall not exceed the amount necessarily expended to keep such bridge or road in repair, no tax shall be assessed upon such receipts during any month next following any such term: And provided further, That no tax under this section shall be assessed upon any person, firm, company, or corporation whose gross receipts do not exceed $1,000 per annum: And provided further, That all boats, barges, and flats not used for carrying passengers, nor propelled by steam or sails, which are floated or towed by tug-boats or horses, and used exclusively for carrying coal, oil, minerals, or agricultural products to market, shall be required hereafter, in lieu of enrollment fees or tonnage tax, to pay an annual special tax, for each and every such boat of a capacity exceeding twenty-five tons, and not exceeding one hundred tons, five dollars; and when exceeding one hundred tons, as aforesaid, shall be required to pay ten dollars; and said tax shall be assessed and collected as other special taxes provided for in this act.

The Committee on Finance proposed, after the words "prior to," in line twenty-seven hundred and seventy-two, of this clause, to strike out "the passage of this act," and to insert in lieu thereof "July 1, 1866."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "July" and inserting "August."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The committee also proposed to insert the words "during said term" after "expended," in line twenty-eight hundred and two to strike out "any" before "month" and insert "the."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made, if there be no objection.

The committee further proposed to insert after the word "term" the following proviso:

Provided further, That all such persons, companies, and corporations shall have the right to add the tax imposed hereby to their rates of fare whenever their liability thereto may commence, any limitations which may exist by law or by agreement with any person or company which may have paid or be liable to pay such fare to the contrary notwithstanding.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move in line twenty-eight hundred and eleven, after the word "under," to insert "the foregoing provisions of," so as to read, "that no tax under the foregoing provisions of this section," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section one hundred and seven be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any person, firm, company, or corporation owning or possessing or having the care or management of any telegraphic line by which telegraphic dispatches or messages are received or transmitted, shall be subject to and pay a tax of three per cent. on the gross amount of all receipts of such person, firm, company, or corporation.

No amendment was reported to this clause.

The next clause was read, as follows:

That section one hundred and nine be amended by adding thereto the following: Provided, That no return shall be required of receipts not subject to tax.

The committee proposed to strike out this clause.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next clause was read, as follows:

That section one hundred and ten be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of one twenty-fourth of one per cent. each month upon the average amount of the deposits of money, subject to payment by check or draft, or represented by certificates of deposit or otherwise, whether payable on demand or at some future day, with any person, bank, association, company, or corporation engaged in the business of banking; and a tax of one twenty-fourth of one per cent. each month, as aforesaid, upon the capital of any bank, association, company, or corporation, and on the capital employed by any person in the business of banking beyond the average amount invested in United States bonds; and a tax of one twelfth of one per cent. each month upon the average amount of circulation issued by any bank, association, corporation, company, or person, including as circulation all certified checks and all notes and other obligations calculated or intended to circulate or to be used as money, but not including that in the vault of the bank, or redeemed and on deposit for said bank; and an additional tax of one sixth of one per cent. each month, upon the average amount of such circulation, issued as aforesaid, beyond the amount of ninety per cent. of the capital of any such bank, association, corporation, company, or person. And on the first Monday of each month a true and accurate return of the amount of circulation, of deposit, and of capital, as aforesaid, and of the amount of notes of State banks or State banking associations paid out by them for the previous month, shall be made and rendered in duplicate by each of such banks, associations, corporations, companies, or persons to the assessor of the district in which any such bank, association, corporation, or company may be located, or in which such person may reside, with a declaration annexed thereto, and the oath or affirmation of such person, or of the president or cashier of such bank, association, corporation, or company, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that the same contains a true and faithful statement of the amounts subject to tax as aforesaid, and shall transmit the duplicate of said return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and within twenty days thereafter shall pay to the said Commissioner of Internal Revenue the taxes by law prescribed upon the said amounts of circulation, of deposits, of capital, and of notes of State banks and banking associations paid out as aforesaid; and for any refusal or neglect to make or to render such return and payment as aforesaid, any such bank, association, corporation, company, or person so in default, shall be subject to and pay a penalty of $200, besides the additional penalty and forfeitures in other cases provided by law; and the amount of circulation, deposit, capital, and notes of State banks and banking associations paid out, as aforesaid, in default of the proper return, shall be estimated by the assessor or assistant assessor of the district as aforesaid, upon the best information he can obtain; and every such penalty may be recovered for the use of the United States in any court of competent jurisdiction. And in the case of banks with branches, the tax herein provided for shall be imposed upon the circulation of each branch, severally, and the amount of capital of each branch shall be considered to be the amount allotted to such branch; and so much of an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means for the support of the Government," approved March 3, 1863, as imposes any tax on banks, their circulation, capital, or deposits, other than is herein provided, is hereby repealed: Provided, That this section shall not apply to associations which are taxed under and by virtue of the act "to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof." And the deposits in associations or companies known as provident institutions, savings banks, savings funds, or savings institutions, having no capital stock and doing no other business than receiving deposits to be loaned or invested for the sole benefit of the parties making such deposits, without profit or compensation to the association or company, shall be exempt from tax or duty on so much of their deposits as they have invested in securities of the United States, and on all deposits less than $500 made in the name of any one person; and the returns required to be made by such provident institutions and savings banks after July, 1865, shall be made on the first Monday of January and July of each year, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue: And provided further, That any bank ceasing to issue notes for circulation, and which shall deposit in the Treasury of the United States, in lawful money, the amount of its outstanding circulation, to be redeemed at par, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, shall be exempt from any tax upon such circulation.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause by striking out the words "on the first Monday of each month," after the word "and" in line twenty-eight hundred and sixty-two.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be agreed to unless there be objection. The Chair hears none.

The next amendment proposed by the committee was in line twenty-eight hundred and sixty-five, after the word "aforesaid," to strike out:

And of the amount of notes of State banks or State banking associations paid out by them for the previous month.

And in line twenty-eight hundred and sixty-seven, after "rendered," to strike out "in duplicate" and to insert "monthly," so as to read:

And a true and accurate return of the amount of circulation, of deposit, and of capital, as aforesaid, shall be made and rendered monthly by each of such banks, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in line twenty-eight hundred and seventy-one, after "person," to strike out "may reside" and insert "has his place of business."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee next proposed after the word "aforesaid," in line twenty-eight hundred and seventy-seven, to strike out these words:

And shall transmit the duplicate of said return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and within twenty days thereafter shall pay to the said Commissioner of Internal Revenue the taxes by law prescribed upon the said amounts of circulation, of deposits, of capital, and of notes of State banks and banking associations paid out as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee next proposed, in line twenty-eight hundred and ninety, to insert between the words "deposit" and "capital" the word "and;" and after "capital" to strike out "and notes of State banks and banking associations paid out."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

The committee next proposed to strike out, in line twenty-eight hundred and ninety-seven, after the words "shall be" the word "imposed" and to insert "assessed" in lieu of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made unless there be objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to strike out the words "or duty" after "tax," in line twenty-nine hundred and sixteen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance further proposed to strike out after the words "Internal Revenue," in line twenty-nine hundred and twenty-four, the following proviso:

And provided further, That any bank ceasing to issue notes for circulation, and which shall deposit in the Treasury of the United States in lawful money the amount of its outstanding circulation, to be redeemed at par under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, shall be exempt from any tax upon such circulation.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Provided further, That whenever any State bank or banking association has been or shall be converted into a national banking association, or has ceased to do its usual banking business, including the making of loans and the receiving of deposits, there shall be assessed and collected in addition to the taxes already imposed a tax of one fourth of one per cent. each month upon the average amount of the circulation outstanding of any such State bank or State banking association.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting at the end of it these words:

Issued or by any act of such bank kept in circulation after July 1, 1865.

The object of this amendment, I am sure, will commend itself to the good sense of the committee; and that is, not to impose this additional tax, which is really in the nature of a penalty, to compel these banks to get in their old circulation where, without any fault of theirs, it is impossible for them to do it, and while your law allows the State banks to go on another year. To illustrate: there were two ways in which the national banking system was put in operation; one was by independent organizations, and the other was by a vote of the stockholders of some old bank agreeing to turn over that corporation into the national system. It has been pursued in both of these ways in the State of Vermont. Some banks would, among themselves, get up an independent national organization, while at the same time they kept their old State bank running. Under their independent organization they got circulation to the amount of ninety per cent. of their new capital, and under their old organization they continued to issue double the amount of their State capital as circulation. Other banks, like many of those in the State of Vermont, and with the business of some of which I am acquainted, voted under the act of Congress to turn their banks into national banks. Under the regulations, and the proper regulations, of the Treasury, such banks as those which turned over their corporations are only allowed to have ninety per cent. of their capital in circulation, old and new, all together. A bank at Burlington, Vermont, for instance, about whose affairs I have some knowledge, with a capital of $300,000, has now outstanding more than $40,000 of its old circulation, although it has not issued a dollar for nearly a year, and it only gets the balance of the $270,000 or its ninety per cent. in national currency. The Comptroller will not give it to them, and rightfully. The consequence is that they only have ninety per cent. in the whole. They cannot get in the old circulation. If, when it does come in, they were to issue it again, then they ought to pay the ten per cent. tax; but inasmuch as it continues to be outstanding, without being issued by them, I think it just that this additional penalty should not be imposed while they still keep within the limit of ninety per cent. That is the object of my amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am afraid the proposition would open the door to prevent the accomplishment of the purpose we have in view. Some State banks instead of being converted into national banks formed a new national bank as apparently a separate organization, and kept up their old organization, doing business at the same place and in the same banking-house; and having got the full amount of their national circulation they continued to issue their old State circulation. There seemed to be no way of preventing it. Thus they have got both the old and the new circulation. The object of this clause, as reported by the committee, is to check that. I am afraid that if we adopt the amendment which the Senator from Vermont proposes there will be a constant effort to keep the old circulation out, and that they will never get it in. Our object was to compel them to get in their old circulation, and certainly to prevent them from reissuing it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I entirely agree with the object the committee had in view. It is right; but in their desire to guard against the undue action of the old State banks where they have taken advantage of the opportunity to keep out a double circulation, they ought not to do injustice to those banks which have conformed to the very spirit of the law by turning themselves bodily over.

I think my amendment is not open to the objection of my learned friend, for the reason that it is specifically confined and compels the keeping in of any currency which is got in up to and after the 1st of July, and it applies the amendment which the committee have recommended to issues after the 1st of July and not to the old issues. The consequence is, that if any of these State banks reissue their bills, or, as my amendment proposes, by any act of theirs of any description are instrumental in keeping their old circulation out, then this penalty is imposed. It is certainly unjust to impose it upon a bank which in good faith has conformed to the law and whose circulation, old and new, is within the ninety per cent. limit, and who are unable to get all of their ninety per cent. in new circulation for the reason that their old does not come back to them, they being banks of good credit and their currency being wanted in that community.

I think the proposition which I make will entirely guard against the wrongful practice of the old banks which is charged against them, because it does not allow them to issue any currency after the 1st of July; it does not allow them to do any act for the purpose of keeping it in circulation after the 1st of July; and that is the very form of the amendment: "issued or by any act of such bank kept in circulation after the 1st of July." It is so just to the great majority of those banks who have fairly and honestly conformed to the spirit of the national currency law, that I think that on account of the fear of fraud and evasion we ought not to fail to do them justice.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Vermont will not be inserted because it will surely defeat the purpose of this provision. This is intended to make it the interest of old banks to get in their notes. If the provision is not put in, if they are only taxed upon their old circulation what they would be upon their new, they will naturally keep out the old circulation on which there is a greater proportion of profit, and it is very easily done through the agency of a broker. We have gone through the process in the State of Ohio. When the national banking system was started we had some six or eight millions of banking capital in the State Bank and branches. They protested loudly that they could not get in their circulation, that the tax was unjust upon them; but the result of the gentle pressure which we put upon them in the form of taxation has been to compel them substantially to retire their whole circulation. The bank presidents said it would take ten years to retire their circulation, but they have found means to get it in within two or three years. If now you relieve them from the effect of this tax they will by some indirect means manage to keep out their circulation and inflate the currency.

One of our objects is to compel a uniform national standard of currency, to retire all the State currency, and to make it the interest of the old banks to retire their currency. For that reason we put a very heavy penal tax upon them, a tax of ten per cent. on the amount of their circulation, and the result of that tax has been very useful throughout the United States, so that the State bank circulation has now fallen from one hundred and seventy or one hundred and eighty million dollars, which was its amount at the beginning of this system, to a very low sum, and probably by the 1st of July, or within a month or two afterward, it will all be retired.

This amendment of the committee modifies the tax by reducing it from ten to three per cent., which is not a very severe burden upon them. Besides, upon all this circulation now outstanding they are getting an interest of not less than six per cent., and we simply propose that the Government shall share with them the profit thus derived from their circulation, we taking three per cent. and leaving them three per cent. As the Government has now stepped in and assumed the business of furnishing a currency to the people, I think it is but reasonable that the Government should share the profit derived by the old banks from their currency not yet retired. I see the difficulty suggested by the Senator from Vermont; but I think, if you still leave it the interest of these banks to get their old currency in, in order to get their new currency out, they will find some means of getting the old in.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would like the opinion of my friend from Ohio as to whether the words "or shall be" ought not to be stricken out of the amendment of the committee in line twenty-nine hundred and thirty-two. If a new national bank should be formed from a State bank, it should be allowed some time to get in its old circulation. Those that have converted already have had plenty of time; but suppose a new bank is formed which has circulation out as a State bank.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want that old circulation to be subject to a severe tax because I think the old State banks ought to be subject to the severe tax of three per cent. I do not think we ought to legislate in favor of those who have refused to come into the national bank system.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It has not been a refusal. It has been owing to the fact that there was not enough national banking capital authorized to enable them to come in.

Mr. SHERMAN. But those who have kept out are generally men who held back so long that they are not entitled to any favors.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question suggested by the Senator from Maine is not exactly germane to my amendment, and I shall confine myself to that. This is a matter of sufficient importance to justify a little time devoted to it, and therefore I shall be excused for trespassing on the Senate. I do not think it is a true principle in legislation that we are to impose unjust burdens and taxes upon those who manifest a sincere desire to obey the law for the sake of catching a few rogues who in the State of Ohio or elsewhere may be disposed to defraud. It is perfectly true, as the Senator from Maine said, that it is the policy of the Government, and it is a correct policy in my judgment, to get rid of this old circulation, and that where State banks have taken advantage of the double mode which is authorized by the statute of the United States to become national banks, and have therefore got two banks running in the same place over the same counter, it is perfectly right to tax them, and they ought to be taxed for that species of performance. But where, as in the great majority of instances in New England, and elsewhere I have no doubt, these banks have turned over under the statute the very same bank and have been met by the Comptroller of the Currency with the statement, "You cannot have any addition to your State circulation in national currency at all until you come down to the ninety per cent.," and when they stop issuing altogether (as all the banks in the State of Vermont that turned over did, more than two dozen of them,) in order to obey the law and get new circulation and have not for a year past issued a dollar, and yet still on account of the high credit of those banks $20,000 or $30,000 or $40,000 of their currency is still circulating as a part of and not in excess of their ninety per cent.—I say it is unjust to impose any penalty upon banks of this description for this still outstanding circulation. When I therefore propose to relieve them from that penalty, which ought to be imposed upon the wrong-doer, to still guard the Treasury and guard the policy of the Government by having it operate yet upon all new issues, and upon all acts of the banks intended to keep it out—for the amendment is not merely to "issue" but to "keep out"—I do not think it is a fair argument to be met with the observation that this will be disobeyed, that somebody will expose himself to the penalties of the statute by evading it. Undoubtedly some will; but we ought not to leave the innocent entirely defenseless and burdened because some persons may wrongfully, in fraud of the law and subjecting themselves to the penalties of it by so doing, evade it. It appears to me that it is right and wise to adopt this amendment.

Mr. GUTHRIE. It seems to me that the circulation of the old banks that is out did not pass from the banks without a consideration from the holders, and if the banks have not paid back the notes they have yet got that consideration in their vaults, and they are profiting just as much by their old issues as they would by the new, or probably more; and if we are going to get this circulation in, it is just and proper that we should hasten the process of getting it in.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont how he proposes to distinguish between what circulation is kept out and what was actually out on the 1st of July.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will answer. The laws of all the States and the laws of the United States require that these banks shall keep accounts that their officers shall swear to, and make monthly returns. Any bank that would not blow up in sixty days knows and is obliged to communicate to the public in some way just how its circulation is, how it stands every day; and all banks that ought not to blow up do know every night just how much new circulation has gone out and how much old has come in.

Now, as to keeping out the circulation, according to the intervention suggested by my friend from Ohio, through the medium of a broker, that, like any other criminal and wrongful act in violation of the statute, is to be met by proof, of course. If the Comptroller of the Currency finds that from the sworn monthly returns of any bank it appears that the old circulation has not diminished, or if he has the least suspicion that a bank is using indirect means to keep its circulation out, the means are in his hands to meet the case.

Indulge me, sir, a moment further in order to reply to the Senator from Kentucky, for whose judgment I have great respect. It is true that the banks got a consideration, but the consideration is only like the consideration for its circulation under the national currency act of ninety per cent. This old State circulation is a part of the ninety per cent. when it is below ninety, and they cannot get any more until they get that in. I am entirely satisfied with taxing just as you do tax the ninety per cent.; but in order to meet the banks that have doubled upon the community and are reissuing their circulation, as the Senator from Maine has said, I think it is wrong in order to punish them—and they ought to be punished—to also punish those banks who in good faith and in truth and justice are endeavoring to get in their circulation all the time, and who cannot get the new national circulation for it. If they violate the law punish them, and it is easy enough to find out whether they do it or not, because they are obliged to make returns every month.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 7, noes 17; no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am satisfied, on reflection, that there is some difficulty about this matter which ought to be provided for. I do not agree exactly with the Senator from Ohio. I know the fact which has been stated by the Senator from Vermont that many of the State banks which have been converted into national banks cannot get their new circulation for the reason that the old circulation is out, and they cannot get it in. That is a matter which has come within my personal observation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not mean where they have an excess over the ninety per cent. out. You take a bank with $300,000 capital now which is converted into a national bank. They have but $100,000 in circulation, when they are entitled to $270,000 under the law. They cannot get $50,000 more, although they have the bonds up for it, and have had them up for a year, for the reason that their old circulation of $50,000 is still outstanding, and does not come back to them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no provision of law about that, but it is a matter of regulation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Comptroller undertakes to make a regulation that he will not issue the new circulation to a bank except in proportion as they draw in their old.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right, I think.

Mr. FESSENDEN. For instance, suppose a bank to have a capital of $100,000; it is entitled to $90,000 of circulation. If $50,000 of this old circulation is out, the Comptroller will allow but $40,000 of new circulation, and according as the old comes in he issues the new. It is not the object to tax them, and I agree that it is not fair to tax them, on that which is out and which they cannot get in. I think this provision may need amendment if it will cover those cases, though I am not satisfied that the Senator from Vermont has got his amendment in such language as will sufficiently provide for the difficulty and be safe to the country. The amendment, as reported by the committee, was not designed to touch a case of that kind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It has that effect.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was designed to touch cases where a bank having received its circulation before the rule was made, for instance, not having been converted exactly, but having made itself into a national bank and kept up its old organization at the same time, and having received its new circulation, the whole amount, still kept out its old circulation, paying it out from its old banking-house, thus having a double circulation. There are cases of that description, and this amendment of the committee was intended to reach them.

Mr. CONNESS. How can you distinguish between the two?

Mr. FESSENDEN. By the returns that are made, very easily; there is no trouble about that; it is pretty well understood at the Comptroller's office. I really do not think it would be fair to make banks like those described by the Senator from Vermont pay this heavy tax upon the circulation that they cannot get in unless they receive the new circulation to replace it, which they are not permitted to do. That I understand now to be the Senator's idea.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the point.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But I am not quite satisfied that the language of the Senator's amendment is correct. I suggest whether it is not better to pass it by for the present, and let us look at it afterward.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the words "or shall be" ought to be struck out of the amendment of the committee, because if State banks are hereafter converted into national banks, they should have some time allowed to get their new circulation and to draw in their old. I suggest that we strike out those words, and then correct the provision further, if it shall be found to need correction, when we get the bill into the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I had a little rather not do that. I am willing to let the whole amendment be laid aside for consideration.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The particular amendment may be passed over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest that by unanimous consent the amendment of the committee and my amendment to that amendment be passed over informally to be taken up again for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That can be done if there be no objection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I dislike to pass over an amendment for fear that it may be forgotten. I hope the Senator will let the amendment of the committee be agreed to now, and he can make his motion afterward.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought it was the suggestion of the Senator from Maine that I was acceding to when I proposed to lay the amendment aside; but I do not think that I ought to be asked to waive my amendment for the time being, because if we agree to the amendment of the committee as it stands without my amendment—

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator desires to take a vote on his proposition now, I shall have to vote against it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot help that; the Senator from Maine votes on his own responsibility and I vote on mine. I cannot consent to see an act of injustice of this kind done without endeavoring to prevent it. Having made the effort I shall have done my duty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the committee.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 11, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Clark, Davis, Edmunds, Foster, Harris, Henderson, Morrill, Poland, and Sprague—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Fessenden, Grimes, Guthrie, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Morgan, Ramsey, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, and Yates—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cowan, Creswell, Dixon, Doolittle, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Pomerooy, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sumner, Wilson, and Wright—18.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out the words "or shall be" before "converted."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senator from Maine the reason for that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The reason is, that if a bank should be converted hereafter, it ought to have some time allowed before the three per cent. tax is imposed on its circulation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The amendment of the committee as amended was agreed to.

The Secretary read the following clauses, to which no amendment was reported:

That section one hundred and eleven be amended by inserting after the words "proprietors, managers, or agents of lotteries" the words "and all lottery ticket dealers."

That section one hundred and fourteen be amended by inserting after the word "periodically," in the first sentence of said section, the words "or otherwise, or publishing any guide, almanac, catalogue, directory, or any other paper or book."

Mr. FESSENDEN. Before the Clerk reads the next clause which begins that portion of the bill relative to income, perhaps it will save some time if I make a statement for the action of the Senate. The income tax has been assessed for the present year on last year's income, and the changes proposed by the House of Representatives cannot go into operation until next year, after we shall have had another session of Congress, when this matter can be more carefully revised; and as it is late in the session, and the House of Representatives propose many changes, the committee came to the conclusion that it would be better for this session to let the income tax stand as it is, as the provisions proposed by the House would not affect anything in relation to the collection this year. There is, however, one provision which the committee thought ought to be made, and that will be found on pages 134 and 135, covering one case which we think ought to be provided for. Although I do not know that that can be operative this year, it can do no harm to make the provision.

Mr. SHERMAN. It may be enforced this year.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It may possibly be, and therefore that amendment is reported. If the Senate agree to let the income tax stand as it is for this year, as it has been assessed, and the time has gone by when anything could be done in regard to it, making the single exception which I have stated, the reading of all those pages which the committee propose to strike out may be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no Senator calls for the reading of the clauses proposed to be stricken out, the question will be put on striking out all from line twenty-nine hundred and forty-eight to line thirty-one hundred and seven, without reading them, and to insert in lieu of those clauses what will now be read.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

That section one hundred and sixteen be amended by inserting after the words "on the excess over $5,000" the following: and a like tax shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income of every business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by persons residing without the United States not citizens thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine of the bill, as follows:

That section one hundred and nineteen be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that the duties on incomes herein imposed shall be levied on the 1st day of May, and be due and payable on or before the 30th day of June, in each year, until and including the year 1870, and no longer; and to any sum or sums annually due and unpaid after the 30th of June, as aforesaid, and for ten days after notice and demand thereof by the collector, there shall be levied in addition thereto the sum of ten per cent. on the amount of duties unpaid, as a penalty, except from the estates of deceased or insolvent persons.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause, in line thirty-one hundred and sixteen, by striking out the word "duties" and inserting "taxes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section one hundred and twenty be amended by striking out the proviso to said section and in-serting in lieu thereof the following: Provided, That the tax or duty upon the dividends of life insurance companies shall not be deemed due until such dividends are payable; nor shall the portion of premiums returned by mutual life insurance companies to their policy holders, nor the annual or semi-annual interest allowed or paid to the depositors in savings banks, or savings institutions, be considered as dividends.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause, in line thirty-one hundred and twenty-nine, by striking out after the word "tax" the words "or duty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section one hundred and twenty-three be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all salaries of officers, or payments for services to persons in the civil, military, naval, or other employment or service of the United States, including Senators and Representatives and Delegates in Congress, when exceeding the rate of $1,000 per annum, a tax of five per cent. on the excess above the said $1,000, and a tax of ten per cent. on the excess over $5,000; and it shall be the duty of all paymasters and all disbursing officers, under the Government of the United States, or persons in the employ thereof, when making any payment to any officers or persons as aforesaid, or upon settling and adjusting the accounts of such officers or persons, to deduct and withhold the aforesaid duty of five per cent., and they shall, at the same time, make a certificate stating the name of the officer or person from whom such deduction was made, and the amount thereof, which shall be transmitted to the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and entered as part of the internal duties; and the pay-roll, receipts, or account of officers or persons paying such duty, as aforesaid, shall be made to exhibit the fact of such payment. And it shall be the duty of the several Auditors of the Treasury Department, when auditing the accounts of any paymaster or disbursing officer, or any officer withholding his salary from monies received by him, or when settling or adjusting the accounts of any such officer, to require evidence that the duties or taxes mentioned in this section have been deducted and paid over to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or other officer authorized to receive the same: Provided, That payments of prize money shall be regarded as income from salaries, and the duty thereon shall be adjusted and collected in like manner: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to payments made to mechanics or laborers employed upon public works.

The Committee on Finance reported several amendments to this clause. The first was in line thirty-one hundred and forty-three to strike out the words "one thousand" and to insert "six hundred."

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is to leave the law as it is now.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line thirty-one hundred and forty-five to strike out "one thousand" and insert "six hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line thirty-one hundred and fifty-two to strike out the words "duty of five per cent." and to insert the word "tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. In line thirty-one hundred and fifty-seven the word "duties" should be stricken out and "taxes" inserted, and in line thirty-one hundred and fifty-nine the word "duty" should be changed to "tax."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These corrections will be made unless there be objection.

The next amendment was in line thirty-one hundred and sixty-five to strike out "duties or" before "taxes," and in line thirty-one hundred and seventy to strike out the word "duty" and insert "tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the proviso at the end of the clause, in these words:

Provided further, That this section shall not apply to payments made to mechanics or laborers employed upon public works.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section one hundred and twenty-four be amended by adding thereto the following additional proviso: Provided further, That any legacy or share of personal property passing as aforesaid to a minor child of person who died possessed as aforesaid shall be exempt from taxation or duty under this section, unless such legacy or share shall exceed the sum of $1,000, in which case the excess only above that sum shall be liable to such taxation or duty.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause, in line thirty-one hundred and seventy-nine, by striking out after the word "taxation" the words "or duty;" and also in line thirty-one hundred and eighty by striking out the words "one thousand" and inserting "six hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The words "or duty" at the end of the clause should also be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next two clauses, to which the Committee on Finance proposed no amendment, as follows:

That section one hundred and twenty-five be amended by inserting after the words "that the tax or duty aforesaid," the following: "shall be due and payable whenever the party interested in such legacy or distributive share or property or interest aforesaid shall become entitled to the possession or enjoyment thereof, or to the beneficial interests in the profits accruing therefrom, and the same;" and by inserting after the words "United States," in the first sentence of said section, the words "and every administrator, executor, or trustee, having in charge or trust any legacy or distributive share, as aforesaid, shall give notice thereof in writing to the assessor or assistant assessor of the district where the deceased, grantor, or bargainor last resided, within thirty days after he shall have taken charge of such trust;" and by inserting after the words "shall make out such lists and valuation as in other cases of neglect or refusal, and shall assess the duty thereon," the words "and in case of willful neglect, refusal, or false statement by such executor, administrator, or trustee, as aforesaid, he shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $1,000, to be recovered with costs of suit."

That section one hundred and thirty-seven be amended by inserting after the words "imposed by this act" the words "shall be assessed in the collection district where the estate is situate, and."

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section one hundred and thirty-eight be amended by adding thereto the words: "and every such person having in charge or trust any disposition of real estate or interest therein, subject to tax or duty under this act, shall give notice thereof in writing to the assessor or assistant assessor of the district where the estate is situate, within thirty days from the time when he shall have taken charge of such trust, and prior to any distribution of said real estate, together with a description and value thereof, and the persons interested therein; and for willful neglect or refusal so to do, shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $500, to be recovered with costs of suit."

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause in line thirty-two hundred and eleven by striking out after the word "tax" the words "or duty;" and in line thirty-two hundred and seventeen by inserting the words "the names of" before the words "the persons."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section one hundred and forty-five be amended by inserting after the word "years" the words "from the time when such tax or duty shall have become due and payable."

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause in line thirty-two hundred and twenty-three by striking out after the word "tax" the words "or duty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section one hundred and forty-seven be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "that any person liable to pay duty in respect to any succession shall give notice to the assessor or assistant assessor of his liability to such duty, within thirty days from the time when he shall become entitled in possession to such succession or to the receipt of the income and profits thereof, and shall at the same time deliver to the assessor or assistant assessor a full and true account of said succession, for the duty whereon he shall be accountable, and of the value of the real estate involved, and of the deductions claimed by him, together with the names of the successor and predecessor and their relation to each other, and all such other particulars as shall be necessary or proper for enabling the assessor or assistant assessor fully and correctly to ascertain the duties due; and the assessor or assistant assessor, if satisfied with such account and estimate as originally delivered, or with any amendment that may be made therein upon his requisition, may assess the succession duty on the footing of such account and estimate; but it shall be lawful for the assessor or assistant assessor, if dissatisfied with such account, or if no account and estimate shall be delivered to him, to assess the duty on the best information he can obtain, subject to appeal as hereinafter provided; and if the duty so assessed shall exceed the duty assessable according to the return made to the assessor or assistant assessor, and with which he shall have been dissatisfied, or if no account and estimate has been delivered, and if no appeal shall be taken against such assessment, then it shall be in the discretion of the assessor, having regard to the merits of each case, to assess the whole or any part of the expenses incident to the taking of such assessment, in addition to such duty; and if there shall be an appeal against such last-mentioned assessment, then the payment of such expenses shall be in the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause by striking out the word "duty" wherever it occurs and inserting the word "tax," and also in line thirty-two hundred and forty to strike out the word "duties" and to insert "taxes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. In line thirty-two hundred and twenty-eight the article "a" should be inserted before the word "tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section one hundred and forty-eight be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "that if any person required to give any such notice or deliver such account, as aforesaid, shall willfully neglect to do so within the time required by law, he shall be liable to pay the United States a sum equal to ten per cent. upon the amount of duty payable by him; and if any person liable under this act to pay any duty in respect of his succession shall, after such duty shall have been finally ascertained, willfully neglect to do so within ten days after being notified, he shall also be liable to pay to the United States a sum equal to ten per cent. upon the amount of duty so unpaid, at the same time and in the same manner as the duty to be collected."

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to this clause, to strike out the word "duty" wherever it occurs and to insert the word "tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the following clauses of section nine, to which the Committee on Finance reported no amendment:

That section one hundred and fifty be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

That section one hundred and fifty-two be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "that it shall not be lawful to record any instrument, document, or paper required by law to be stamped, unless a stamp or stamps of the proper amount shall have been affixed and canceled in the manner required by law; and the record of any such instrument, upon which the proper stamp or stamps aforesaid shall not have been affixed and canceled as aforesaid shall be utterly void, and shall not be used in evidence."

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section one hundred and fifty-four be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "that all official instruments, documents, and papers issued by officers of the United States Government, or by the officers of any State, county, town, or other municipal corporation, shall be, and hereby are, exempt from tax or duty: Provided, That it is the intent hereby to exempt from liability to taxation in the exercise of functions strictly belonging to them in their ordinary governmental and municipal capacity."

The committee proposed to amend this clause by striking out in line thirty-two hundred and ninety-six the words "tax or duty" and inserting "taxation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee also proposed to amend this clause by inserting after the word "taxation," in line thirty-two hundred and ninety-eight, the words "such State, county, town, or other municipal corporation," and after "exercise," in line thirty-two hundred and ninety-nine, by inserting "only;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That it is the intent hereby to exempt from liability to taxation such State, county, town, or other municipal corporation in the exercise only of functions strictly belonging to them in their ordinary governmental and municipal capacity.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section one hundred and fifty-five be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "that if any person shall forge or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be forged or counterfeited, any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, or any part of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, which shall have been provided, or may hereafter be provided, made, or used in pursuance of this act, or shall forge, counterfeit, or resemble, or cause or procure to be forged, counterfeited, or resembled, the impression, or any part of the impression, of any such stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, as aforesaid, upon any vellum, parchment, or paper, or shall stamp or mark, or cause or procure to be stamped or marked, any vellum, parchment, or paper, with any such forged or counterfeited stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, or part of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, as aforesaid, with intent to defraud the United States of any of the taxes hereby imposed, or any part thereof; or if any person shall utter, or sell, or expose to sale, any vellum, parchment, paper, article, or thing, having thereupon the impression of any such counterfeited stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, or any part of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, or any such forged, counterfeited, or resembled impression, or part of impression, as aforesaid, knowing the same to be forged, counterfeited, or resembled; or if any person shall knowingly use or permit the use of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, which shall have been so provided, made, or used, as aforesaid, with intent to defraud the United States; or if any person shall fraudulently cut, tear, or remove, or cause or procure to be cut, torn, or removed, the impression of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, which shall have been provided, made, or used, in pursuance of this act, from any vellum, parchment, or paper, or any instrument or writing charged or chargeable with any of the taxes hereby imposed; or if any person shall fraudulently use, join, fix, or place, or cause to be used, joined, fixed, or placed, to, with, or upon any vellum, parchment, paper, or any instrument or writing charged or chargeable with any of the taxes hereby imposed, any adhesive stamp, or the impression of any stamp, die, plate, or other instrument, which shall have been provided, made, or used in pursuance of this act, and which shall have been cut, torn, or removed from any other vellum, parchment, or paper, or any instrument or writing charged or chargeable with any of the taxes hereby imposed; or if any person shall willfully remove or cause to be removed, alter or cause to be altered, the canceling or defacing marks on any adhesive stamp, with intent to use the same or to cause the use of the same after it shall have been once used, or shall knowingly or willfully sell or buy such washed or restored stamps, or offer the same for sale, or give or expose the same to any person for use, or knowingly use the same, or prepare the same with intent for the further use thereof, or if any person shall knowingly and without lawful excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the person accused) have in his possession any washed, restored, or altered stamps, which have been removed from any vellum, parchment, paper, instrument, or writing, then, and in every such case, every person so offending, and every person knowingly and willfully aiding, abetting, or assisting in committing any such offense as aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and shall, on conviction thereof, forfeit the said counterfeit stamps and the articles upon which they are placed, and be punished by fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment and confinement to hard labor not exceeding five years, or both, at the discretion of the court."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend this clause by striking out after the word "aforesaid," in line thirty-three hundred and sixty-three, the words "shall be deemed guilty of felony, and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section one hundred and fifty-eight be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "that any person or persons who shall make, sign, or issue, or who shall cause to be made, signed, or issued, any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever, or shall accept, negotiate, or pay, or cause to be accepted, negotiated, or paid, any bill of exchange, draft, or order, or promissory note for the payment of money, without the same being duly stamped, or having thereupon an adhesive stamp denoting the tax chargeable thereon, and canceled in the manner required by law, with intent to evade the provisions of this act, shall, for every such offense, forfeit the sum of fifty dollars, and such instrument, document, or paper, bill, draft, order, or note, not being stamped according to law shall be deemed invalid and of no effect: Provided, That the title of a purchaser of land by deed duly stamped shall not be defeated or affected by the want of a proper stamp on any deed conveying said land by a person from, through, or under whom his grantor claims or holds title: And provided further, That hereafter, in all cases where the party has not affixed to any instrument the stamp required by law thereon, at the time of making or issuing the said instrument, and he or they, or any party having an interest therein, shall be subsequently desirous of affixing such stamp to said instrument, he or they shall appear before the collector of the revenue of the proper district, who shall, upon the payment of the price of the proper stamp required by law, and of a penalty of fifty dollars, and where the whole amount of the tax denoted by the stamp required shall exceed the sum of fifty dollars, on payment also of interest, at the rate of six per cent. on said tax from the day on which such stamp ought to have been affixed, affix the proper stamp to such instrument, and note upon the margin of said instrument the date of his so doing, and the fact that such penalty has been paid; and such instrument shall thereupon be deemed and held to be valid, to all intents and purposes, as if stamped when made or issued: And provided further, That where it shall appear to said collector, upon oath or otherwise, to his satisfaction that any such instrument has not been duly stamped at the time of making or issuing the same, by reason of accident, mistake, inadvertence, or urgent necessity, and without any willful design to defraud the United States of the stamp, or to evade or delay the payment thereof, then and in such case, if such instrument, or if the original be lost, a copy thereof duly certified by the officer having charge of real estate records in the proper town or county, or otherwise duly proven to the satisfaction of the collector, shall, within twelve calendar months after the passage of this act, or within twelve calendar months after the making or issuing thereof, be brought to the said collector of revenue to be stamped, and the stamp tax chargeable thereon shall be paid, it shall be lawful for the said collector to remit the penalty aforesaid, and to cause such instrument to be duly stamped. And when the original instrument, or a certified or duly proved copy thereof, as aforesaid, shall have been duly stamped so as to entitle the same to be recorded, shall be presented to the clerk, register, recorder, or other officer having charge of the original record, it shall be the duty of such officer, upon the payment of the fee legally chargeable for the recording thereof, to make a new record thereof, or to note upon the original record the fact that the error or omission in the stamping of said original instrument has been corrected pursuant to law; and after such record or entry, the original instrument on such certified copy or the record thereof may be used in all courts and places in the same manner and with like effect as if the instrument had been originally stamped: Provided, That no right acquired in good faith before the stamping of such instrument or copy thereof, and the recording thereof as herein provided, shall in any manner be affected by such stamping as aforesaid.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause by inserting in line thirty-three hundred and ninety-four, after the word "instrument," the words "or if said instrument be lost, to a copy thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee next proposed, in line thirty-four hundred and four, to insert the words "or copy" after "instrument," and after "margin" to strike out "of said instrument" and to insert "thereof."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

The next amendment proposed by the committee was in line thirty-four hundred and six, after the word "and," to strike out "such instrument" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the same."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

The committee next proposed, in line thirty-four hundred and twenty-one, to strike out "passage of this act" and to insert "1st day of July, 1866."

Mr. FESSENDEN. That should be "August."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The next amendment proposed by the committee was in line thirty-four hundred and twenty-nine, after the word "aforesaid," to strike out "shall have been."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

The next amendment proposed by the committee was in line thirty-four hundred and thirty-two, after the words "shall be," to strike out "the duty of" and to insert "lawful for."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

The next amendment was in line thirty-four hundred and thirty-seven, after the word "and," to strike out "after such record or entry;" and after "instrument," in line thirty-four hundred and thirty-eight, to strike out "on" and insert "or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

The next amendment was in line thirty-four hundred and forty-one to strike out "provided, that" and to insert "but."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

The committee also proposed to amend in line thirty-four hundred and forty-four, after the word "provided," by inserting "if such record be required by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of section nine, as follows:

That section one hundred and sixty-three be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that hereafter no deed, instrument, document, writing, or paper required by law to be stamped, which has been signed or issued without being duly stamped, or with a deficient stamp, nor any copy thereof, shall be recorded, or admitted, or used as evidence in any court until a legal stamp or stamps, denoting the amount of duty, shall have been affixed thereto by the collector, as prescribed by law: Provided, That any power of attorney, conveyance, or document of any kind, made or purporting to be made in any foreign country to be used in the United States, shall pay the same duty as is required by law on similar instruments or documents when made or issued in the United States; and the party to whom the same is issued, or by whom it is to be used, shall, before using the same, affix thereto the stamp or stamps indicating the duty required.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this clause.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend that clause by striking out the word "duty" and inserting "tax" in lines thirty-four hundred and fifty-five, thirty-four hundred and fifty-nine, and thirty-four hundred and sixty-four.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next two clauses, to which the Committee on Finance reported no amendment, as follows:

That section one hundred and sixty-five be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that if any person, firm, company, or corporation shall make, prepare, and sell, or remove for consumption or sale, drugs, medicines, preparations, compositions, articles, or things, including perfumery, cosmetics, lucifer or friction matches, cigar-lights, or wax tapers, and playing cards, and also including prepared mustards, preserved caviars, fish, shell-fish, fruits, vegetables, sauces, sirups, jams, and jellies, when packed or sealed in cans, bottles, or other single packages, whether of domestic manufacture or imported, upon which a duty or tax is imposed by law, as enumerated and mentioned in schedule C, without affixing thereto an adhesive stamp or label denoting the tax before mentioned, he or they shall incur a penalty of fifty dollars for every omission to affix such stamp.

That section one hundred and sixty-nine be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any person who shall offer or expose for sale any of the articles named in schedule C, or in any amendments thereto, whether the articles so offered or exposed are imported or are of foreign or domestic manufacture, shall be deemed the manufacturer thereof, and subject to all the duties, liabilities, and penalties imposed by law in regard to the sale of domestic articles without the use of the proper stamp or stamps denoting the tax paid thereon, and all such articles imported or of foreign manufacture shall, in addition to the import duties imposed on the same, be subject to the stamp tax, respectively, prescribed in schedule C, as aforesaid.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That schedule B, preceding section one hundred and seventy-one, be amended by striking out all of the paragraphs relating to "gauger's returns" and "measurer's returns;" and by striking out all from "receipts for the payment of any sum of money" down to "weigher's returns, if of a weight not exceeding five thousand pounds, ten cents;" exceeding five thousand pounds, twenty-five cents," inclusive, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: receipts for any sum of money, or for the payment of any debt exceeding twenty dollars in amount, not being for the satisfaction of any mortgage or judgment or decree of any court, or by indorsement on any stamped obligation in acknowledgment of its fulfillment, for each receipt, two cents: Provided, That when more than one signature is affixed to the same paper, one or more stamps may be affixed thereto, representing the whole amount of the stamp required for such signatures.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause by adding at the end of it the following:

And that the term "money," as herein used, shall be held to include drafts and other instruments given for the payment of money.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That schedule B, preceding section one hundred and seventy-one, be amended by inserting immediately preceding the proviso relating to stamps on mortgages the following: upon every assignment or transfer of a mortgage the same stamp duty upon the amount remaining unpaid thereon as is herein imposed upon a mortgage for the same amount. Also strike out the words "mortgage or" in said proviso.

The Committee on Finance reported several amendments to this clause. The first was in line thirty-five hundred and sixteen, to insert the word "further" before the word "amended."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line thirty-five hundred and nineteen, to strike out the word "duty" and to insert "tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line thirty-five hundred and twenty-one, after the word "also" to strike out the word "strike" and to insert "by striking."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of the clause the following words:

Also, by inserting the words "domestic and inland bills of lading and" after "the" and before "than" in the first line of said schedule.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The word "the" that is quoted in line thirty-five hundred and twenty-three should be "than," and the word "than" in the next line should be "those."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The next amendment was after line thirty-five hundred and twenty-four to insert the following clause:

That schedule B be amended, under the head of contract, by striking out the words following: "stocks, bonds, and notes of hand," and by inserting before the word "exchange" the word "inland." Also, by inserting under the head of contract, after the words "for such note or memorandum of sale ten cents," the words following: "bill or memorandum of the sale or contract for the sale of gold or silver bullion, foreign exchange, coin, uncurrent money, promissory notes, or other securities, shall pay a stamp duty at the rate provided in section ninety-nine."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "and by inserting before the word 'exchange' the word 'inland.'"

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line thirty-five hundred and thirty-one, after the word "of," I move to insert "stocks, bonds," so as to read, "the sale of stocks, bonds, gold or silver bullion," &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line thirty-five hundred and thirty-two I move to strike out the words "foreign exchange," and also "uncurrent money."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. In line thirty-five hundred and thirty-four I move to strike out the word "duty" and to insert "tax."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine why he leaves out "foreign exchange."

Mr. FESSENDEN. For the same reason that it was left out before.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I should like to mention that there is also another class of securities, "letters of credit," which go along-side of foreign exchange.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They are not in the original tax bill, I suppose.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I should like to call the attention of the committee to the subject, that they may think of it. Letters of credit are subject to taxation as much as bills of exchange.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That schedule C be amended by striking out the paragraph in relation to photographs.

That schedule C be amended by striking out the paragraph relating to cigar-lights and wax tapers and inserting in lieu thereof the following: for wax tapers, double the rates herein imposed upon friction and lucifer matches; on cigar-lights, whether made in whole or in part of wood, wax, glass, paper, or other materials, in parcels or packages containing twenty-five lights or less in each parcel or package, one cent; when in parcels or packages containing more than twenty-five and not more than fifty lights, two cents; for every additional twenty-five lights or fractional part of that number, one cent additional; and by striking out all after the words "playing cards" and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

For and upon every pack, not exceeding fifty-two cards in number, irrespective of price or value, five cents; for and upon every can, bottle, or other single package containing meats, fish, shell-fish, fruits, vegetables, sauces, sirups, prepared mustard, jams, or jellies contained therein and packed or sealed, made, prepared, and sold, or offered for sale, or removed for consumption in the United States, on and after the 1st day of October, 1865, when such can, bottle, or other single package with its contents shall not exceed two pounds in weight the sum of one cent.

When such can, bottle, or other single package, with its contents, shall exceed two pounds in weight, for every additional pound or fractional part thereof, one cent.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this clause, in line thirty-five hundred and thirty-seven, by inserting the word "further" before "amended."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line thirty-five hundred and forty-one I move to strike out the word "whether" before the word "made," and after the word "made" to strike out the words "in whole or," so that it will read, "on cigars lights made in part of wood," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert after line thirty-five hundred and sixty-six the following:

That section one hundred and seventy-one be amended by adding thereto the following proviso: Provided also, That no claim for drawback on any articles of merchandise exported prior to June 30, 1864, shall be allowed unless presented to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue within three months after this amendment takes effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause, as follows:

That section one hundred and seventy-nine be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that, where it is not otherwise provided for in this act, it shall be the duty of the collectors, in their respective districts, and they are hereby authorized, to prosecute for the recovery of any sum or sums that may be forfeited by virtue of this act; and all fines, penalties, and forfeitures which may be imposed or incurred by virtue of this act shall and may be sued for and recovered, where not otherwise herein provided, in the name of the United States, in any proper form of action, or by any appropriate form of proceeding, before any circuit or district court of the United States for the district within which said fine, penalty, or forfeiture may have been incurred, or before any court of competent jurisdiction; and where not otherwise herein provided for, such share as the Secretary of the Treasury shall by general regulations provide, not exceeding one moiety, nor more than $5,000 in any one case, shall be to the use of the person, to be ascertained by the court, who shall first inform of the cause, matter, or thing, whereby any such fine, penalty or forfeiture shall have been incurred, and the remainder shall be to the use of the United States; and when any sum is paid without suit, or before judgment, in lieu of fine, penalty, or forfeiture, and a share of the same is claimed by any person as informer, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and under such general regulations as the said Secretary shall prescribe upon application, shall determine whether any claimant is entitled to such share, and to whom the same shall be paid. And the several circuit and district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of all offenses against any of the provisions of this act committed within their several districts: Provided, That no revenue officer or other person connected with or in the employ of the Treasury Department, or any branch thereof, shall be entitled to receive, or shall be interested in any share allowed to an informer under the internal revenue laws, in any case with which such revenue officer or other person, as aforesaid, shall be hereafter in any manner officially connected, unless such share shall be recovered by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction; and if any such officer or person as aforesaid shall receive from any informer, or from any applicant for an informer's share, either directly or indirectly, any sum of money or other valuable consideration for or in consequence of his services in obtaining such informer's share, or in consideration of his interest in such informer's share, except as hereinbefore provided, such person shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine not exceeding $10,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court, with costs of prosecution. It is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of the present and of all previous provisions of internal revenue acts granting shares to informers, that no right accrues to or is vested in an informer in any case until the fine, penalty, or forfeiture in such case is fixed by judgment or compromise, and when paid or collected the informer shall become entitled to his legal share of the amount so adjudged or agreed upon. And provided further, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and under such regulations as the said Secretary shall prescribe, shall be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to compromise any case not pending in court, or if pending, with the approval of the court having jurisdiction of the case: Provided, That whenever in any civil action for a penalty the informer may be a witness for the prosecution, the party against whom such penalty is claimed may be and shall be admitted as a witness on his own behalf. Every person who shall receive any money or other valuable thing under a threat of informing or as a consideration for not informing against any violator of this act, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court, with costs of prosecution.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to this clause, after the word "jurisdiction," in line thirty-five hundred and eighty-nine, to strike out the following words:

And where not otherwise herein provided for, such share as the Secretary of the Treasury shall by general regulations provide, not exceeding one moiety, nor more than $5,000 in any one case, shall be to the use of the person, to be ascertained by the court, who shall first inform of the cause, matter, or thing, whereby any such fine, penalty or forfeiture shall have been incurred, and the remainder shall be to the use of the United States; and when any sum is paid without suit, or before judgment, in lieu of fine, penalty, or forfeiture, and a share of the same is claimed by any person as informer, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and under such general regulations as the said Secretary shall prescribe upon application, shall determine whether any claimant is entitled to such share, and to whom the same shall be paid. And the several circuit and district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of all offenses against any of the provisions of this act committed within their several districts: Provided, That no revenue officer or other person connected with or in the employ of the Treasury Department, or any branch thereof, shall be entitled to receive, or shall be interested in any share allowed to an informer under the internal revenue laws, in any case with which such revenue officer or other person, as aforesaid, shall be hereafter in any manner officially connected, unless such share shall be recovered by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction; and if any such officer or person as aforesaid shall receive from any informer, or from any applicant for an informer's share, either directly or indirectly, any sum of money or other valuable consideration for or in consequence of his services in obtaining such informer's share, or in consideration of his interest in such informer's share, except as hereinbefore provided, such person shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine not exceeding $10,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court, with costs of prosecution. It is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of the present and of all previous provisions of internal revenue acts granting shares to informers, that no right accrues to or is vested in an informer in any case until the fine, penalty, or forfeiture in such case is fixed by judgment or compromise, and when paid or collected the informer shall become entitled to his legal share of the amount so adjudged or agreed upon. And provided further, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and under such regulations as the said Secretary shall prescribe, shall be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to compromise any case not pending in court, or if pending, with the approval of the court having jurisdiction of the case.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

And where not otherwise provided for herein, such share as the Secretary of the Treasury shall by general regulations provide, not exceeding one moiety, nor more than $5,000 in any one case, shall be to the use of the person, to be ascertained by the court, which shall have imposed or decreed any such fine, penalty, or forfeiture, who shall first inform of the cause, matter, or thing whereby such fine, penalty, or forfeiture shall have been incurred; and when any sum is paid without suit, or before judgment, in lieu of fine, penalty, or forfeiture, and a share of the same is claimed by any person as informer, the Secretary of the Treasury, under general directions to be by him prescribed, shall determine whether any claimant is entitled to such share as above limited, and to whom the same shall be paid, and shall make payment accordingly. It is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of the present and all previous provisions of internal revenue acts granting shares to informers that no right accrues to or is vested in an informer in any case until the fine, penalty, or forfeiture in such case is fixed by judgment or compromise, and the amount or proceeds shall have been paid, when the informer shall become entitled to his legal share of the sum adjudged or agreed upon and received: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit or affect the power of remitting the whole or any portion of a fine, penalty, or forfeiture conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury by existing laws. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to compromise, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, any case arising under the internal revenue laws, whether pending in court or otherwise. The several circuit and district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of all offenses against any of the provisions of this act committed within their several districts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with for to-day, and that the bill be postponed until to-morrow. It will then come up as the unfinished business, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not if it is postponed by a vote.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I will withdraw that motion, and move that the Senate adjourn, as I do not desire to go further to-day.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 21, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to a correction of the Journal. I find that Senate bill No. 317, in relation to the Pacific railroad, is recorded as having been taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad. Being unwell yesterday I went out, and came in just as I supposed the Clerk was reading it, and I made a motion to lay the bill on the Speaker's table. A bill was laid on the table but it proves not to be No. 317. I hope there will be no objection to letting it lie on the table.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I rise to state that I was watching the same bill as well as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and it is no mistake of the Journal though it may be a mistake of the gentleman. On behalf of my constituents, who are deeply interested in that bill, I wish it to go to the committee of which my friend from Pennsylvania is a member. I want him to examine it in the committee, and therefore I must object to the proposition.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not ask to make any disposition of it now except to lay it on the Speaker's table.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I cannot consent to that.

Mr. STEVENS. If I had been well I should have asked no such favor.

Mr. WENTWORTH. It is a matter of great interest to my constituents.

Mr. STEVENS. I will reciprocate the courtesy at the proper time.

RICHARD A. LAW.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I desire to call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate joint resolution No. 100, for the restoration of Commander Richard L. Law to the active list from the reserved list, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. How does this come in?

The SPEAKER. By a motion to reconsider. It was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and a motion was entered to reconsider the vote by which it was referred. The gentleman from Massachusetts now calls it up as a privileged motion.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I do not wish to embarrass this joint resolution, but I do desire to have an amendment made to it, and I ask the gentleman to withdraw his proposition now and make it at some other time. I desire to add the name of S. Livingston Breese, a most meritorious young officer.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. This bill has passed the Senate and has been considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs in its present form and unanimously approved.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I do not think that my proposition is out of place. It will not delay the passage of the bill more than a day, and I think I can explain that it is very proper that the amendment should come in. I have just returned to the House after a long absence, and the amendment I offer is one in which I am very much interested.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I must insist on the passage of this bill as it now stands.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask that the bill be read, and then I will submit my amendment.

The bill was again read.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I now move to amend the bill so as to include S. Livingston Breese. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not object to that.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. The case to which the gentleman refers has never been examined by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

I must insist on the passage of the bill as it is. I shall be entirely willing to consider the case in committee.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not wish to embarrass the gentleman's bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is aware of the fact that it is very doubtful whether his amendment is in order, as this is a private bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Very well; then I will not press my amendment.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENNSYLVANIA CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. DAWES presented additional papers in the case of Koontz vs. Coffroth; which were referred to the Committee of Elections, and ordered to be printed.

REORGANIZATION OF TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill to reorganize the Treasury Department and fix the pay of its officers; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

I will say that last year the sum of $250,000 was appropriated to be distributed by the Secretary of the Treasury at his discretion among the employés of his Department. That gave rise to great dissatisfaction. A bill has recently passed the Senate of a similar kind, but upon conversation with members of the House I was quite satisfied that a bill of that character could not pass the House. It is apparent that many of the employés of the Treasury must have their pay increased or their services cannot be retained. The Treasury Department has been informed that in order to give any of these parties increased pay a bill must be passed fixing it definitely. In pursuance of that suggestion this bill has been prepared, and while it will reorganize the Treasury Department it will retain about the same number of employés, and instead of increasing the expenses of the Department $200,000 it will only increase the expenses $35,000. I ask for the reading of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 18, 1866.

SIR: I transmit herewith a bill reorganizing the Treasury Department, and earnestly urge the favorable action of Congress thereto.

It has been prepared and recommended to me in the strongest manner by the heads of bureaus as highly essential to the discipline and efficiency of their respective offices; and in their views of this subject I entirely and fully concur.

I have to refer you to my report on the finances for 1865, which contains the reasons for the increase of salaries of the valuable employés of this Department, and respectfully state that the necessity for such increase still exists to the serious detriment of public business.

It is proposed in the present bill to create an additional class of clerks, who will be considered in all the offices, save the Secretary's and Treasurer's, as chiefs of divisions; at present the only distinction there is between persons at the head of each division and subdivision and the fourth class clerks under them is the additional compensation given without an appointment.

The present organization was made in 1853, and the Department has increased to four times the number of clerks then authorized.

In 1853 there were four hundred and eleven clerks in all the bureaus; there are now two thousand and five.

The present organization is estimated to cost for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, $2,897,333; this with the $250,000 appropriated March 2, 1865, for temporary clerks and additional compensation to clerks (the balance of which now remaining unexpended, is proposed by Congress to distribute among the grades of employés whose salaries are under $1,200) will make the total expense of the Department $3,057,333. The proposed organization will cost $3,092,820 per annum making the additional expense under the new organization but $35,487 per annum. The percentage upon all salaries under $1,000 per annum, terminates by limitation with the end of this fiscal year. This allowance has afforded material aid to many worthy and useful subordinates of the Department who would otherwise have been unable to support themselves and families. The majority of those benefited have either served personally in the Army and Navy or rendered other honorable and valuable assistance to the Government. The cessation of the percentage at this time would be a serious cause of embarrassment, unless some mode of relief is furnished such as is provided in this reorganization.

I am, very respectfully,
H. McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL, Chairman Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to ask a question or two, as this is rather an extraordinary bill. This whole matter has been before the Committee on Appropriations. The Secretary of the Treasury reported to us that of the $250,000 appropriated for contingent expenses, he had used $25,000, giving it to the higher-class clerks, and asked Congress to dispose of the residue, $225,000, so as to take it out of his hands. Our committee, five months ago, went on and made that distribution as they thought right. The bill we proposed was passed and went to the Senate, and I learn now that since all that was done, the Secretary of the Treasury has undertaken to distribute this very fund, and has given it to the heads of bureaus and the higher-class clerks again in defiance of the action of the House which he had himself invoked. I understand this movement now to be—if I understand the movement at all—to take this matter away from the committee who have it in charge, to whom this very matter was referred upon its return from the Senate. Now, I do not know what motion the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] has made; but when he comes to make any motion I shall move that this whole subject be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. And if the subject is now before the House I will move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL], as chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, has the right to report a bill at any time for recommitment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] moves to amend by referring the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORRILL. The subject was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. I believe so far as that committee is concerned we are not disposed to magnify our office at all, or to grasp any business that does not properly belong to us. This subject was properly referred to the Committee of Ways and Means as a report from the Treasury Department. Under the rules it is a proper subject to be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. The bill contains no appropriation, and does not take from the Committee on Appropriations any subject which they have now before them. It only proposes to legislate for the future, to reorganize the Treasury Department, so that hereafter there will not be that complaint which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] now makes, and no doubt justly. I trust, therefore, that the motion made by me to have the bill printed and recommitted to the Committee of Ways and Means will be received. I have nothing further to add, and therefore call the previous question.

Mr. SCHENCK. I hope the gentleman will give way to have the proceedings of the last meeting of the Johnson departmental club read before calling the previous question.

Mr. MORRILL. I must decline at present. When the matter is again reported the gentleman will have an opportunity to have the proceedings of the Johnson club or any other club read.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; which was upon the motion of Mr. STEVENS to amend the motion of Mr. MORRILL by striking out "Ways and Means" and inserting "Appropriations."

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 44, noes 49.

Before the result of the vote was announced. Mr. STEVENS called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STEVENS and MORRILL were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 50.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. SCHENCK said: I call for the yeas and nays. I am sorry I had not the opportunity to show what kind of speeches are made and resolutions adopted in the Johnson departmental club by men whom the Secretary of the Treasury should have dismissed long ago, out of regard to decency and propriety, but whom he still retains in office.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 41, nays 76, not voting 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Blaine, Bromwell, Broomall, Cook, DeForest, Abner C. Harding, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Deans Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moulton, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Price, Sawyer, Schenck, Seaford, Stevens, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, and Stephen F. Wilson—41.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ancona, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Bergen, Boutwell, Boyer, Buckland, Coffroth, Conkling, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Denning, Denison, Donnelly, Dunont, Eldridge, Eliot, Farquhar, Finck, Garfield, Grossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Griswold, Aaron Harding, Hayes, Henderson, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Humphrey, Kerr, Ketchum, Kuykendall, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Maugston, Marvin, Melcher, Moorhead, Morrill, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rollins, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stillwell, Strouse, Taber, Thornton, Trimble, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, and Windfield—76.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baxter, Bingham, Blow, Brandegee, Bundy, Chanler, Rander W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Culver, Darling, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Ferry, Grinnell, Hale, Harris, Hart, Hitt, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbard, Hubbard, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Kelso, Ladin, Marshall, McCulloch, McIntee, McKee, Morris, Myers, Neill, Patterson, Phelps, Plants, Radford, Raymond, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shunklin, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Bart Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Whaley, Williams, Windom, Woodbridge, and Wright—65.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. MORRILL, that the bill be printed and recommitted to the Committee of Ways and Means, the motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HOLMES asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. VAN AERNAM.

Mr. DAVIS asked and obtained leave of absence for Mr. RAYMOND until Monday next.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 492) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 661) changing the name of Emil Cohen;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) to authorize the distribution of surplus copies of the American State Papers in the custody of the Secretary of the Interior; and

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 166) to pay the State of Vermont the sum expended for the protection of the frontier against the invasion from Canada in 1864.

PRINTING RECONSTRUCTION REPORTS.

Mr. LATHAM. I report from the Committee on Printing the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be fifty thousand extra copies of each of the reports from the committee on reconstruction printed for the use of the members of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a short explanation. Of the three members of this committee on the part of the House, I am the only one now present—

Mr. BOUTWELL. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he intends by this resolution that these reports are to be printed separately or in one pamphlet.

Mr. LATHAM. My intention, in framing the resolution, was that they should be printed separately.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I for one object to any such arrangement. The two reports should be printed together. They are from the same committee and relate to the same subject.

Mr. LATHAM. I have no objection to that, and if it be desired, I will give that direction to the Printer.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to amend the resolution by adding "said reports to be printed together."

Mr. LATHAM. I have no objection to that amendment. I was remarking, Mr. Speaker, that I am the only member of the Committee on Printing now present. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CLARKE] has been absent for some time. I do not know how long he may remain away. Another of my colleagues, the chairman of the committee, [Mr. LAFLIN,] left the city on the day when the minority report was handed in. We were prepared to report in favor of fifty thousand copies of the majority report, and had been waiting for several days for the minority report. Since the presentation of the latter report I have had no opportunity to consult with the chairman. I have no information as to the length of time he may be absent. As members of the House appear desirous that the reports shall be printed as soon as possible, I have concluded to submit the resolution in this form, so that the House may act upon the subject.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish to inquire whether this resolution embraces the minority report.

Mr. LATHAM. It does.

Mr. LE BLOND. I do not so understand. It simply provides for printing "each of the reports."

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands it as embracing the majority and minority reports. They are the only two argumentative reports that have been made by the committee.

Mr. LE BLOND. It would not necessarily embrace the minority report if there were two majority reports.

Mr. MORRILL. The phraseology can be changed so as to specify the majority and minority reports.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be modified in that respect if there be no objection. There was no objection.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask that the resolution be read as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be fifty thousand extra copies of each of the reports of the majority and minority from the committee on reconstruction printed for the use of the members of this House.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend by striking out "fifty thousand" and inserting "one hundred thousand."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That is all right. Let one hundred thousand copies of the majority and minority reports be printed together.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] to add to the resolution the words, "said reports to be printed together."

Mr. LATHAM. I am willing to accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot accept it without unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I object.

Mr. BANKS. I call the previous question. The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment of Mr. BOUTWELL was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] to strike out "fifty thousand" and insert "one hundred thousand."

On the question there were—ayes seventy-six, noes not counted.

Mr. FINCK. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 91, nays 23, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Conkling, Cook, Culom, Davis, Deffrees, Deming, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Garfield, Grider, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Henderson, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—91.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Coffroth, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Humphrey, Kerr, Le Blond, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Ritter, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Thornton, Trimble, and Winfield—23.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baxter, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boyer, Brundage, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Culver, Darling, Dawes, Delano, Dodge, Eckley, Farnsworth, Ferry, Grinnell, Hale, Harris, Hart, Higby, Hill, Hogan, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulbard, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kelso, Laffin, Marshall, McIndoe, McKee, McKuer, Morrill, Morris, Neill, Patterson, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Burt Van Horn, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, Woodbridge, and Wright—68.

So Mr. STEVENS's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to strike out the words "each of," a mere verbal amendment. The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was read.

The resolution was then adopted.

BENJAMIN BLAKENEY, ET AL.

Mr. JULIAN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported adversely on the memorial of Benjamin Blakeney and Samuel N. Jackson, and others, praying for a grant of lands lying within fifteen miles on either side of the Des Arc, Dardanelle, and Fort Smith railroad, in the State of Kansas; and the same was laid upon the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a personal explanation. On examining the statement of the amounts of salary and mileage paid to members of the Thirty-Eighth Congress, sent to the House from the Treasury Department, I find it stated that I was paid $790 40 mileage and $5,920 salary for the two years. The actual amount of mileage paid me for the two years was $710 40, of which about thirty-five dollars was returned to the Treasury in compliance with the internal revenue laws. The books are in agreement with my statement, and they are balanced by reducing the amount paid as salary. The statement from the Treasury gives the amount of travel allowed me for the two years as nineteen hundred and seventy-six miles; according to the books it was seventeen hundred and seventy-six, or four times four hundred and forty-four. I notice similar errors in other cases. There is a similar overstatement of the amount of mileage in the case of four of my colleagues. In the case of the gentleman from Oregon, the overstatement of the amount of mileage appears to be $1,000. This was needless, as the amount actually paid, $11,531, was already sufficiently extravagant.

Mr. Speaker, having made this statement, I ask permission to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be directed to investigate and report in regard to the errors in Executive Document No. 123, and also to consider the expediency of a revision of the existing law in regard to mileage, so as to make the payment of mileage more equal and more accordant with the actual cost of travel to and from the national capital at the present time.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

FULLER VERSUS DAWSON.

Mr. PAINE. I rise to a question of privilege. I am directed by the Committee of Elections to submit a report on the contested-election case of Fuller against Dawson. I shall not call it up for action until the latter part of next week. I move that the report be printed and laid upon the table.

The report concludes with the following resolution:

Resolved, That Hon. JOHN L. DAWSON is entitled to retain his seat as a Representative in Congress from the twenty-third district of the State of Pennsylvania.

The report was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

GRANTING OF THE FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending that the franking privilege be granted to the chairman and the two secretaries of the Light-House Board, as requested in the communication inclosed from the chairman of the board; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House reports and essays from the volume of the Annual Report for 1865 of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the same number of copies be printed as were ordered last year. I will say one hundred thousand copies.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be referred to the Committee on Printing, under the law.

DEPUTY SOLICITOR OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the salary of the deputy solicitor of the Court of Claims, and to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I object, and demand the regular order.

NORTHERN KANSAS RAILROAD.

The House accordingly resumed, as the first business of the morning hour, the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday at the expiration of the morning hour, being Senate bill No. 145, for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas railroad and telegraph, on which Mr. LOAN was entitled to the floor.

Mr. BIDWELL. I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOAN] to allow me to make a statement in reference to what I wish to transpire after this bill is completed.

Mr. LOAN. How long will it require?

Mr. BIDWELL. Only a moment. The next committee to be called is the Committee of Claims. Yesterday the bill in relation to the railroad connecting California with Oregon was recommitted to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad. I have modified the bill so as to do away, I think, with all the objections made to it. I feel so anxious about it that I desire to have it come in this morning, with the consent of the Committee of Claims, after this bill is acted upon, provided the House will agree to it.

The SPEAKER. That will require unanimous consent.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I cannot consent to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOAN] will proceed.

Mr. LOAN. It will require but a very few words to explain to the House the merits of this bill.

Shortly after the completion of the Hannibal and St. Joseph railroad it became apparent that railroad facilities would be required westwardly. Accordingly the St. Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company was organized under the laws of Kansas, and they at once proceeded to lay out and construct a road from the town of Elwood, in Kansas, westwardly in the direction of Denver City. They proceeded so far as to grade ten or twelve miles of the road-bed and prepare it for the reception of the iron, which was on the ground. They laid down the iron on some five miles of the road and completed it for that distance, when the further prosecution of the work was prevented by the outbreak of the rebellion.

Since the conclusion of the war this company has been reorganized and has again commenced work on the road, and it is now engaged in prosecuting the work. I hold in my hand the statement of the secretary of the company, made recently, showing the assets of the company to be more than $1,300,000, on which at least $1,000,000 in money can be realized.

But in the mean time, and during the war, Congress provided for the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and authorized the construction of two branches of that road from the Missouri river through the State of Kansas. These branches ran to the south of this road, and failed to supply that public want which was meant to be supplied by the construction of this road. If these roads were thought to be works of such national importance as to require that Congress should make them munificent grants of land, give them subsidies in money and other facilities sufficient to pay for their construction, it is not unreasonable to ask Congress to aid, by a small land grant, a competing road that was being constructed by private enterprise to supply the public demand for railroad facilities to the West, which could not be met by the subsidized roads.

This is the first road west of the Missouri river on which any work was done. It was undertaken in good faith. The company have expended a considerable sum of money on it, and they now have more than a million dollars of available means to expend upon it. As a private enterprise, I think the company have such claims as would warrant the House in aiding them by making to them the ordinary grant of lands usually made to other roads in the West. As to the bill itself, I can only say that it contains only the ordinary provisions of land-grant bills, such as have been passed heretofore. There can be no objection to it, and I hope the House will pass it at once, without further consumption of time.

Mr. JULIAN. I move to strike out, in line nine, the word "ten" and insert "five" in lieu thereof.

Mr. LOAN. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOAN. I now demand the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The substitute was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. LOAN. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered. The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 61, nays 48, not voting 73; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Blaine, Boutwell, Bromwell, Conkling, Cook, Culham, Davis, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eliot, Farquhar, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Hogan, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Kuykendall, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, McClure, McRuer, Miller, Moulton, Newell, O'Neill, Paine, Perkins, Pomeroy, Price, John H. Rice, Seafeld, Shellabarger, Thornton, Trowbridge, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Welker, James F. Wilson, and Windom—61.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Broomall, Dawes, Dawson, Denison, Eggleston, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Gridler, Aaron Harding, Chester D. Hubbard, Deinas Hubbard, Humphrey, Kerr, Ketcham, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Marshall, Marston, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stillwell, Strouse, Taber, John L. Thomas, Trimble, Upson, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, and Wentworth—48.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, James M. Ashley, Barker, Baxter, Bingham, Blow, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Culver, Darling, Defrees, Delano, Deming, Dodge, Eckley, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hart, Hill, Holmes, Hooper, Edwin N. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Laffin, McIndoe, McKee, Mercer, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Noell, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Plants, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rousseau, Sawyer, Shanklin, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stevens, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, Whaley, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—73.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SMITH, one of its Clerks, informed the House that the Senate had indefinitely postponed the joint resolution of the House (No. 9,) to amend the Constitution of the United States.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 112) for the relief of Mrs. Abby Green; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order is reports from the Committee of Claims.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. How much of the morning hour is left?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour will expire in thirty-five minutes.

HORACE I. HODGES.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Claims, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, House bill No. 526, for the relief of the heirs of Horace I. Hodges.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read at length. It provides that in the settlement of the accounts with the Treasury of Horace I. Hodges, deceased, late captain and assistant quartermaster of United States volunteers, there shall be allowed in his favor the sum of $1,256 40 on account of the loss of that amount of public funds in his hands by the capture of Plymouth, North Carolina, by the rebels on the 20th of April, 1864, the loss being without neglect or fault on the part of said Hodges, and he having lost his life at that time in attempting to carry orders from the commanding officer at Plymouth to the United States gunboat.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CAROLINE A. RANDALL.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Claims, reported a joint resolution for the relief of Caroline A. Randall, administratrix and widow of Charles B. Randall, deceased; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The joint resolution was read at length. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to pay to the legal representatives of Charles B. Randall, deceased, late lieutenant colonel of the one hundred and forty-ninth regiment of New York volunteer infantry, who was killed in action the 20th of July, 1864, at the battle of Peach Tree Creek, Georgia, the sum of $175 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as payment for one private horse used by said Randall in the military service, which horse was lost by starvation five days after the death of said Randall.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM PIERCE.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Claims, reported back, with a recommendation that it do not pass, Senate bill No. 231, for the relief of William Pierce.

The question was upon laying the bill upon the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I wish to say a few words in regard to this bill in order that the House can act understandingly upon it. The applicant in this case alleges that certain Oregon war bonds were placed in the post office and directed to a place in the State of Maine, and were sent on board a steamer which was burned and lost. It is also claimed that a portion of the mail on board that steamer was recovered; and this bill is to provide for the reissuing of certain Oregon war bonds. But the difficulty with the committee is this: there is no evidence that the bonds were ever mailed except the testimony of the individual himself. A part of the mail was recovered when the boat was lost, but there is no evidence in whose hands this mail was from the time it was recovered until it reached the post office. The only evidence is that upon the examination of that portion of the mail which was recovered and delivered at the post office, there was found no communication containing these bonds. The committee were therefore of the opinion that under the circumstances, the only evidence being the testimony of the individual who mailed the bonds that he mailed them, and there being no evidence that they were not stolen from the portion of the mail that was recovered, it was not best to establish a precedent by reporting favorably upon the bill; and therefore they make an adverse report.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to say one word in regard to the report of the committee in this case, which shows the excellence and correctness of the committee's action. I think our present Committee of Claims is by far the best Committee of Claims I have known since I have been in Congress, for I believe they do not report in favor of anything that is not strictly correct. But I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] and of the House to a case of a similar character which was before us at the last Congress, and which differed from this case in this respect: in that case it was completely proved, as it was stated in this case, that the bonds were lost on this very vessel. They obtained the testimony of various witnesses; they got proof up to the handle that the bonds were lost; and although there was some considerable opposition to the bill in the House as establishing a wrong principle, the bill was finally passed. In a few weeks after the bill had become a law, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means received a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury that those very bonds which it had been sworn up to the handle had been lost, were then in the Treasury Department for redemption.

The bill was then laid upon the table.

AMOSKEAG MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Claims, reported back Senate bill No. 225, entitled "An act for the relief of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company," with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill, which was read, proposes to authorize and require the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company the sum of $1,650 in full for three regimental cook wagons furnished to the Government in 1861.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PITCHER AND HAYFORD, AND OTHERS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Claims, reported back bill H. R. No. 20, for the relief of Pitcher & Hayford, and Otis & Ferguson, of Belfast, Maine.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay to William Pitcher and Axel Hayford, of Belfast, Maine, the sum of $4,661, and to Samuel Otis and George B. Ferguson, of Belfast, Maine, the sum of $3,228 75, in full for all losses of these parties in the purchase and storing of hay for the Government.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. To avoid the consumption of time in the reading of the report, I will make a brief explanation of the bill and the reason of the committee for reporting it.

These parties were employed as agents to purchase hay for the Government during the years 1864 and 1865. Being employed to purchase what hay they could, they purchased large quantities in the year 1864; and the hay was shipped and settled for. They also purchased large quantities—some two thousand tons—in 1865. About one half of this hay was shipped; and they were delivering it at the time when Lee surrendered. At that time they had on hand some eight hundred tons, which they had purchased for the Government. The Government then gave orders to ship no more hay. This hay which was left on their hands they sold to the best advantage possible, hay immediately falling in price. This bill is to pay these parties the difference between what they paid for the hay and what they sold it for. They were to receive a commission of $1 80 per ton for purchasing, storing, and delivering the hay and advancing the money to pay for it. The committee thought it just to report this bill to pay these parties the money which they actually lost in the transaction. Nothing is allowed for interest. They are simply to be paid the difference between what they actually paid for the hay and the amount for which they were able to sell it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN] what disposition has been made of a claim in favor of J. & O. P. Cobb & Co., for compensation for hay destroyed by order of a United States commanding officer on the Ohio river during the raid of Morgan in the States of Indiana and Ohio. I wish to know whether the action of that committee upon that case has been favorable or unfavorable. Upon his answer may depend to some extent my vote upon this question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. The case to which the gentleman refers is, I think, in the hands of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. SLOAN,] though it may be in charge of some other member. Let me say, however, that I wish the House to understand at this point the difference between the case to which the gentleman refers and this case. Up to this time we have allowed no claims for damages to property in the States lately in rebellion. Under the resolution of this House we could not do so. Then the question came in regard to the damages to property in the States not regarded to be in rebellion. On all the other cases we have not reported any bill at all. They have been all treated alike. But this is a different case. It is merely for money lost while these parties were acting as agents for the Government in purchasing this hay.

Mr. FARQUHAR. With the permission of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I will say that I do not in the least doubt the sincerity of purpose of the Committee of Claims; but I wish to call his attention and the attention of the House to the rule they seem to have adopted in regard to these claims. I cannot see any practical difference in fact in allowing the claim I have referred to and the one now presented to the consideration of the House. I understand the Committee of Claims, after first deciding they would not take into consideration during this session of Congress any claim for damages arising in the disloyal States, and presented the question to the House and the House approved of their action, have since established a rule for their own action, which they have not thought proper thus far to present for the consideration of the House to determine whether that rule is right or wrong. The difference is this: here was a contract between the United States Government and these contractors; the latter to deliver a certain amount of hay, which the Government after a certain period annulled.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. The gentleman is mistaken. We never voted on any bill where a contract was made with the Government, as in the case he refers to. This is no such case. No contract was made with the Government. There is no claim that a contract was made with the Government. These were merely agents sent out to purchase hay the same as if the gentleman had been sent out to purchase hay for the Government and received a commission for doing the business when it was transacted and the hay was delivered. After Lee's surrender, and they had purchased a certain amount of hay, the Government did not need it. Having purchased it, they disposed of it to the best advantage.

There is no claim of any contract for the purchase of hay. They went and purchased the hay, and the bill is merely to allow these individuals the actual loss they have suffered in buying the hay at the price established by the Government. The Government established the price they should pay, and the commission they should receive. They sold the hay to the best advantage, and we report this bill for their relief, to pay them for the loss they suffered in purchasing this hay.

The gentleman charges that members are not able to act on these different bills. Now, when any bill is reported from the committee the gentleman, or any other member of the House, has the privilege of acting on it. The committee reports a bill and the gentleman can oppose it, and if he can get a majority of the House to agree with him, he can reverse the action of the committee. When the committee shall report adversely on grounds they deem just he can move an amendment to reverse the decision of the committee and pass a favorable proposition.

Now, in reference to the committee's action. If the committee undertook to settle all the claims for damages, even in the loyal States, arising during the last four years, we could not pass on one tenth of those now before us. The committee adopted the rule referred to so that, when the storm had passed over and all was clear, we might agree upon some general law for the settlement of all these claims for damages. I repeat, if we undertook to pass on these individual cases and report separate bills, we could not get through with one tenth, perhaps not one hundredth of them. Hence the committee deemed it best to let all these cases rest for the present and undertake to pass upon the other cases. When they can come to the conclusion what is the best course to be taken by the Government, some general bill may be introduced covering this class of cases. But the committee wished to avoid the difficulty of examining all those individual cases, which the House can readily see it would be impossible for us to do.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I hope the gentleman will allow me to conclude my interrogatory.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I have promised to yield to my colleague on the committee, [Mr. HOTCHKISS,] but I will yield a moment to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Thanking the gentleman for his courtesy, I desire to know what class of agents the Government has been employing in the purchase of hay referred to in this bill. An agent that goes out to purchase for a commission uses his own money. I understand that an agent of the Government or of an individual is one who goes out and acts for the Government or for that individual, and uses the money of the Government or of that individual. It is a most singular way for parties who have been indirectly contracting with the Government here under the name of agents to be using their own money and speculating upon the Government by means of the profits which are derived from their commissions on these sales. These quasi contractors come here and the rule is to be set aside for them, while honest men are held by it.

I sent a case to the committee nearly five months ago, and it has been lying there, instead of being acted upon affirmatively or negatively, as it should be. It has never been reported to the House. It was a contract entered into between loyal citizens of the Government and the United States to deliver hay at Memphis, and while in the act of delivering it a United States officer destroyed the hay. That act on the part of the General Government by its officer was, I maintain, an acceptance of the contract and a delivery of the hay. The Government is bound by the contract, and if the Committee of Claims will do justice as between these parties and the Government they will report in favor of their claim.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I was going to say to the gentleman that when the committee report on that bill, then he will have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Will the gentleman tell me if the committee has acted upon it?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I cannot tell the gentleman in regard to that particular bill. My impression is that it has been before the committee. I now yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HOTCHKISS.]

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I would like to inquire if the general conduct of the Committee of Claims is to be urged as an argument against the particular bill that is presented here. I would like further to inquire if any Representative here is to urge his personal grievances in another matter as an argument against a particular bill which is reported to the committee. Is the Committee of Claims to be put on trial here whenever they report for or against a bill? Perhaps a special committee had better be ordered by the House, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FARQUHAR] placed at the head of it, to investigate the general conduct of the Committee of Claims, so that we may have a report on it and not have this subject brought up whenever a bill is reported from the committee.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I simply desire to say, in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from New York, that I want to ascertain what the general principle is as adopted by the committee and to be adopted by the House. If the general principle is that all these bills are to be cut off, I shall vote against this bill. But if the general principle is that these bills are to come in upon the principle of equity and justice, I will vote for this bill. I would like to have the gentleman from New York with me on this subject.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I do not think that any member of the Committee of Claims will make any bargain whatever with the gentleman.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I now demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ISAAC RAMSEY.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported back House joint resolution No. 119, for the relief of Isaac Ramsey, internal revenue collector of the eighth district of Ohio, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The joint resolution was read. It provides for the repayment of $632 23 of revenue stamps stolen from the safe in the office of the internal revenue collector, at Mansfield, Ohio, by burglars, on the night of the 25th of June, 1865.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN A. WHITALL.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported back a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of John A. Whittall, late paymaster in the United States Army, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read. It authorizes the payment of $1,034 50 to the claimants, or whatever amount may be shown satisfactorily to have been paid by him, the vouchers for which payment were stolen.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. WHEELER.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported back a bill for the relief of William H. Wheeler, of Bangor, Maine, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read. It authorizes the reissue of a $500 United States bond to the claimant in exchange for one that was lost by him in 1865, and afterwards recovered in a mutilated condition and partially destroyed, except the thirteen coupons which have been reclaimed in such a condition as to be paid at maturity.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now expired.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution (S. R. No. 108) for the relief of Samuel Norris; when the Speaker signed the same.

HON. D. W. GOOCH.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution. It has been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, and they are in favor of its passage:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Hon. D. W. Gooch, who was elected a member of the House of Representatives for the Thirty-Ninth Congress from the sixth district of Massachusetts, the amount of his salary from the 4th of March, 1865, to the day of the date of his resignation as a member of this House.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARMY BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I demand that the House now proceed to the consideration of the regular order.

The House accordingly resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 361, to reorganize and establish the Army of the United States.

The pending question was on the amendment to section twenty-seven, offered by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, as follows:

Provided, That in applying the rule of promotion no distinction shall be made between officers of regiments composed of colored men and those composed of white men, but the promotion shall be by interchange equally open to all said officers.

Mr. SCHENCK. When the House adjourned on the day this bill was last under consideration, there was pending an amendment to section twenty-seven, offered by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.] Before the question is taken on that amendment, I desire to offer a substitute for the entire section. I have had no opportunity of consulting with the members of the Committee on Military Affairs with the exception of two or three of them. But I think they will be satisfied with the modification of the section which I propose, and which is the result of a conference with one of the prominent and most distinguished staff officers of the Army, connected with the Adjutant General's Department, who thinks that with this change in the twenty-seventh section, and another to be proposed to the twenty-eighth section, the bill will be about perfect.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is first in order, and will be first voted upon.

Mr. SCHENCK. I regret that the gentleman from Iowa is not himself here to sustain his amendment. In his absence, however, I will state that in the opinion of the Committee on Military Affairs there is no necessity whatever for any amendment of the description he has proposed. The bill now makes no distinction, but leaves promotions to be made under the rule of seniority, or any other rule of promotion, without reference to the fact whether the officers to be promoted belong to either one or the other of these arms. There was originally in the Senate bill a provision confining promotion to the particular corps, to the colored troops and to the white troops. That, however, was stricken out of the Senate bill, and no such provision was in the House bill. By general consent every Army bill before the House has left out the provision in regard to this matter. I oppose the amendment, therefore, upon the sole ground that it is not necessary.

Mr. PRICE. I understand the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] to say that the bill as it now stands will have the same effect as if this amendment were agreed to. Is that correct?

Mr. SCHENCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRICE. Then if that is correct, this amendment will only be surplusage or explanatory or reaffirming. As the amendment is clearly a just and proper one, I think it would be well for the House to incorporate it into this bill. It will do no harm, and it may do some good in the minds of some.

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I now move to amend this section by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That in all the staff corps and among the officers of the line above the grade of captain, one third of the promotions may be made on the ground of merit alone, and without regard to seniority in the date of appointment or commission.

Mr. DAVIS. I think there is merit in a portion of the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] and I have but one objection to the whole of it. That objection is, that if you change the rule which has prevailed from the organization of the Army to the present day, you introduce an element of discord and dissatisfaction which will be injurious to the service. From the time our Army was first organized to the present day promotions have been made, I believe, by priority of appointment or commission. Now, if promotions be placed upon any other ground than that, there will be, I submit, a constant strife, a constant desire by some officers to secure promotions at the expense of others; there will be a rivalry for promotion which will injure the esprit du corps of the Army. Certainly officers who have long held commissions in the service will not continue in the service very contentedly, if after years of service those officers junior in service by several years may be promoted over them by favor or otherwise. On no other ground have I any objection to this amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. I move pro forma to strike out the last word of the proposed amendment. I do this in order to say that I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] will observe that this is a very fair compromise of the question. Instead of leaving promotions entirely open, as the original text proposed, this amendment confines promotions without regard to seniority of appointment or commission to but one third of the whole number of promotions. This will enable the Department to do what it never before has had the power to do, to promote some very meritorious officers.

The rule which the gentleman from New York favors, and which has heretofore been the rule of the Army, is a rule favoring, I will not say absolute demerit, but favoring mediocrity at the expense of genius in the line and in the staff. The substitute which has been offered by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs provides that one third of the promotions may be made on the ground of merit alone, without regard to seniority or date of commission. The remaining two thirds of the promotions are to be made on the ground of seniority as heretofore. I think it is a very small tribute to the talent and genius of the Army to say that one third of the promotions may be made expressly on the ground of merit.

I will say further, that so far as I am aware, the United States is the only country in the world in which promotions in the military establishment have been made solely on the ground of seniority. Heretofore we have steadily adhered to that system; and it has operated, in the belief of many of the very best officers, both of the staff and the line, to the detriment of the esprit du corps and the merit of the Army. The plan proposed in this amendment is, I believe, though I do not propose to be very much versed in such matters, the very plan which has resulted in making the French army one of the most perfect in the world. In that army, as I understand, one third of all the promotions are made on the basis of merit alone.

Mr. DAVIS. I would suggest to the gentleman that there is, under existing law, power to retire officers who are incompetent.

Mr. BLAINE. The question here is one of relative merit, not of incapacity. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. SCHENCK was then agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 28. And be it further enacted, That the President is authorized to transfer officers of the Army of the United States from the line to the general staff, and from the general staff to the line, or from one staff corps of the general staff to another and different staff corps, or from one arm of the service to another; but an officer on being so transferred shall only take such rank in the staff or corps in which he is placed as he held by commission in the staff or line before his transfer.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have already remarked that my modification of the twenty-seventh section was proposed after consultation with a distinguished officer of the Adjutant General's department. The twenty-eighth section was also the subject of consideration in my consultation with him, that being the only other section to which he desired to call my attention. I have assented to the propriety of some modification in this section; and I therefore move to amend by striking out all after the enacting clause of the section and inserting the following:

That whenever an officer of the staff or of the line shall be deemed unfitted for or inefficient in the performance of his duties in the particular corps or arm of the service in which he may be, the President is authorized to transfer him to some other staff corps or arm of the line; but an officer on being so transferred shall only take such rank in the staff or corps in which he is placed as he held by commission in the staff or line before his transfer.

It will be observed, Mr. Speaker, that excepting the transposition of the clauses of the sentence, this is the same as the section of the bill, with this difference: it assigns an explanation of the occasion upon which the President may make this transfer. In thus assigning the reason for making the transfer, it carries out more clearly the object of the committee. Very often there may be found in the quartermaster's department an officer who would make a good officer of the line, having perhaps more capacity and propensity for fighting than for keeping accounts. Sometimes, on the other hand, an officer of the line would render more efficient service in one of the staff departments. In some cases, a quartermaster would make a better adjutant, or an adjutant a better commissary. This substitute, therefore, provides that when an officer is deemed in any respect unfitted for the peculiar duties of the particular arm of the service to which he belongs, this transfer shall be made, not implying any imputation upon the character of the officer, but being based on the fact of his greater fitness for the branch of the service to which he is transferred.

Mr. PAINE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Ohio were correct in his interpretation of the substitute which he has offered for this section, I would certainly agree with him as to the propriety of adopting it. But it seems to me that he has entirely misapprehended the purport and scope of his own amendment.

If it should be found in any case that an officer in one corps or staff department of the Army would excel in another corps or staff department, and ought therefore to be transferred, that transfer cannot, under this substitute, be made, unless the officer is disqualified for the duties of the particular corps or staff department to which he belongs. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is all wrong. There may be in one arm of the service an officer eminently fitted to discharge the duties devolved upon him in that arm, and yet by his talents or accomplishments may be better fitted for some other arm of the service in which he may distinguish himself, and more ably and profitably serve the country. Still, sir, under this substitute the President would not have the power to transfer him. Take this case, for example: an officer is in the infantry; he is a good captain or lieutenant colonel of infantry. Because he discharges his duty well as an officer of infantry the President cannot transfer him to any other arm of the service. If it be discovered that he would be an admirable engineer officer, or might distinguish himself and better serve the country in the artillery or cavalry, the President cannot transfer him, because he is fitted for the duties he is actually performing. It is on that account I am opposed to this substitute.

I am opposed to shutting the door to the transfer of those officers, who, although qualified for the duties they are discharging are still better qualified for the discharge of other duties. If a man is competent to the discharge of higher duties in another branch of the service, let it be no reason to refuse him a transfer that he is also competent to his present duties.

Mr. SCHENCK. I propose a modification.

We are aiming at the same thing, I am perfectly satisfied, and the amendment I have offered, by making it positive in one direction rather than negative in another, will accomplish the object. I propose to modify the amendment so it will provide, whenever an officer of the staff or of the line shall be deemed better fitted for or likely to be more efficient in the performance of his duty in another corps or arm of the service, &c.

Mr. PAINE. I suggest it should provide, whenever it is for the interest of the country or the service this transfer shall be made.

Mr. SCHENCK. That is falling back upon what we had before. I suggest for the present action on this section be reserved.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read the next section, as follows:

Sec. 29. And be it further enacted, That the Superintendent of the United States Military Academy may hereafter be selected, and the officers on duty at that institution detailed, from any arm of the service; and the supervision and charge of the Academy shall be in the War Department, under such officer or officers as the Secretary of War may assign to that duty. The chaplain at the United States Military Academy shall no longer be required to act also as professor, but a professor of English literature, geography, history, and ethics shall be appointed for that institution, to be on the same footing and to be paid the same compensation as other professors of the Academy.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend by inserting "shall" instead of "may," and after the word "selected" the words "from the corps of Engineers." In the history of West Point so far we have had no officer at the head of the institution except one who has been educated for the engineer service, which service requires a wider range of knowledge than any other in the Army. It involves a study of chemistry, mathematics, and almost every other department of service. By the change now proposed in this bill a Superintendent of West Point may be appointed from any other branch of the service. I believe we have never had but two applications for the Superintendency of West Point from any other than the Engineer corps, and in both cases they were made by officers who have been in the rebel army.

Mr. SCHENCK. There is the plainest reason why officers have not applied from other arms of the service for appointment as Superintendent of West Point, because the law has confined it to the Engineer corps, and their applications were utterly absurd if they made them. Now, sir, almost every Board of Visitors of West Point for years past, including the last, of which I had the honor to be one, has concurred on examination of that institution in the recommendation that this change of the law should be made throwing open the Superintendency to the entire Army. The reason, summed up in three words by the last Board of Visitors, seems to me to cover the whole ground. They say to confine the Superintendency to the corps of Engineers in the early stages of that institution, when it was a school of engineers, might be well enough, but when it came to be the one great national military and polytechnic institution of the United States that reason ceased. And as that institution is used for the purpose of making officers in all the arms of the service and in every staff corps, it is right and proper that every arm of the service and every staff corps should have an opportunity of furnishing its best material. Why, sir, General Grant told me in conversation—and I do not hesitate to repeat what he said, as there was nothing of a confidential character in it—he remarked that without disparagement of the present Superintendent at West Point if the appointment should be confined to the Engineer corps he knew that there was one man whom he had in his mind who would make a perfect and model Superintendent who never could be appointed under the present law.

Let me say here that if General Grant himself desired to be the head of that institution, as Admiral Porter is at the head of the Naval Academy, he is not competent by law to fill that position. General Sherman could not do it. General Sheridan could not do it. The officer must be selected from the Engineer corps, now numbering one hundred and five, but to be reduced by this bill to eighty. The purpose of this amendment is to throw the position open to the whole Army, and to let the best men in every branch of the service be eligible for selection to this position. The Senate, after voting down by a majority of one, the proposition of the House, has by a majority of two thirds adopted this very amendment as an amendment to an appropriation bill. It belongs more properly to an Army bill. I am glad to see the Senate thus selecting provisions of our Army bill, and giving us in advance their judgment upon some of the reforms which we propose.

The question was taken upon the amendment, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to reconsider the vote by which the substitute for section twenty-seven was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred on agreeing to the substitute for the section.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I was called out of the Hall at the time the morning hour expired, and lost the opportunity of pressing a vote upon my amendment. I offer it now as an amendment to the substitute. It is as follows:

Provided, That in applying the rule of promotion no distinction shall be made between officers of regiments composed of colored men and those composed of white men, but promotions shall be by interchange equally open to all said officers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the substitute as amended; and being put, the said substitute was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 30. And be it further enacted, That no officer of the Army in time of peace shall be dismissed the service unless in accordance with the provisions of this act, or by sentence of a court-martial duly approved.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 31. And be it further enacted, That immediately after the passage of this act the President of the United States shall convene a council of officers to assemble at Washington city, which council shall be composed of three general officers of the Army, three officers of infantry, two officers of artillery, two officers of cavalry, two officers of the medical department, one officer of the Adjutant General's department, one officer of engineers, one officer of ordnance, one officer of the quartermaster's department, one officer of the subsistence department, one officer of the Inspector General's department, and one officer of the pay department; all to be selected for their high character for intelligence, discretion, justice, patriotism, and professional ability, and who, being thus selected, shall be retained on the Army list. It shall be the duty of this council to inquire into and consider the capacity, character, record of services, and fitness to be continued in the military service of every officer below the grade of brigadier general, who may be in the Army at the time of the passage of this bill, and with a view to this they shall be furnished with all information, papers, records, and other documentary evidence they may require from the War Department. As they proceed with this investigation, they shall, from time to time, make written report of their conclusions in each case to the Secretary of War. When the report of a majority of the council is not adverse in the case of any officer, he shall thereupon be immediately marked on the Army list to be retained in the service in the position or rank which he is then holding, of which due notice shall be given in general orders; but if the majority of the council report that in their opinion, and for reasons which they shall assign, the case of any officer ought to be further inquired into, he shall thereupon be summoned, by order, to appear before a board, to consist of three general officers or officers of his corps or arm of the service senior to him in rank, to undergo further examination. On such examination, besides other inquiry as to his capacity and qualifications, mental, moral, and physical, the officer shall be allowed, if the case requires it, full and reasonable opportunity for explanation and defense, and may produce witnesses and other testimony to meet any objections or charges made against him. If the board thereupon report that he is not qualified to remain in the Army, for reasons other than any which involve bad moral character, he shall be placed on the retired list, as is provided in other cases for the retirement of Army officers, and on the same conditions; but if he be found unfit for the service on account of moral disqualifications, he shall at once be dropped from the rolls of the Army. And in making such investigations into the fitness of officers to be retained in the service, the said military council, and such boards as may at any time be appointed and organized under the provisions of this section, shall take into account the cases of any who may have been employed in no active duty in the field during any part of the late war, and shall inquire specially into the reasons for their not being so employed; and any officer whose absence from active field service during the war shall be decided by a board of examiners, after full hearing, to have been on account of his sympathy with the rebellion or his unwillingness to serve actively against the so-called confederate States, or any particular State, or the people of any State engaged in rebellion, shall be reported the same as if found morally disqualified for the service.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 32. And be it further enacted, That no officer of the Army below the rank of colonel shall hereafter be promoted to a higher grade before having passed a satisfactory examination as to his fitness for promotion and record of past services before a board of three general officers, or officers of his corps or arm of service who served in grades at least equal to his own during the late war for the suppression of rebellion; and should the officer fail at said examination, he shall be suspended from promotion for one year, when, if he still desires promotion, he shall, upon application, be reexamined, and upon a second failure shall be dropped from the rolls of the Army: Provided, That if any officer be found unfit for promotion on account of moral disqualifications he shall not be entitled to a reexamination.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 33. And be it further enacted, That no person shall be appointed an officer in the line or in any staff corps of the Army until he shall have passed a satisfactory examination before a board, to be convened under direction of the Secretary of War, which shall inquire into and take account of the services rendered during the late war, as well as the capacity and qualifications otherwise of the applicant; and such appointment when made shall be without regard to previous rank, but with sole regard to qualifications and meritorious services.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 34. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of promoting knowledge of military science among the young men of the United States, the President may, upon the application of an established college or university within the United States, with sufficient capacity to educate at one time not less than one hundred and fifty male students, detail an officer of the Army to act as president, superintendent, or professor of such college or university; that the number of officers so detailed shall not exceed twenty at any time, and shall be appointed through the United States as nearly as practicable, according to population, and shall be governed by general rules, to be prescribed from time to time by the President.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 35. And be it further enacted, That whenever troops are serving at any post, garrison, or permanent camp, there shall be established a school where all enlisted men may be provided with instruction in the common English branches of education, and especially in the history of the United States; and the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to detail such commissioned and noncommissioned officers as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 36. And be it further enacted, That any person applying for a commission under the authority of this act, and having permission to appear before a board of examiners, shall be entitled, in case of passing the examination, and being appointed or commissioned, to receive mileage from the place of his residence to the place of examination, or such portion of that distance as he may actually travel, the same as is paid to officers traveling under orders; but shall be paid no other compensation.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 37. And be it further enacted, That in construing this bill officers who have heretofore been appointed or commissioned to serve with United States colored troops shall be deemed and held to be officers of volunteers.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 38. And be it further enacted, That officers of the regular Army, who have also held commissions as officers of volunteers shall not on that account be held to be volunteers under the provisions of this act.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 39. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize or permit the appointment to any position or office in the Army of the United States of any person who has served in any capacity in the military or naval service of the so-called confederate States during the late rebellion; but any such appointment shall be held illegal and void.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to amend that section by inserting before the word "military," in the fifth line, the word "civil," so that it shall read, "civil, military, or naval service." I move, also, to strike out the words "so-called confederate States," and to insert in lieu thereof the word "rebels."

Mr. SCHENCK. I have no objection to the introduction of the word "civil;" but I do object to the latter part of the gentleman's amendment. The words "so-called confederate States" define the service in which these men were. They certainly professed to be in somebody's service, and they were in the service of a government de facto, however unlawfully or wrongly, which was known all over the world as "the confederate States." I will agree to the gentleman's suggestion to insert the word "civil," and then if he chooses to ask a vote upon his other amendment he can do so.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will move, then, first to insert the word "civil" before the word "military."

The amendment was agreed to.

WILLIAM PIERCE.

Mr. LYNCH. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill of the Senate (No. 231) for the relief of William Pierce, was laid upon the table.

The motion was entered.

ARMY BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move now to strike out the words "so-called confederate States" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "rebels." I wish to get the word "rebels" into the bill. I desire to call things by their right names. I recollect no order emanating from our distinguished Secretary of War, either during the rebellion or since the rebellion, in which he has designated the men who took up arms to destroy this Government by any other name than that of rebels. I think that is right. I desire to call things by their right names, and therefore I offer this amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman will observe that the words "during the late rebellion" follow immediately after the words which he proposes to strike out. His amendment, if adopted, would therefore be tautology.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will move to insert after the words "the so-called confederate States" the words "or of either of the States in insurrection."

Mr. DAWES. I would suggest a phrase which I think covers the whole ground. It is this: "or otherwise in aid of the rebellion." Nothing can be broader than that. It embraces all kinds of people.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have no objection to that, and I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FARQUHAR] will accept it as a modification of his amendment.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will accept it as an amendment to my amendment.

The question was taken; and Mr. FARQUHAR's amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. I move the following as an additional section, to come in after section thirty-nine:

And be it further enacted, That in all cases where a volunteer officer has been appointed in the regular Army to the same rank or grade which he may have held in the volunteer service, or to any lower rank or grade, his name shall be borne on the Army Register with the date of his volunteer appointment, and he shall take rank as with continuous service from that date.

The section was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 40. And be it further enacted, That all leaders of bands of music in the United States Army who now have the pay of second lieutenants shall be styled "band-masters," with the privilege of wearing the shoulder straps of a second lieutenant, with a lyre thereon to indicate their position: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall add to the rank, pay, or emoluments of such band-masters.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 41. And be it further enacted, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting existing laws respecting the rank, pay, and allowances of chaplains of the Army, but the same shall remain as now established by the act entitled "An act to amend section nine of the act approved July 17, 1862, entitled 'An act to define the pay and emoluments of certain officers of the Army, and for other purposes,'" approved April 9, 1864.

Mr. PAINE. I move to amend this section by striking out the following:

But the same shall remain as now established by the act entitled "An act to amend section nine of the act approved July 7, 1862, entitled 'An act to define the pay and emoluments of certain officers of the Army, and for other purposes,'" approved April 9, 1864.

I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. SCHENCK] to the amendment I have offered, and will say that I offer it for the reason that these cases have been provided for in the recent bill to regulate the pay of the Army.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] is correct. I was about to move a similar amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 42. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act shall be construed to affect in any way the Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands as now established by law.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 43. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to have prepared, and to report to Congress at its next session, a code of regulations for the government of the Army and of the militia in actual service, which shall embrace all necessary orders and forms of a general character for the performance of all duties incumbent on officers and men in the military service, including rules for the government of courts-martial. The existing regulations to remain in force until Congress shall have acted on said report.

Mr. DAVIS. In the sentence of this section which now reads, "the existing regulations to remain in force until Congress shall have acted on said report," I move to insert after the word "regulations" the words "subject to the power of amendment as authorized by existing law." As the section now stands the existing regulations would be made fixed and unchangeable until Congress shall take action. The existing law authorizes the President and the Secretary of War to modify the Army Regulations. If we pass the section in its present form it will take away from those officers the power to alter any of the existing regulations.

Mr. SCHENCK. This provision of the bill did not originate with the Committee on Military Affairs, but with a gentleman who has been connected with both the War Department and the Navy Department as a law officer and adviser in relation to just such matters. It is a singular fact that by the Constitution Congress alone has authority to make rules and regulations for the Army, and have never empowered the making of any regulations except perhaps in regard to the staff. It has been assumed that the regulations as they now exist are all legal: they have been acted upon as such; the question has never been distinctly made in any court martial. There would be some very curious developments if the history of military law in this country should be followed back. And until something is actually done by Congress it is thought advisable to legalize the existing regulations.

The provision reported by the committee is precisely the one which was agreed upon, after a full consideration of this whole matter, with the law adviser of one of the military departments of the Government. And to give the force of law in advance to anything and everything in the shape of general orders and regulations—they are usually made now in the form of general orders—I think would be carrying the matter to a very dangerous extreme indeed. I propose to stop, therefore, with the legalization of what now exists until Congress can act under the Constitution upon the subject.

Mr. DAVIS. If that be the existing law I have nothing to say; but if I am able to read that is not the existing law. The statute which I had before me yesterday recognized the code of regulations which was prepared in 1821, or at some subsequent period, and then gave the power of amendment to the President and the Secretary of War.

Mr. PAINE. I move, pro formâ, to amend the amendment by striking out the last word.

The Constitution of the United States provides that "Congress shall have power to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." Now, I do not see how under that provision of the Constitution the Secretary of War or the President can have any power to make any rules for the regulation of the land or naval forces, unless it be said that a power conferred by the Constitution upon Congress can be delegated by Congress to some other coördinate branch of the Government. It seems to me to be clear that, whatever our wishes may be on this subject, we cannot fulfill the spirit of the Constitution, if we delegate the power conferred upon us by the Constitution, to make rules for the government and regulation of the Army to the President or Secretary of War, for the simple reason that the Constitution has lodged it here. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. DAVIS was not agreed to.

Mr. PAINE. I move to amend by inserting the following as a new section, to come in after section forty-three:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That one chaplain may be appointed for each regiment of colored troops, at the discretion of the President, whose duties shall include the instruction of the enlisted men in the common English branches of education.

My reason for offering this amendment will, I suppose, be obvious to every member of the House. The regiments of colored troops have necessities which do not exist in the case of regiments composed of white troops. Hence this section provides that the duties of these chaplains, when chaplains shall be appointed for the colored regiments, shall embrace the instruction of the enlisted men in the common branches of an English education. But it is not made compulsory upon the President or on the War Department to appoint chaplains for any regiments of colored troops, if it should be found that, for any reason, the public interest would not be subserved by such appointments. If it should be found that, in any particular case, the appointment of a chaplain would not be desirable, would not promote the public interest, this amendment allows the President to make no appointment in such case. It allows the President in every case the discretion of making an appointment or not, as he may deem best. It seems to me that if we are to have any colored troops, it is not improper, in view of the necessities of these colored troops, to authorize the President, in his discretion, to appoint chaplains for those troops.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 44. And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. SCHENCK. As this is the last section of the bill, I desire now to go back to the twenty-eighth section, which was reserved. I move to amend by striking out all after the enacting clause of that section and inserting the following:

That whenever an officer of the staff or of the line shall be deemed better fitted for or likely to be more efficient in the performance of his duties in some other corps or arm of the line than the particular corps or arm in which he may be, the President is authorized to transfer him to some other staff corps or arm of the line; but an officer on being so transferred shall only take such rank in the staff or corps in which he is placed as he held by commission in the staff or line before his transfer.

Mr. PAINE. I make no objection to this substitute; but I will suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that it perhaps embraces some slight verbal inaccuracies. I observe in one case the phrase "arm of the line" is used. That is not, perhaps, an objectionable phrase; but it seems to me that the phrase "arm of the service" is preferable.

Mr. SCHENCK. I have adopted the phraseology "arm of the line" in deference to the criticism of a gentleman in the Adjutant General's office, who maintains that the "arms of the service" are, properly speaking, the Army and the Navy; while the phrase "arm of the line" appropriately designates one of the three classifications of the Army—cavalry, artillery, or infantry.

The amendment of Mr. SCHENCK was adopted. Subsequently, on motion of Mr. BANKS, and by unanimous consent, the amendment was modified by substituting for the word "line" where it first occurs the words "military service;" and by substituting for the same word where it occurs the second time the word "service."

Mr. BLAINE. I move to amend by adding the following at the end of the bill as a new section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That chaplains, when ordered from one field of duty to another, shall be entitled to transportation at the same rate as other officers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. There was offered, on last Tuesday, by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE,] an amendment, on which, at the request of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DAVIS,] the vote was reserved. The amendment will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the twenty-fifth section by adding at the end thereof the following:

Two thirds of all the military store-keepers and ordnance keepers provided for by the seventeenth section of this act and by this section shall be persons who have performed meritorious services as officers or soldiers in the armies of the United States during the late rebellion.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE moved to amend, on page 5, line fifty, after the word "service," by inserting the words "and all of said officers shall be." The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK demanded the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SCHENCK demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and only thirteen voted in the affirmative.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded tellers on the passage of the bill.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ELDRIDGE and SCHENCK were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas forty-five, noes not counted.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I hope, by unanimous consent, the yeas and nays will be ordered on the passage of the bill. It will save a great deal of time and much confusion. This is too important a measure to pass on a vote by tellers. If gentleman are not afraid to go upon the record there will be no objection to the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the vote by which the yeas and nays were refused will be reconsidered, and the question will again recur on ordering the yeas and nays.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The yeas and nays were then ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 72, nays 41, not voting 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Brownell, Cook, Dawes, Deffrees, Deming, Dixon, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, McKuer, Mercier, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Moulton, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perkins, Pike, Pomeroy, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Stilwell, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Robert F. Van Horn, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—72.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Benjamin, Boutwell, Boyer, Broomall, Coffroth, Conkling, Denison, Driggs, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hayes, Hogan, Kasson, Kerr, Latham, Le Blond, Loan, Marshall, McClurg, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Bitter, Ross, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Strouse, Taber, Thornton, Trimble, Warner, James F. Wilson, and Winfield—41.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baxter, Bergen, Blow, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Delano, Dodge, Donnelly, Eckley, Farnsworth, Ferry, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Hart, Henderson, Hill, Hotchkiss, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kelso, Laffin, McIndoe, McKee, Morris, Myers, Newell, Noell, Patterson, Phelps, Plants, Raymond, John H. Rice, Rogers, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stevens, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Whaley, Williams, Woodbridge, and Wright—69.

So the bill was passed.

During the vote,

Mr. MORRILL stated that his colleagues, Mr. BAXTER and Mr. WOODBRIDGE, were absent on account of sickness.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REFUNDING COMMUTATION MONEY.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania, introduced, by unanimous consent, a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to refund money received as commutation from citizens of the twenty-first congressional district of Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EDWARD BLANCHARD.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee of Claims a joint resolution for the adjustment of the claim of Edward Blanchard, executor of Evan M. Buchanan.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. LE BLOND. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas it is the true interest of this Government as speedily as possible, looking alone to the public interest, to return to the constitutional currency of gold and silver; and whereas in the mean time, while the country is to suffer from the inflation of a paper currency, the interest of the people will best be promoted, while such paper currency shall be continued, to have it in the form of Treasury notes issued by the United States, and at once, by appropriate legislation, to provide for retiring the national bank currency: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be directed to inquire into the propriety of repealing the law establishing the national banks and retiring the bonds of the United States as speedily as the public exigency may require, and the issuing of Treasury notes to be used as a circulating medium, thereby saving to the people the payment of over eighteen millions of interest annually upon our public debt, which incurs solely to the benefit of bankers and bond-holders and to the detriment of the tax-payers of the United States.

Mr. BEAMAN. I object.

INTEREST-PAYING TREASURY DEPOSITS.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be requested to inquire into the expediency of repealing such laws as authorize the depositing of money with the Treasurer and Assistant Treasurers of the United States and the payment of interest thereon by the Government.

And then, on motion of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, (at three o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. CONKLING: The petition of William Wilkeson, and a large number of citizens of Buffalo, representing that by the action of officers of the United States, and without legal authority, the port of Buffalo has been virtually closed, and communication by public conveyance and telegraph has been interfered with. The petition prays that a committee may be sent to Buffalo to investigate the matter and recommend action to Congress.

Also, the petition of Jesse Willard, and others, citizens of Clinton, New York, praying a postponement of the tax on State bank circulation.

By Mr. HUBBARD, of New York: The petition of B. F. Reelford, and 90 others, citizens of the county of Chenango, praying Congress to repeal or modify the recent act by which a tax is to be imposed upon any bank that shall pay out the notes of any State bank or banks, on all they shall pay out, on and after the 1st day of July next; setting forth also that such tax will have the effect to retire from circulation immediately about nineteen million dollars of currency in the State of New York alone, thereby tending to produce great pecuniary embarrassment and distress among all the industrial classes of people.

By Mr. KELSO: The memorial of Brevet Major General John B. Sanborn, in favor of those soldiers of southwest Missouri who furnished their private horses in the campaign of 1864.

By Mr. MERCUR: The petition of 54 citizens of Espy, Columbia county, Pennsylvania, asking that the tariff laws may be so amended as to protect the labor of American citizens.

By Mr. RICE, of Maine: The petition of J. E. Hildgard, and 31 others, for a public park for the cities of Washington and Georgetown.

By Mr. TROWBRIDGE: The petition of Thomas F. Smith, of Knoxville, Tennessee, asking for the allowance of a pension in consideration of the loss of his sight in the military service of the United States as a wagoner in the quartermaster's department.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 22, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.
On motion of Mr. POMEROY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CLARK presented the petition and other papers of E. J. Curley, praying for the allowance of payment for forty thousand bushels of corn alleged to have been furnished by him for the use of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of the Cleveland and Toledo Railroad Company, praying that they may be allowed to construct a bridge over and upon the Government piers for the passage of cars across the Cuyahoga river at the city of Cleveland, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1865, have directed me to report in favor of printing the usual number of copies, and also the usual resolution providing for printing ten thousand extra copies. I move that the usual number of copies be printed and that the resolution to print extra copies be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Opocenzky, and thirteen others, Moravians, of Williams's Prairie, Austin county, in the State of Texas, praying for aid to erect a new Evangelical Moravian church and parsonage in that locality, have directed me to report that the prayer of the petition should not be granted. There is no authority for making an allowance of that kind.

The same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John C. Jacobi, chaplain at Kalorama Hospital, praying for compensation for the destruction of his library and other personal property by fire at that hospital on the 24th of December, 1865, have instructed me to report adversely thereon. The Government cannot be considered the insurers of the property of persons in their employ.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of R. L. McElree, praying for compensation for the alleged destruction of his property by fire, by order of the military authorities at Paducah, Kentucky, in March, 1864, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a petition of citizens of the county of Somerset, Maryland, praying for an examination into the order of General Lockwood, who, while in command of the Eastern Shore of that State, caused to be levied certain sums of money for the building of a meeting-house accidentally or designedly destroyed by fire, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 421) for the relief of James G. Holland, late acting assistant paymaster United States Navy, reported it without amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by a majority of the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 527) to promote the construction of a line of railroads between the city of Washington and the Northwest for national purposes, to report the same back to the Senate with the expression of the opinion of that majority that the bill ought not to pass.

I feel it to be my duty to say in this connection that the action of the majority of the committee in this recommendation proceeds upon the idea that Congress has not the constitutional power to enact the law which the bill proposes; that is to say, that Congress has not the constitutional power in any case to authorize the construction of a road or railroad within any State, although for the purposes of commerce or war or the Post Office, without the consent of such State.

As I am one of the minority of the committee, and as my views are exactly opposed to those of the majority, I think it my duty to say that I entirely non-concur in the principle upon which the majority of the committee proceed. I think the constitutional law is clear, that we have authority to pass bills of this description in cases in which the public good absolutely requires it. Of course, it is the exercise of a high power, one which ought not to be exercised except in cases where some national emergency clearly requires it, for the sake of cultivating local harmony and good will; but when such an event does occur, then I think the welfare and the prosperity and the harmony of the States requires that Congress should exercise such a power. I think that the power to "regulate commerce," which is given by the Constitution to Congress, and the power "to establish post offices and post roads," as well as the power "to raise and support armies," clearly cover the exercise of such a function as this; and I think the history of the Confederation and of the reformation of the present Constitution, and the proceedings which took place in respect to these clauses of the Constitution, most clearly demonstrate that it was for such purposes and with a view to the exercise of such powers that these clauses in the present Constitution that I have named were inserted; and that the great and wise men who made these changes, on account of the difficulties and disputes into which the States were getting by their local regulations at that time, foresaw that in the great expansion of trade and of the territory of this country, such a general power, for the general harmony, for free intercourse and intercommunication among the States, it was essential should be exercised by the national authority for the national peace and for the national prosperity.

I do not now, of course, desire to go into a discussion on this subject; but I have thought it to be fit in behalf of the minority of the committee and myself to express these opinions.

I am also instructed to report back from the same committee the bill (H. R. No. 537) to promote the construction of a line of railroad from Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, to Cleveland, Ohio, with the expression of opinion that it ought not to pass, but in this case it is the opinion of the committee that it would be inexpedient to pass the bill even if we had the power.

AMBOY AND TRAVERSE BAY RAILROAD.

Mr. POMEROY. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 243) to extend the time for the reversion to the United States of the lands granted by Congress to aid in the construction of a railroad from Amboy, by Hillsdale and Lansing, to some point on or near Traverse bay, in the State of Michigan, and for the completion of said road, have had the same under consideration, and directed me to report it back with a recommendation that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the bill may be put on its passage at once.

Mr. GRIMES. What is it?

Mr. POMEROY. It is the bill in relation to the Lansing and Traverse Bay Railroad Company, in the State of Michigan. It is to revive a grant that expired two years ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPherson, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill (S. No. 145) for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas railroad and telegraph, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 694) for the relief of Pitcher & Hayford, and Otis & Ferguson, of Belfast, Maine;

A bill (H. R. No. 695) for the relief of William H. Wheeler, of Bangor, Maine;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 119) for the relief of Isaac Ramsey, internal revenue collector for the eighth district of Ohio; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) for the relief of Caroline A. Randall, administratrix and widow of Charles B. Randall, deceased.

MARINE HOSPITALS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 381) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of marine hospitals and revenue-cutters," approved April 20, 1866, to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for immediate action upon it.

Mr. POMEROY. Will it lead to any considerable discussion?

Mr. CHANDLER. Not at all.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the act of April 20, 1866, shall not be construed to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to lease or sell any marine hospital where the relief furnished to sick marines shall show an extent of relief equal to twenty cases per diem, on an average, for the last preceding four years, or where no other suitable and sufficient hospital accommodations can be procured upon reasonable terms for the comfort and convenience of the patients.

Mr. GRIMES. The operation of this bill is merely to restore a proviso which was in the act of April 20 as it passed the Senate and passed the House of Representatives, but was struck out by a clerical error. This will make the law precisely word for word as it passed both Houses.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WADE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 384) to incorporate the Washington Land and Building Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 385) for the relief of Thomas W. Stevens; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TRUMBULL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 386) to enlarge the public grounds surrounding the Capitol; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. TRUMBULL. As this bill has already been considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I move that it be printed and placed on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

POST ROUTE BILL.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to take up Senate bill No. 285, granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to the Red river.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope the Senator from Missouri will allow me to call up the post route bill. It can be disposed of in three minutes. It was interrupted on its passage yesterday by the Senator from Michigan, but he finds on examination that it accomplishes what he desired. I suggest, therefore, that the Senator from Missouri allow this bill to lie over informally for two or three minutes until we pass the post route bill. It is important that it be passed early and sent to the House of Representatives.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no objection if it will take only three minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No objection being made, the bill before the Senate is laid aside, and the Senator from Minnesota moves to take up Senate bill No. 369.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 369) to establish certain post roads.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

KANSAS AND NEOSHO VALLEY RAILROAD.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 285) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad, and its extension to Red river, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands to the eleventh section of the bill, as amended.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not wish to discuss it, but simply to call the attention of the Senate to the question. The eleventh section of the bill is the one that proposes to extend this and other roads down through the Indian country south of the southern boundary of Kansas. My proposition was to strike out the entire eleventh section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion will be in order after the section shall have been perfected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well. Perhaps the amendment may just as well be adopted now, and then I shall move to strike out the whole section, which will reach the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands to the eleventh section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I now move that the eleventh section, as amended, be stricken out. If this motion prevails it will leave this as a road from Kansas City to the southern boundary of Kansas. Whether the Senate will be willing to pass a bill running a parallel road within a few miles of a road already provided for by a grant of lands is for further consideration. The present question is to prevent the running of any of these roads through the Indian country before the absolute right has been secured from the Indian tribes, and to leave this road upon that question just as the other roads now stand. I move to strike out all of the bill which relates to the running of the road through the Indian country.

Mr. HENDERSON. In order that the Senate may understand what the proposition is, I will state that this section provides, inasmuch as there are several roads running down to the southern borders of Kansas, that whichever road gets to the southern limits of Kansas first shall take the grant and go on to the Gulf of Mexico. That is all that this section does. Instead of leaving it open for various competing lines hereafter to ask for several roads through the Indian country, it provides that whatever company builds its road down to the southern borders of Kansas first shall take the grant and go on to build the road to the Gulf, and that there shall be but one road built in that direction. Therefore I think it is nothing but proper that the section should stand as it is. All that we want is a road, and I do not care which of these roads builds down to the southern borders of Kansas first. I am not asking any grant of lands as a matter of favoritism to a particular road, but simply that whichever road gets to the southern boundary of Kansas first shall take the grant and go on with the road; and it will be equally beneficial to any company that gets there first.

Mr. POMEROY. In addition to what the Senator from Missouri has said I desire to say this: the grant beyond the southern line of Kansas is simply a grant of the right of way, with the consent of the Indians. It is not a grant of land, but of the right of way with the consent of the Indian tribes, and all the tribes have made treaties consenting to it except one. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs the other day said he had examined it in its relation to the Indian tribes, and that he had no objections to the bill. It simply gives the right of way through that country to any road that will build to the southern line of the State first. We have tried to harmonize all the conflicting interests, and we believe we have done so. There cannot be any objection to this bill unless it is an objection to the running of a road in that direction. It is simply the right of way that is granted.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before the Senate passes from this question I wish to say a word. In order that Senators may understand fully the proposition, it will be necessary to read the eleventh section. It is a very elaborate section. There is already a road provided for, as I said some days since, from Leavenworth by Lawrence to the southern line of Kansas. This bill proposes to run a road almost parallel, within a verge of from thirty-six miles to one mile from that road, and then to extend the right south of Kansas through the Indian country to a corporation of the State of Kansas. I propose to strike that out in relation to the Indian country.

Mr. POMEROY. It is true that they do start within thirty-six miles of each other, but when they run one hundred miles they are forty miles apart, as I showed the Senator the other day. From Humboldt to Fort Scott, which is one hundred or ninety-seven miles from the starting point, they are forty miles apart; and within that distance land grants are given everywhere in all the States.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Senators can settle that question by turning to the map of the surveys of the public lands of Kansas furnished by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. If the Senator can make six townships forty miles, he has got it; but the Commissioner of the General Land Office locates the road that is already provided for upon the map of the surveys of the State, and the greatest distance from the Missouri line to the road already provided for is six townships on this map.

Mr. POMEROY. That map was made before the road was located at all, on the probable location; but when it came to be actually located, they located it at Humboldt on one road and Fort Scott on the other, and they are forty miles apart.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Senators can examine this map for themselves. It is furnished by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. CRAGIN. If I understand this amendment I am in favor of it. As I understand, it denies the right to any grant through the Indian Territory. I have had occasion during this session to examine this subject quite fully, and I am entirely opposed to any grant through the Indian Territory until the consent of the Indians is fully obtained, and then I would grant simply the right of way. In the Committee on Territories I have had occasion to consult with the various representatives of the Indian tribes or nations residing in this country, and to my great surprise I have found them very intelligent, and many of them cultivated men. They are universally opposed to any railroad through this Territory unless they shall first give their consent. They are willing to grant the right of way, but nothing more.

Mr. POMEROY. That is precisely this bill. No grant is given until they consent.

Mr. CRAGIN. I apprehend that there is something more contemplated by this bill than simply that. I am not willing that this Territory shall lie in the way of public improvements; I am willing that there shall be a right of way granted; but if there is a purpose to obtain from these Indian tribes a grant, which I believe this bill contemplates in the ninth, tenth, and eleventh sections, I am opposed to the passage of the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator surely was not in the Chamber on Wednesday morning when I read the contemplated amendment that I intended to offer to the eighth section; but if the Senator has any fears upon that subject I will pass over the eleventh section now, and take up the eighth section. I propose this amendment to that section:

That the right of way through the Indian Territory, wherever such right is now reserved or may be reserved to the United States by treaty with the Indian tribes, is hereby granted to said company to the same extent as granted by the sixth section of this act through the public lands. And in all cases where the right of way as aforesaid through the Indian lands shall not be reserved to the Government, the said company shall, before constructing its road, procure the consent of the tribe or tribes interested, which consent with all its terms and conditions shall be previously approved and indorsed by the President and filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

No damage can be done to any Indian tribe if this is adopted. Let us pass over the eleventh section and adopt this amendment.

Mr. CRAGIN. That probably will relieve much of my objection, although I should prefer that this consent should be given by treaty with the United States, rather than to allow companies to manage to get the consent of the Indians.

Mr. HENDERSON. But then the road cannot be built until the consent is obtained by treaty, and I will state to the Senator that treaties are now pending before this body made with every Indian tribe except one, the Cherokees, and that the Cherokees have passed a resolution through their Legislature, not only consenting to, but requesting, the building of this road.

Mr. CRAGIN. Perhaps my remarks will not be so appropriate to this amendment. I have objections to the ninth and tenth sections of this bill. The ninth section gives a grant of land through the Indian Territory whenever the Government shall obtain the title to the land there and it shall become public land. I am opposed entirely to the Government ever acquiring this land for any such purpose, because the tendency of it will be to introduce white settlers into that Territory and drive the Indians from it. There are now some eighty thousand Indians in that Territory, and more are to be sent there. If this is designed as an entering wedge to remove those Indians from that Territory then they are to perish in this land, for that is the last resting-place for them.

Then, by the tenth section of this bill, this company is authorized, with the consent of the President, to purchase lands of the Indians, another provision looking in the same direction. I believe this is an entering wedge to a scheme for getting the Indian land for the purposes of this corporation, and ultimately to drive the Indians from this Territory.

As I understand it, Mr. President, the Indians occupying this Territory have a different title to the land from any other Indians. The Cherokees, especially, when they were removed from Georgia to this Territory, were given the most solemn guarantees by the Government of the United States that they should forever remain there and be protected in their rights. They have an absolute fee-simple to the land, with the exception that they cannot dispose of it to any parties except to the Government of the United States. I hope, sir, that this bill will not pass unless these sections are stricken out, and unless it is so guarded that even the right of way shall not be granted until the full consent of each of these Indian nations has been given to the Government of the United States, and not to the railroad corporation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to strike out the eleventh section of the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. POMEROY. I desire to assure the Senate that every precaution is contained in this bill that can be thrown around a bill, that no right of way shall be granted until the Indians assent to it. It cannot be better guarded. If it is the pleasure of Congress to grant any right of way through this country the bill cannot be better guarded in that respect than it is.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is a proposition in round terms to allow corporations of the State of Kansas, not created by any act of Congress, to extend their roads outside, beyond the limits of the State and through the Indian country. My impression is, that these corporations, so far as they shall realize lands from the General Government, ought to be confined to the State, being corporations of the State, and that they shall not extend into the Indian country. Upon that proposition I have moved to strike out the eleventh section.

Mr. HENDERSON. In reply to what was said by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. CRAGIN,] I will state to the Senate that it is the wish, as I understand, of all these Indian tribes to have railroad facilities. If it is the desire of the Senate of the United States never to build a railroad across an Indian reservation, even with the consent of the Indians, they will vote "yea" on this amendment. If it be the belief of the Senate that under certain circumstances a railroad ought to be built across a reservation, by the consent of the Indians, they will vote against the amendment. There is not a dollar's worth of land proposed to be given except when the Indian title shall have been entirely obtained by the United States. But if the United States are going to stand back and say that because there are a few Indian tribes on the plains we shall not be permitted, even with the consent of the Indians, to build a railroad across their lands, or even when the Government has retained the right by treaty with them to do so, then of course they will vote "yea" on this amendment. Otherwise, of course, we ought to have the privilege in this case, because, as the Senator from Kansas says, I have guarded this bill in every way that I know how. As to throwing discredit on this thing because the company is a Kansas company, that, I suppose, will have but little weight with the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. I have heard it asserted here—and I desire to know whether the Senator concurs in that opinion—that these Indians hold their lands under a different title from the Indians on the plains.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Cherokees do, and therefore I provide, by an amendment which I propose, that under no circumstances shall the road go through the Cherokee lands without the consent of the Cherokees, given by an act passed by their Legislature and approved by the President of the United States and filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GRIMES. Has that been adopted?

Mr. HENDERSON. It will be adopted. I suppose there will be no objection to it. I just now proposed to offer that amendment to the eighth section, and I shall do so as soon as the present amendment is disposed of. I assure Senators that if they adopt this section, and if they should not afterward adopt the amendment which I propose, to protect the right of the Indians, I will vote against the bill myself. I do not ask the Senate to do anything that is wrong.

Mr. CLARK. This argument of obtaining the consent of the Indians first is a little delusive. The consent may be obtained to a railroad; but how? By treaty? In whatever mode it is obtained, I have no doubt the Government will have to pay for it, for whenever we make a treaty with an Indian to move off or do anything to land we always pay him a subsidy or a round sum of money for it; and now, when a railroad company wants a route through the Indian Territory, there will have to be a treaty made or consent obtained in some way, which the Government will pay for.

Mr. POMEROY. Does not the Senator know that it is provided for in every one of these treaties but one, which is not yet ratified?

Mr. CLARK. I know that it is provided for in some of the treaties, and I know very well, too, that railroad companies or men who act for railroad companies object to the setting aside of lands for the Indians, on the pretense that a railroad goes through that country, and thus the public good of the Indian is made to give way to the private interests of a railroad company.

Mr. POMEROY. I am not one of those men.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator says he is not one of those men. I charge no such thing upon the Senator; I charge it upon no Senator; but I know such is the fact, and I know such has been the fact this very session. I know such has been the fact in regard to his own State, if he will permit me to say it. When it is proposed to locate an Indian tribe in his own State, on the southern border, by treaty, it is objected that a railroad grant is to be interfered with.

Mr. POMEROY. I made no such objection.

Mr. CLARK. Certainly the Senator made no such objection, but that does not alter the fact which I am stating. Now, I would very much rather that we should have the consent of the Indians in the first instance, that no authority should be given until that assent is obtained and we see the conditions on which it is obtained before we undertake to do a thing of this kind.

Mr. President, I think the Indian Territory should be reserved against not only the settlement of the white man, but should be reserved against the encroachments of a corporation that wants to take their land. These men are fast disappearing. They are driven from one plain to another and from one river to another. There is a Territory down there which we have denominated the Indian Territory, where we have been gathering them together; and now you propose to open it, and let railroads run through and run over and destroy this home for the Indian. I am in favor of railroads through the country; they are the great networks of communication which bind the different parts of the country together; but I would not allow, by a bill of this kind, railroads to run into this Territory, which, for thirty, forty, or fifty years we have been holding sacred, and ought now to hold sacred, as the home of the Indian. If the Indian wants the railroad, let him ask for the railroad there, and give his assent in the first instance.

Mr. HENDERSON. They have done it.

Mr. CLARK. He may have done it in some instances, but I fear very much the influence which is brought to bear upon him in advance to crush him out of his home.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire makes it proper for me to say that this bill provides a new mode of treating with the Indians altogether new in our policy. It provides for a negotiation by a railroad company of a treaty with the Indians, with the assent of the President. The tenth section provides "that said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, shall have the right to negotiate with and acquire from any Indian nation or tribe authorized by the United States to dispose of lands for railroad purposes, and from any other nation or tribe of Indians through whose lands said railroad may pass, subject to the approval of the President of the United States."

That is a new policy altogether. It has been heretofore held that nobody could treat or trade with the Indians in regard to their lands except the Government, and I do not think it is well to depart from that policy. My proposition is simply to let this railroad company, a corporation of the State of Kansas, run its road within the limits of the State to the extent authorized by its Legislature.

Mr. HENDERSON. This is the most remarkable of all the opposition I think I have ever witnessed. The Senator now leaves the eleventh section, which we have under consideration, and goes back and attacks the tenth. Now, what is the tenth section?

That said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, shall have the right to negotiate with, and acquire from, any Indian nation or tribe, authorized by the United States to dispose of lands for railroad purposes.

Is it possible for the United States to make a treaty with the Cherokee nation permitting them to grant alternate sections of these lands to a railroad company, and is it possible that we will say beforehand that they shall not do it? First, there must be a treaty made with the tribe to authorize the tribe to do this thing before this section of the bill will attach at all.

The remarks of the Senator would leave the impression that we are attempting to originate a new mode of treating with the Indians. It is not so. A treaty must first be made authorizing the Indians to permit it to be done or else it cannot be done; and even after the treaty has been made it cannot be done until the action is submitted to the President and approved by the President. That is another guardianship over their rights.

Mr. President, the Indian tribes are not at all damaged by this bill and cannot be. The Cherokee nation has already passed a resolution through its representative body allowing either of these roads, whichever shall build first, the right of way, and appointing commissioners to induce them to build. It is a notorious fact that such is the case; and this is the only tribe we have not already negotiated with and secured the right of way to build railroads from. They are all anxious to have railroads. Is it possible that this rich country, the Cherokee nation, is to be kept closed up forever without railroad facilities? As the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CRAGIN] says, there are intelligent men there, very able men representing them in their Legislature. They are entirely excluded from the outside world; they have no communication at all with it; and they are begging for a railroad company to build a road there. They passed resolutions to that effect by their Legislature. We have cramped and bound up these companies in every way possible in this bill, and yet I hear objections made. First a treaty must be made allowing them to give their lands; secondly, even after they give their lands, their action must be approved by the President—an additional guard and protection—and yet we are told we are trying to rob the Indians! I am sure I would not rob them out of a cent; I do not desire to do it, and I would give no company the power to do it. If this bill is not protected against any wrong, if it is not so guarded that no wrong can be inflicted on the Indian, I myself will not vote for it.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CLARK] intends to be right, I know, but if he will read a clause in the treaty with the Creeks and Seminoles, made on the 7th of August, 1856, he will find these words in the twentieth article:

"The United States or any incorporated company shall have the right of way for railroads or telegraph lines through the Creek and Seminole country."

Then, if he will turn to the treaty made with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, on the 22d of June, 1855, he will find these words in the eighteenth article:

"The United States or any incorporated company shall have the right of way for railroads and lines of telegraph through the Choctaw and Chickasaw country."

The provision has already been made in all the treaties with one exception, and that is under consideration.

Mr. CLARK. I understand that that provision is in some of the treaties.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 8, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clark, Cragin, Davis, Foster, Guthrie, Hendricks, Van Winkle, and Willey—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Fessenden, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Morgan, Poland, Pomerooy, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Wade, Williams, and Yates—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Creswell, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Grimes, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Ramsey, Riddle, Sautsbury, Sumner, Trumbull, Wilson, and Wright—20.

So the motion to strike out the eleventh section did not prevail.

Mr. HENDERSON. I now move to amend the eighth section by striking out all after the word "State," in line eight, being that portion of the section granting the right of way through the Indian country, and in lieu of the words stricken out to insert the following:

The right of way through the Indian Territory wherever such right is now reserved or may hereafter be reserved to the United States by treaty with the Indian tribes, is hereby granted to said company to the same extent as granted by the sixth section of the act through the public lands, and in all cases where the right of way as aforesaid through the Indian lands shall not be reserved to the Government, the said company shall, before constructing its road, procure the consent of the tribe or tribes interested, which consent, with all its terms and conditions, shall be previously approved and indorsed by the President and filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will offer one amendment which I do not propose to discuss. The language of the first section in the thirteenth and fourteenth lines is, "there is hereby granted to the State of Kansas for the use and benefit of said railroad company." As this is a new style of granting lands, making the grant to the company in substance, I move to strike out the words "for the use and benefit of said railroad company," so that the grant may be to the State.

Mr. POMEROY. I should have no objection to the amendment were it not for the fact that the State of Kansas at the last session of its Legislature gave one hundred and twenty-five thousand acres of land, out of the five hundred thousand acres given to the State in the act of admission, to this company, and there is no other company authorized to build this line of road. If the Senator would change the phraseology so as to make this bill read as other bills do, making a grant for a line of railroad between certain specified points, it would be sufficient. This grant, of course, would then go to this company, there being no other company authorized to build this line of road.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That provision is already in the bill. The bill describes the railroad route "from the eastern terminus of the Union Pacific railroad, eastern division, at the line between Kansas and Missouri, at or near the mouth of the Kansas river on the south side thereof, southwardly through the eastern tier of counties in Kansas," &c., "so as to effect a junction at the Red river with a railroad now being constructed from Galveston to Red river."

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope the amendment will not be made. There is no use of it at all. This company has been incorporated to build a road in Kansas, through the eastern part of Kansas down to a certain line. This bill proposes to give the alternate sections of land to that company. There are but few lands in the State, to be sure, which will go under this grant, perhaps not five thousand acres; but the bill proposes to grant lands on the line of this road; and if these words be stricken out the bill will be very awkward indeed. It will provide that the land on each side of this road shall be given to Kansas, and perhaps Kansas can take it and build a road somewhere else, in another direction, away from this route, but they get the lands in consequence of this road being built, and that will leave it in the hands of the Legislature to turn the lands over to some other company. That is all the effect it can have.

Mr. POMEROY. The morning hour is about expiring. Let us vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question as soon as the debate terminates.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move to strike out the ninth section of the bill. It will be seen by this section that here it is in contemplation that these Indian lands shall become public lands, and this section makes a grant to this railroad corporation in such case. Let this bill become a law, and this corporation will go to work at once to procure a treaty from these Indians to obtain this land, and then it will go to the company. If there is no such purpose, there can be no objection to striking out the ninth section. It will remove much of my objection to the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope it will not be done. The Indian right is sufficiently secured. You will protect the Indian by building the railroad. You cannot build the railroad until the Indian gives his consent by treaty anyhow; it is utterly impossible; and after we have the lands, it only proposes then that the right to alternate sections shall attach after treaty stipulations are obtained. The Indians want these railroads just as much as we want them. It is just as much to the advantage of the Indian as of the white man to have these railroads, and I hope the section will not be stricken out.

Mr. CRAGIN. It has come to my knowledge during the session that there have been parties about Washington here anxious for some way to get hold of these Indian lands. In the first place there has been a very strong effort to organize a territorial government in the Territory, a sort of Indian territorial government, with a Governor and other officers appointed by the President, and men have been laboring here to secure that object; and the whole purpose has been, in my judgment, in order that they may get a foothold in the Territory to obtain the lands there. There is such a purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is House bill No. 513.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope the Senator from Maine will give me two minutes to close this bill. This is the sixth morning we have had it up. I will not ask over two minutes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If I yield it will be breaking in upon the rule I have laid down.

Mr. HENDERSON. I only ask about two minutes. We are now about to vote.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I presume there is to be no further debate to any considerable extent on this bill. I want to dispose of it in some way or other. If it is the pleasure of the Senate to give this kind of a grant, very well; but I should like to have it disposed of. I hope the Senator from Maine will let it be disposed of. I suggest that the other business be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of the day can be laid aside by common consent only, without a vote. No objection being interposed, the order of the day is laid aside.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; I cannot agree to have it laid aside except informally for a few moments.

Mr. HENDERSON and Mr. POMEROY. That is all we ask.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If it is to go over informally for a few moments, I shall not object.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is all I ask.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the other bill takes over five minutes, I must insist on going on with the tax bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No objection being made, the order of the day will be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. CRAGIN. I have no special purpose to defeat this bill. As I was saying, there were parties here very anxious to get a foothold in this Territory in order to obtain these lands. I do not charge that that is the purpose of this bill for this company; but it must be perfectly clear to every one that if this bill becomes a law it then at once becomes the interest of the company to obtain these lands under this ninth section. I am opposed to their obtaining the lands under any circumstances whatever. The Indians, as I believe, are willing to grant the right of way to these railroads. I am, for one, willing that they should grant thus much; but the moment they begin to give lands, or the Government buys these lands of them by treaty in order to give them to these railroad corporations, that moment seals the doom of the Indian tribes and nations in that Territory, and they will be driven from there ultimately and become extinguished upon this continent. I am utterly opposed to doing anything here that shall give anything more than the simple right of way through this country, and that only with the consent of the Indian tribes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to strike out the ninth section of the bill.

The motion was not agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION LAW.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. CHANDLER, Mr. EDMUNDS, and Mr. NESMITH as the committee of conference on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 477) further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes.

PARIS UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HARRIS, Mr. CRAGIN, and Mr. GUTHRIE as the committee of conference on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 52) to provide for the expenses attending the exhibition of the products of industry of the United States at the Exposition at Paris in 1867.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. No. 694) for the relief of Pitcher & Hayford, and Otis Ferguson, of Belfast, Maine;

A bill (H. R. No. 695) for the relief of William H. Wheeler, of Bangor, Maine;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 119) for the relief of Isaac Ramsey, internal revenue collector for the eighth district of Ohio; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) for the relief of Caroline A. Randall, administratrix and widow of Charles B. Randall, deceased.

NORTHERN KANSAS RAILROAD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 145) for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas railroad and telegraph.

Mr. POMEROY. I should like to have that lie upon the table for a few moments until it can be examined. I move that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 361) to reorganize and establish the Army of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 698) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mercie E. Scattergood;

A bill (H. R. No. 699) for the relief of James L. Perham;

A bill (H. R. No. 700) for the benefit of John W. Jones;

A bill (H. R. No. 701) granting a pension to Mrs. Imogene Buckingham, of Edgar county, Illinois;

A bill (H. R. No. 702) granting pension to Mrs. Charlotte E. Reed;

A bill (H. R. No. 703) for the relief of Lieutenant Colonel Frank Lynch;

A bill (H. R. No. 704) for the relief of Joel Farley; and

A bill (H. R. No. 705) for the relief of George W. Bush.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following Senate bills without amendment:

A bill (S. No. 200) for the relief of Jane Harris;

A bill (S. No. 276) for the relief of Mrs. Jerusha Witter;

A bill (S. No. 298) granting a pension to Jane D. Brent;

A bill (S. No. 326) granting a pension to Mrs. Harriet B. Crocker;

A bill (S. No. 339) granting a pension to Benjamin Franklin;

A bill (S. No. 342) for the benefit of Ira B. Curtis;

A bill (S. No. 375) to amend an act granting a pension to the widow of the late Major General Hiram G. Berry; and

A bill (S. No. 381) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of marine hospitals and revenue-cutters," approved April 20, 1866.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills with amendments to each, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 180) for the relief of A. J. Gray;

A bill (S. No. 238) granting a pension to Mrs. Amarilla Cook;

A bill (S. No. 275) for the relief Cornelius Crowley; and

A bill (S. No. 330) making further provision for the establishment of an armory and arsenal of construction, deposit, and repair at Rock Island, in the State of Illinois.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 225) for the relief of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 100) for the restoration of Lieutenant Commander Richard L. Law, United States Navy, to the active list from the reserved list.

INTERNAL TAXATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 513) to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, beginning with the tenth section, as follows:

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That sections two, five, eight, nine, ten, and twelve of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864," approved March 3, 1865, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section in line two by striking out the word "ten."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert at the end of section ten the following:

That section six of the act of March 3, 1865, entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that every national bank association, State bank, or State banking association shall pay a tax of ten per cent. on the amount of notes of any person, State bank, or State banking association used for circulation and paid out by them after the 1st day of July, 1867, and such tax shall be assessed and paid in such manner as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

That section fourteen of the same act shall be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that the capital of any State bank or banking association which has ceased or shall cease to exist, or which has been or shall be converted into a national bank, for all the purposes of the act to which this is an amendment, shall be assumed to be the capital as it existed immediately before such bank ceased to exist or was converted as aforesaid; and whenever the outstanding circulation of any bank, association, corporation, company, or person shall be reduced to an amount not exceeding five cent. of the chartered or declared capital existing at the time the same was issued, said circulation shall be free from taxation; and whenever any bank which has ceased to issue notes for circulation shall deposit in the Treasury of the United States, in lawful money, the amount of its outstanding circulation, to be redeemed at par under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, it shall be exempt from any tax upon such circulation; and whenever any State bank or banking association has been converted into a national banking association, and such national banking association has assumed the liabilities of such State bank or banking association, including the redemption of its bills, or by any agreement or understanding whatever with the representatives of such State bank or banking association, shall use the bills of such State bank or banking association, such national banking association shall be held to make the required return and payment on the circulation outstanding, so long as such circulation shall exceed five per cent. of the capital before such conversion of such State bank or banking association.

That an act entitled "An act to declare the meaning of certain parts of the internal revenue act, approved June 30, 1864, and for other purposes," approved March 10, 1866, be amended by striking out sections three, four, and five of said act and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that it shall be the duty of all persons required to make returns or lists of income and articles or objects charged with an internal tax, to declare in such returns or lists whether the several rates and amounts therein contained are stated according to their values in legal-tender currency, or according to their values in coined money; and in case of neglect or refusal so to declare to the satisfaction of the assistant assessor receiving such returns or lists, such assistant assessor is hereby required to make returns or lists for such persons so neglecting or refusing, as in cases of persons neglecting or refusing to make the returns or lists required by the acts aforesaid, and to assess the duty thereon, and to add thereto the amount of penalties imposed by law in cases of such neglect or refusal. And whenever the rates and amounts contained in the returns or lists as aforesaid shall be stated in coined money, it shall be the duty of each assessor receiving the same to reduce such rates and amounts to their equivalent in legal-tender currency, according to the value of such coined money in said currency for the time covered by said returns. And the lists required by law to be furnished to collectors by assessors shall in all cases contain the several amounts of taxes or duties assessed, estimated, or valued in legal-tender currency only.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There are some slight amendments that should be made to that amendment. In line ten after the words "an act to" the words "amend an act entitled 'An act to'" should be inserted; in line thirty-three the word "per" should be inserted before "cent;" in line seventy-one the word "duty" should be stricken out and "tax" inserted; and in line eighty-one the words "or duties" should be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those corrections will be made. The question is on the amendment of the committee as thus amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act the articles and products hereinafter enumerated shall be exempt from internal tax or duty: alum; aluminum; aluminous cake, patent alum, sulphate of alumina, and cobalt; aniline and aniline colors; animal charcoal, or carbon; anvils; articles manufactured in institutions for the blind, and in institutions for the deaf and dumb, which are sold to aid in their support, or the support of the pupils; barrels and casks other than those used for the reception of fluids; packing boxes made of wood; and boxes of wood or paper for friction matches, cigar-lights, and wax tapers; beeswax, crude or refined; bichromate of potash; bleaching powders; blue vitriol; borax, and boric acid; brass not more advanced than rods or sheets; brick, fire-brick, draining-tiles, cement, drain and sewer pipes, and earthen and stone water-pipes; bristles; brooms made from corn, brush, or palm-leaf; building stone of all kinds, including slate, marble, freestone, and soapstone, and rock, ground and calcined gypsum; hunting and flags of the United States, and banners made of hunting of domestic manufacture; burr-stones, millstones, and grindstones, rough or wrought; candle wicking; collins and burial cases; copperas; copper, lead, and tin, in ingots, pigs, or bars; copper and yellow sheathing metal, not more advanced than rods or sheets; crates, and grain or farm baskets made of splints; crucibles of all kinds; crutches and artificial limbs, eyes, and teeth; deer skins, dressed or smoked; feather beds, mattresses, palliases, bolsters, and pillows; fertilizers of all kinds; flasks and patterns used by foundries; flavoring extracts solely for cooking purposes; german silver in bars or sheets; gold leaf and gold foil; hemp and jute prepared for textile or felting purposes; hulls of ships and other vessels; illuminating gas manufactured by educational institutions for their own use exclusively; iron bridges, and castings for iron bridges; keys, actions, and strings for musical instruments; litharge and orange mineral; machines driven by horse power and used exclusively for cutting fire-wood, staves, and shingle bolts, and hand saws; magnesia, calcined magnesia, and carbonate of magnesia; malleable iron castings, unfinished; manganese; masts, spars, ship and vessel blocks, and treenail wedges, and deck plugs; medicinal and mineral waters, of all kinds, sold in bottles or from fountains; mills and machinery for the manufacture of sugar, sirup, and molasses from sorghum, imphee, beets, and corn; mineral coal of all kinds; monuments of stone of all kinds, not exceeding in value the sum of $100; Provided, That monuments exceeding the value aforesaid, erected by public or private contributions to commemorate the service of Union soldiers who have fallen in battle, shall be exempt from taxation; mouldings for looking-glasses and picture frames; muriatic, nitric, and acetic acids; nickel, quicksilver, and sodium; nitrate of lead; oakum; original paintings, statues, and groups of statuary and casts made thereof by the artist from the original designs; oxide of zinc; paints, painter's and paper stainer's colors; paper of all descriptions, except such as is manufactured and used exclusively for wearing apparel; books, maps, charts, and all printed matter, and book-binding; paraffine; paraffine oil, not exceeding in specific gravity thirty-six degrees Baume's hydrometer, the product of a residuum of distillation; lubricating oil made from crude petroleum, coal, or shale not exceeding in specific gravity thirty-six degrees Baume's hydrometer; crude petroleum, and crude oil the product of the first and single distillation of coal, shale, asphaltum, peat, or other bituminous substances; photographs or any other sun picture, being copies of engravings or works of art, when the same are sold by the producer at wholesale at a price not exceeding fifteen cents each, or are used for the illustration of books; pickles when sold by the gallon and not contained in glass packages; pig-iron; muck bar; blooms, slabs, and loops; plows, cultivators, harrows, straw and hay cutters, planters, seed-drills, horse-rakes, hand-rakes, cotton-gins, grain-crudles, and winnowing-mills; pot and pearl ashes; productions of stereotypers, lithographers, engravers, and electrotypers; putty; quinine, morphine, and other vegetable alkaloids, and phosphorus; railroad iron, and railroad iron rerolled; railroad chairs; railroad, boat, and ship spikes; ax polls; iron axles; shoes for horses, mules, and oxen; rivets, horse-shoe nails, nuts, washers, and bolts; vises, iron chains, and anchors, when such articles are made of wrought iron which has previously paid the tax or duty assessed thereon; reapers, mowers, threshing-machines, and separators; corn-shellers and wooden-ware; repairs of articles of all kinds; Roman and water cements, and lime; roofing slate, slabs, and tiles; saleratus, sal soda, caustic soda, crude soda, alumino-silicate of soda; aluminate of soda; bicarbonate of soda; and silicate of soda; sails, tents, awnings, and bags made by sewing from fabrics or other articles upon which a duty or tax has been paid; and bags made of paper; salts of tin; silex used in the manufacture of glass; soap, valued at not above three cents per pound; spelter; spindles and castings of all descriptions made specially for locks or for machinery, and not sold or used for any other purposes, and upon which a tax is assessed and paid on the article of which the casting is a part: spokes, hubs, and felloes; poles, shafts, and arms for carriages or wagons; wooden handles for plows, and for other agricultural, household, and mechanical tools and implements; and pail and tub ears and handles; starch; steel, in ingots, bars, sheet, plate, coil, or wire, hoop-skirt wire covered or uncovered, car wheels, thimbleskins and pipe boxes, and springs, tire and axles made of steel used exclusively for vehicles, cars, or locomotives; and clock springs, faces, and hands; stoves, composed in part of cast iron and in part of sheet iron, or of soapstone or freestone, with or without cast iron or sheet iron: Provided, That the cast and sheet iron shall have paid the tax or duty previously assessed thereon; sugar, molasses, or sirup made from beets, sugar maple, or from sorghum, or imphee; sulphate of barytes; sulphur; tar and crude turpentine; tin cans used for preserved meats, fish, shell-fish, fruits, vegetables, jams, and jellies; umbrellas and parasols, and sticks and frames for the same; value of bullion used in the manufacture of wares, watches, and watch-cases, and bullion prepared for the use of platers and watchmakers; vegetable, animal, and fish oils of all descriptions, not otherwise provided for, including red oil, oleic acid; and admixtures of the same with paraffine oil, not exceeding in specific gravity thirty-six degrees Baumé's hydrometer; verdigris; vinegar; white and red lead; whitening; Paris white; window glass of all kinds; wire made from wire less than number twenty wire gauge, upon which a tax has been assessed and paid as wire; yarn and warp for weaving, braiding, or manufacturing purposes exclusively; yeast powders; zinc in ingots or sheets; Provided further, That the exemptions aforesaid shall, in all cases, be confined exclusively to said articles in the state and condition specified in the foregoing enumeration, and shall not extend to articles in any other form, nor to manufactures from said articles.

The Committee on Finance reported several amendments to this section. The first was in line four to strike out the words "or duty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eighteen to insert the words "and prussiate," so that the clause will read, "bichromate and prussiate of potash."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-four, to strike out the word "and" before "earthen;" and after the words "water pipes" to insert "retorts and tiles made of clay;" so that the clause will read:

Brick, fire-brick, draining-tiles, cement, drain and sewer pipes, earthen and stone water pipes, retorts, and tiles made of clay.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line twenty-nine, the words "and calcined" before "gypsum" should be stricken out; so that the clause will read, "building stone of all kinds, including slate, marble, freestone, and soapstone, and rock, ground gypsum."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. As the words "and calcined" are stricken out, the word "and" should be inserted between the words "rock" and "ground" in the same line.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. After the words "candle-wicking," in the thirty-third line, the word "chronometers" should be inserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in line thirty-eight, after the word "sheets," to insert "and stamped copper bottoms;" so that the clause will read, "copper and yellow sheathing metal not more advanced than rods or sheets, and stamped copper bottoms."

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is a mistake. Those words should not be inserted.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was in line forty-two to strike out the words "dressed or" before the word "smoked;" and after the word "smoked" to insert "or not oil-dressed;" so that it will read, "deer-skins smoked, or not oil-dressed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, after line fifty-two, the following: "India-rubber springs used exclusively for railroad cars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out line fifty-four, in these words: "iron bridges, and castings for iron bridges."

Mr. HOWARD. I hope the Senate will not concur in the amendment striking out the words "iron bridges, and castings for iron bridges."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the Senate will concur in the amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. This is a species of manufacture now comparatively in its infancy. It is becoming, however, an interest of considerable magnitude, and is attracting the attention especially of railroad companies throughout the United States. There are several establishments in the United States at the present time, and one especially of considerable magnitude at the city where I reside, who have been engaged for some years past in prosecuting the enterprise of making iron bridges. They say that it is impossible for them to prosecute the business if the tax which is contemplated by this bill, in case this clause is struck out, is continued to be imposed upon them. Such is the high price of iron at the present time that they will find it impossible to proceed with the enterprise; while the fact is that many railroad companies, especially in the West, are very anxious to provide more solid and durable structures in the shape of bridges for crossing streams on their various routes. When Senators look at it for a moment, they will see the importance of it. An iron bridge, well made, well constructed, must necessarily be a very costly fabric; and its durability, as a means of passing streams, gives it a very great superiority to wooden bridges. I could refer to some instances of disasters that have occurred in crossing railroads upon wooden bridges if I had time, which certainly would attract the attention of Senators to this very important branch of manufacture. I hope that this amendment will not be concurred in.

I think we ought to make iron bridges free of all internal tax for the purpose of encouraging their manufacture and use. It is not so much for the interest of the various companies that may employ them as for the public itself that they ought to be placed upon the free list. Iron at the present time is very costly; and if the iron bridge is to be taxed as a structure, after it has been finished and erected, in proportion to its value, there would be an absolute end of this enterprise; there would be no such thing as an iron bridge. In the West especially, upon our broad streams, this manufacture is attracting attention perpetually, and companies are very anxious to lay down substantial and durable bridges across the streams. It is not exactly so in the eastern States where the streams are far narrower and where a structure of this kind is less necessary than in the West where the streams are so much broader and deeper. By placing them upon the free list we shall greatly encourage the manufacture and use of iron bridges; and in this way we shall save in the end a vast amount of property as well as life to the public. I trust that the Senate will not concur in this amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. I concur with the Senator from Michigan in what he has said on this subject. I believe that this tax, if levied, would be virtually a tax upon the safety of the traveling community. Our purpose should be to encourage the railroad companies to construct such roads and such bridges as will best subserve the interests of the traveling public, and protect them from harm as they do travel. I suppose that gentlemen who have traveled over the country are aware that in some sections of the country we are obliged to resort, in a great degree—and railroads ought to be compelled to resort, and should be, if I had the power to control it—to iron bridges, more than it is necessary that they should resort to them in other sections of the country. In some sections they have stone abutments and stone piers. You can go into some other sections of the country, and there is not enough stone within five hundred miles to make a single pier or abutment. What is the best substitute for it? Iron—iron piles to rest upon; and they ought to be encouraged in using that kind of material in place of putting down cotton-wood that decays in the course of a few months, and thereby jeopardizes the limbs and the lives of those who travel on the roads.

I concur fully with the Committee on Finance in the amendment that they have made following this amendment, and that is, inserting upon the free list "iron drain and sewer pipes." I would do what I could to encourage the corporate authorities of the various cities to protect the lives and health of their citizens by furnishing proper sanitary regulations; and the same principles that would control me in the one case would control me in the other.

Mr. FESSENDEN. All I have to say about it is this: the committee thought that a very large manufacture like this should contribute its share of the public burdens as well as anything else. It is a very large manufacture; it requires a great deal of money, and a considerable profit is obtained from it, and there should be a tax derived from it. Railroads are very much of a favored institution under the tax bill in almost all things; and therefore we thought it would be no more than right that this manufacture should pay its share of the taxes. It is, however, for the Senate to decide. It is a matter about which the committee have no feeling. I am of opinion that the tax had better be retained.

Mr. POLAND. It seems to me quite clear that these iron railroad bridges should be free from taxation. By looking along a little further in this list it will be seen that "railroad iron and railroad iron rerolled," and "railroad chairs and fish-plates," which are the apparatus for fastening the rails upon the ties, are all in the free list—iron in the shape of its simplest form of manufacture. Now, these iron railroad bridges, as has been said by the honorable Senator from Michigan, are most important to the safety of the traveling public. Very many of the most severe, disastrous, and fatal railroad accidents that have happened in the country have been in consequence of the insufficiency of the bridges, the falling of the bridges; so that for the safety and welfare of the traveling community it is important that they should be encouraged to make these permanent and safe bridges. Undoubtedly it would be for the interest of the railroad companies, as a matter of economy, in the long run, that they should make their bridges of iron instead of making them of timber. But every Senator knows that very many of these railroad companies are not very flush of means; they have not a great deal of money; they resort to temporary expedients, and where they can build wooden bridges, and cheap ones at that, they build them; and the result is this lack of safety to the community. Upon principle, in analogy to what is contained in this bill aside from this, it seems to me to be very clear that these iron railroad bridges ought to be exempt.

Mr. HOWARD. I hold in my hand a brief memorandum furnished to me by a very intelligent gentleman who has had this matter under consideration and investigated it very fully, and by the permission of the Senate I will read a few paragraphs from it. He says:

"1. Iron bridges, especially upon railroads, are a great public necessity as safeguards against both fire and decay, and so they are a great public necessity as a means of safety to life, person, and property, against the worst class of accidents and losses occurring upon railroads.

"The correctness of this statement is illustrated in case of the bridge at Troy, over the Hudson, on the Troy and Schenectady railroad, which was burned two or three years ago, and also a considerable portion of that city as a consequence of it. It is also illustrated by the giving way and falling of the bridge on the Great Western railroad, Canada, over the Des Jardine canal, near Hamilton, owing to internal decay, on account of which a large number of passengers lost their lives. Similar cases are continually occurring, here and there, throughout the country. Iron bridges would be effectual preventives against such calamities.

"2. Railroad bridges are at present very generally made of wood; whereas they would as generally be made of iron were it not for the very great cost of that material—a cost so great as to be prohibitory in most cases. It makes this class of work come so high as to prevent it from being adopted and ordered, and consequently almost wholly cuts off this branch of business.

"There is an immense iron-bridge-making establishment in Detroit. The railroads want their work, extremely. They have made estimates for and corresponded in reference to enough to keep them vigorously employed for four or five years with as many as six hundred hands, yet they have little or nothing to do in this description of work. The roads either resort to wood or anxiously wait for a decline in the cost of iron to a point within their control. The result is, that the investment in this establishment for this line of business is, substantially, dead capital; the owners lose the use of their property; hundreds of mechanics are cut off from employment; neither the roads nor the public get the benefit of these bridges, and the Government gets no revenue. And so it goes. Other like establishments undergo a like oppressive experience; for example, the one in Baltimore, belonging to Mr. Wendell Bollman, the inventor of an iron bridge known as Bollman's Iron Suspension Truss Bridge, to which a distinguished commission, consisting of Generals Sherman and Pope and Governor Fletcher, awarded a first premium of $1,000 in a comparison of merit and skill as large and severe as the eastern, middle, southwestern, and western States could make.

"3. By exempting iron bridges and their several parts from excise, Congress would do much toward removing the difficulty in the way of their adoption and manufacture.

In ordinary cases iron suspension truss bridges, such as Bollman's or Fink's—the cheapest as well as the best styles yet invented—are composed of wrought and cast iron of nearly equal quantities by weight; but when erected over a navigable river, where they might possibly be liable to be struck, laterally by a steamboat or other vessel, they have to be made almost wholly of wrought iron. By the excise laws now in force, the cast iron in those bridges is taxed, by duplication, six dollars per ton; the wrought iron eight dollars and forty cents per ton. These excise duties on the parts, of course, increase the cost of these structures very materially; in case of the bridge contemplated at Dubuque as much as $16,000; in that at Quincy not less than $20,000. This is the effect of the old law now in force on the parts of those bridges, saying nothing of them as finished manufactures.

"In view of the considerations now stated, the principal railroads of the West, including several in Ohio, with the bridge-making establishments spoken of, have petitioned the present Congress to exempt iron bridges and their several parts from excise, so as to encourage their adoption and manufacture and render the same more practicable. Several of these petitions are now in the hands of the Finance Committee of the Senate. I submit that what these petitioners seek, in the matter of excise, should be granted on the ground that the public good and just relief to the railroad companies, and especially to a very important branch of industry, imperiously demand it.

"But suppose iron bridges should be struck from the free list, and this act in other respects become a law, how would iron bridges be affected by it? Take the bridge, for example, contemplated at Dubuque. It will require not far from two thousand tons of wrought iron being over a navigable stream; and the iron superstructure will cost about $600,000. The excise tax on the separate parts of the bridge would be, by duplication, $10,000; on the bridge as a completed manufacture, $30,000; total $40,000. In the same way the excise on the contemplated iron bridge at Quincy would be $50,000."

I will read no more from this memorandum. I trust that the Senate will see fit to non-concur in the amendment suggested by the Committee on Finance, and place iron bridges on the free list. I think the public good requires it as well as the interests of the railroad companies and of the traveling public.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOWARD. I now wish to amend that clause so as to make it more exact in its signification. I move to insert after the words "iron bridges" the words "and the parts thereof," and to strike out the words "castings for iron bridges," so that it will read, "iron bridges and the parts thereof."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know what that would cover. I do not know what the effect of it would be. Why not let it stand as it is?

Mr. HOWARD. The reason of it is—

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think it is fair to strike out everything connected with iron bridges, because we do not know how it may affect the residue of the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. The reason of it is this: the parts of an iron bridge must necessarily be manufactured as such before the fabric is completed, and the object of my amendment is simply to exempt those parts that have been manufactured in anticipation of being put in the structure from taxation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know how far that would go; whether they ought to be exempt; or how it would affect other things in the bill. The Senator has had the clause retained as it is: "iron bridges and castings for iron bridges."

Mr. HOWARD. There is about half the structure that consists of wrought iron.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Wrought iron is not exempted anywhere, and it ought not to be exempted anywhere.

Mr. HOWARD. I think the parts of iron bridges made of wrought iron ought to be exempt; but I will allow my amendment to lie over for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HOWARD. I will offer another amendment to come in after line fifty-four.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest that the Senator had better retain his amendment for the present until the committee's amendments are disposed of.

Mr. SPRAGUE. If the committee have no objection, I should like to insert the word "flax" after the word "hemp," in the forty-ninth line, so that the clause will read, "hemp, flax, and jute, prepared for textile or felting purposes." It was probably omitted by mistake.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the Senator had better withhold that for the present. That is made into very much finer manufactures, and it is doubtful whether it is expedient to exempt flax. It would cover very large linen factories which are doing exceedingly well now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island persist in his motion to amend the bill?

Mr. SPRAGUE. I think it was intended to be there, and I can see no possible objection to it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It has no connection with this clause at all.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I withdraw my amendment.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert after line fifty-four the following: "iron drain and sewer pipes."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line sixty-four, after the word "plugs," to insert "cordage, ropes, and cables made of vegetable fiber;" so that the clause will read:

Masts, spars, ship and vessel blocks, and treenail wedges, and deck-plugs, cordage, ropes, and cables made of vegetable fiber.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line sixty-seven, after "fountains," to insert "and mead;" so as to read "medicinal and mineral waters of all kinds, sold in bottles or from fountains, and mead."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines sixty-eight and sixty-nine, as follows:

Mills and machinery for the manufacture of sugar, sirup, and molasses from sorghum, imphee, beets, and corn.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose that question was settled by the vote of the Senate yesterday. This being included in the three per cent. provision, it should follow the same fate and be left in.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was in line seventy, after the word "kinds," to insert "and peat," so as to read, "mineral coal of all kinds, and peat."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eighty-six to insert the word "printing" before "paper," and after the word "descriptions" to strike out the words "except such as is manufactured and used exclusively for wearing apparel," and to insert "and tarred paper for roofing and other purposes;" so that the clause will read:

Printing paper of all descriptions and tarred paper for roofing and other purposes; books, maps, charts, and all printed matter, and book-binding.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee why it is that other paper beside printing paper is still subject to taxation?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It should probably bear a slight duty, and we put it on the three per cent. list.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line ninety-one, after the word "hydrometer," to strike out the words "the product of;" in line ninety-two, after the word "distillation," to insert "or the products thereof;" and line ninety-five, after the word "hydrometer," to insert "provided, that such oil shall be subject to the same inspection as illuminating oil;" so that the clause will read:

Paraffine; paraffine oil, not exceeding in specific gravity thirty-six degrees Baume's hydrometer, a residuum of distillation, or the products thereof; lubricating oil made from crude petroleum, coal, or shale not exceeding in specific gravity thirty-six degrees Baume's hydrometer: Provided, That such oil shall be subject to the same inspection as illuminating oil: crude petroleum, and crude oil the product of the first and single distillation of coal, shale, asphaltum, peat, or other bituminous substances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and seventeen, after the words "railroad iron," to insert "and fish-plates."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I am very glad to see that railroad iron is placed on the free list. It will be recollected that we had a debate on the subject last year. The tariff bill of last year raised the tariff on imported railroad iron ten cents on the hundred pounds because a tax was put upon its manufacture in this country. We all acquiesced in that; but now the question occurs, if we take off the tax from the manufacture in this country, whether we ought not also, when the tariff bill comes in, to reduce the duty thereon.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We cannot act on the tariff bill now, because it is not before us.

Mr. POMEROY. I understand that. I only make this remark because I shall call attention to it when the tariff bill comes in.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I presume that matter will be arranged in the tariff bill.

Mr. POMEROY. I am very glad this provision is incorporated here, but it will not make railroad iron one cent cheaper unless the tariff is amended. The manufacturers will have the benefit of no taxation, but it will not make a difference of a cent a pound in the price in the market.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator's argument will come in better on the tariff bill.

Mr. POMEROY. I intend to make it there, and here, too.

The next amendment was to strike out lines one hundred and twenty-three and one hundred and twenty-four, as follows:

Reapers, mowers, threshing-machines, and separators: corn-shellers, and wooden-ware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FESSENDEN. As that clause is retained, I move to add at the end of it "cotton and hay presses."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. After line one hundred and twenty-five I move to insert:

Residuaums, the product of mineral, vegetable, or animal substances drawn from stills after distillation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert after line one hundred and thirty-three "salt-peter."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line one hundred and forty, after the word "locks," to strike out the words "or for machinery" and to insert "safes, looms, spinning-machines, pumps, hot-air and hot-water furnaces, and sewing-machines;" so that the clause will read:

Spindles and castings of all descriptions made specially for locks, safes, looms, spinning-machines, pumps, steam-engines, hot-air and hot-water furnaces, and sewing-machines, and not sold or used for any other purposes, and upon which a tax is assessed and paid on the article of which the casting is a part.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting after the word "safes" the word "scales."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to hear some reason for that.

Mr. POLAND. The evident object of the bill is to avoid double taxation; and so this very amendment that the committee propose provides that "spindles and castings of all descriptions made especially for locks, safes, looms, spinning-machines, pumps, steam-engines, hot-air and hot-water furnaces, and sewing-machines," shall be exempt.

Mr. FESSENDEN. These are articles which otherwise pay five per cent. Scales are in the three per cent. list, so that they do not come under this. They are not doubly taxed.

Mr. POLAND. The tax on scales is not as large as upon these articles, but—

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator will look at the last part of the paragraph he will see that it reads, "and upon which a tax is assessed and paid on the article of which the casting is a part." It is intended to prevent a double tax. They pay five per cent. on these particular articles; but on scales the tax is but three per cent.; and if scales are put in here they would have an advantage over all other articles that are in the three per cent. list.

Mr. POLAND. It is true the double taxation is not as severe on scales as on articles that pay a tax of more than three per cent. The double taxation is not as harsh upon scales as it would be where the tax is higher; but really there is about the same reason why scales should be put upon the freelist as many of these articles that we have voted in, such as reapers and mowing-machines. They are articles of very general and extensive use among the agriculturists of the country. They may be regarded as a general implement in use among farmers throughout the country, so that there is a reason why the tax upon scales has been made less than upon some of these other articles. Unless there was some difference between them the tax should have been the same upon scales as upon sewing-machines and those other articles which it is said stand in the list at five per cent.; so that furnishes no reason whatever.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator will have scales changed from the three per cent. to the five per cent. list, he may put "scales" in here and put them all on an equality. I do not see why he should want an advantage of three per cent. in favor of castings for scales. Let them all stand on an equal footing.

Mr. POLAND. I am not skilled enough in the manufacture of scales to know whether that would be a good trade or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESSENDEN. It would then put them on an equality with the other things. That is all.

Mr. POLAND. If the chairman of the committee will allow this to pass over for a time until I can consider—

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator can move any amendment after the committee get through.

Mr. POLAND. Well, I withdraw my amendment for the present.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert the word "bows" after "hubs," in line one hundred and forty-five, and after the word "handles," in line one hundred and forty-nine, to add "and wooden tanks, and cisterns for crude mineral oil;" so as to make the item read:

Spokes, hubs, bows, and felloes; poles, shafts, and arms for carriages or wagons; wooden handles for plows, and for other agricultural, household, and mechanical tools and implements; and pail and tub ears and handles; and wooden tanks and cisterns for crude mineral oil.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line one hundred and forty-five I move to strike out "and" before "arms," and after the word "arms" to insert "and wheels not ironed or finished."

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suggest to the Senator that a practical workman suggested to me that the word "unfinished" ought to be inserted after "wagons." That qualification ought to apply to the wagon.

Mr. BROWN. That is another matter. Let us pass on this.

Mr. FESSENDEN. These are the parts in the rough which go to the composition of carriages and wagons: "spokes, hubs, bows, and felloes; poles, shafts, arms, and wheels not ironed or finished for carriages or wagons."

Mr. HENDRICKS. That would be near enough right, I suppose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think "spokes, hubs, and felloes" include all the parts except the iron.

Mr. BROWN. All the parts are enumerated there, but they are sometimes put together and furnished in that shape to avoid difficulty of construction where they are received.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section in line one hundred and fifty-two by inserting after "bars" the words "rails made and fitted for railroads."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to make an amendment to insert after "steel," in line one hundred and fifty-two, the words "made from iron advanced beyond muck, bar, blooms, slabs, or loops;" so as to make the clause read:

Steel made from iron advanced beyond muck, bar, blooms, slabs, or loops, in ingots, bars, rails made and fitted for railroads, sheet, plate, coil, or wire, hoop-skirt wire, covered or uncovered, car wheels, thimble skains and pipe boxes, and springs, tire and axles made of steel, used exclusively for vehicles, cars, or locomotives; and clock springs, faces, and hands.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to ask a question of the chairman of the committee in regard to the items enumerated in the clause from line one hundred and fifty-two to line one hundred and fifty-seven of this section. All these articles enumerated here are made of steel?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Is a tax put upon tires and axles made of iron?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is taken off.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not find it. It struck me this covered only steel tires and axles.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know that the iron wheels are exempt.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is what I want to come at.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is a peculiar reason in regard to steel.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I merely wish to understand the section.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This item is in regard to articles made of steel.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to insert "fire-brick" after "soapstone" in line one hundred and fifty-nine; so that the item will read:

Stoves, composed in part of cast iron and in part of sheet iron, or of soapstone, fire-brick, or freestone, with or without cast iron or sheet iron: Provided, That the cast and sheet iron shall have paid the tax or duty previously assessed thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section in line one hundred and sixty-three by inserting "corn" after "beets," so as to read, "sugar, molasses, or sirup made from beets, corn, sugar maple, or from sorghum, or imphee."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed to amend by striking out the item "sulphate of barytes" in line one hundred and sixty-five.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Why strike that out?

Mr. FESSENDEN. We thought it could pay a tax.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It ought not to do so.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed in line one hundred and sixty-six, after "sulphur," to insert "flowers of sulphur and sulphur flour."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These words will be added, no objection being interposed.

The committee proposed in line one hundred and sixty-nine, after "jams," to strike out "and;" and after "jellies" to insert "paints, oils, and spices;" so that if amended the item would read:

Tin cans used for preserved meats, fish, shell-fish, fruits, vegetables, jams, jellies, paints, oils, and spices.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed to amend by inserting after line one hundred and eighty-three the following item:

Wine made of grapes, currants, or other fruits, and rhubarb.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to amend by inserting at the end of the paragraph, after line one hundred and eighty-six, these words:

And no manufactured wire shall pay a greater tax than that imposed on number twenty wire gauge.

The clause will then read:

Wire made from wire less than number twenty wire gauge, upon which a tax has been assessed, and paid as wire; and no manufactured wire shall pay a greater tax than that imposed on number twenty wire gauge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That all lists or returns required to be made monthly by any person, firm, company, corporation, or party whatsoever, liable to duty or tax shall be made on or before the 10th day of each and every month, and the duty or tax assessed or due thereon shall be certified or returned by the assessor to the collector on or before the last day of each and every month. And all lists or returns required to be made quarterly, and all other lists or returns, for which no provision is otherwise made, shall be made on or before the 10th day of each and every month in which said list or return is required to be made, or succeeding the time when the tax or duty may be due and liable to be assessed, and the tax or duty thereon shall be certified or returned as herein provided for monthly lists or returns. And the duty or tax shall be due and payable on or before the last day of each and every month. And in case said tax or duty is not paid on or before the last day of each and every month, the collector shall proceed to collect the same in the manner provided by law; and so much of the eighty-third section of the act to which this is an amendment is hereby repealed; and in all cases of neglect to make such lists or returns, or in case of false and fraudulent returns, the provisions of existing law as amended by this act shall be applicable thereto.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out the words "duty or" before "tax," in line three and line five and wherever else they occur in that section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY.) That correction will be made.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by striking out the following words:

And in case said tax or duty is not paid on or before the last day of each and every month, the collector shall proceed to collect the same in the manner provided by law; and so much of the eighty-third section of the act to which this is an amendment is hereby repealed.

And in lieu thereof inserting:

And in case said tax is not paid on or before the last day of each and every month the collector shall add ten per cent. thereto: Provided, That notice of the time when such tax shall become due and payable shall be given in such manner as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and if said tax shall not be paid on or before the last day of the month as aforesaid, it shall be the duty of said collector to demand payment thereof, with ten per cent. additional thereto in the manner prescribed by law, and if said tax and ten per cent. additional are not paid within ten days from and after such demand thereof, it shall be lawful for the collector or his deputy to make distraint therefor as provided by law, and so much of section eighty-three of the act of June 30, 1864, as amended by the act of March 3, 1865, as relates to the time of payment and collection of tax is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary next read the thirteenth section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That apothecaries who manufacture, for their own dispensation and sales to consumers and to physicians, the medicines compounded according to the United States or other national pharmacopoeias, or of which the full and proper formula is published in any of the dispensatories now or hitherto in common use among physicians or apothecaries, or in any pharmacopoeial journal now issued by any incorporated college of pharmacy, shall not be regarded as manufacturers under this act. But apothecaries and all other persons who manufacture for the dispensing and sales of others, or who make and advertise any article, medicinal or otherwise, simple or compound, with any special proprietary claim to merit, or to special advantage in use or effect, whether such claim be based on the properties, qualities, price, or any other distinctive or distinguishing characteristic, whether real or pretended, of the articles so made and advertised, whether such article be or be not made according to the authorities above cited in this section, shall be regarded as manufacturers under this act. And apothecaries shall not be regarded as retail dealers in liquors in consequence of selling or of dispensing, upon physicians' prescriptions, the wines and spirits official in the United States and other national pharmacopœias, either simple or compounded, in quantities not exceeding half a pint of either at any one time, nor exceeding in aggregate cost value the sum of $300 per annum.

The committee proposed to strike out after the word "act," in line nineteen, the following words:

And apothecaries shall not be regarded as retail dealers in liquors in consequence of selling or of dispensing, upon physicians' prescriptions, the wines and spirits official in the United States and other national pharmacopœias, either simple or compounded, in quantities not exceeding half a pint of either at any one time, nor exceeding in aggregate cost value the sum of $300 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read section fourteen, as follows:

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That no duty or stamp shall be required for any uncompound medicinal drug or chemical, nor any medicine compounded according to the United States or other national pharmacopœia, or of which the full and proper formula is published in any of the dispensatories now or hitherto in common use among physicians or apothecaries, or in any pharmaceutical journal now issued by any incorporated college of pharmacy, when not sold or offered for sale, or advertised under any other name, form, or guise than that under which they may be severally denominated and laid down in said pharmacopœias, dispensatories, or journals as aforesaid; nor medicines sold to or for the use of any person, which may be mixed and compounded for said person according to the written receipt or prescription of any physician or surgeon. But nothing in this section shall be construed to exempt from stamp duty any medicinal articles, whether simple or compounded by any rule, authority, or formula published or unpublished, which are put up in a style or manner similar to that of patent or proprietary medicines in general, and advertised in newspapers or by public handbills for popular sale and use, as having any special proprietary claim to merit, or to any peculiar advantage in mode of preparation, quality, use, or effect, whether such claim be real or pretended.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In the first line of section fourteen I move to strike out "duty or" before "stamp," and after "stamp" to insert "tax," and to strike out "required for" and insert "imposed upon;" so that it will read, "that no stamp tax shall be imposed upon any uncompound medicinal drug," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line three, after the word "nor," I move to insert "upon."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert "for" after "nor" in line twelve.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It should be "upon" instead of "for" to correspond with the previous amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The word "duty" in line sixteen should be "tax."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The word "and" before "advertised," in line twenty, should be "or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 15. And be it further enacted, That in case any goods or commodities for or in respect whereof any tax or duty is or shall be imposed, or any materials, utensils, or vessels proper or intended to be made use of for or in the making of such goods or commodities shall be removed, or shall be deposited or concealed in any place, with intent to defraud the United States of such duty or tax, or any part thereof, all such goods and commodities, and all such materials, utensils, and vessels respectively, shall be forfeited; and in every such case, and in every case where any goods or commodities shall be forfeited under this act, or any other act of Congress relating to the internal revenue, all and singular the casks, vessels, cases, or other packages whatsoever, containing, or which shall have contained, such goods or commodities, respectively, and every vessel, boat, cart, carriage, or other conveyance whatsoever, and all horses or other animals, and all things used in the removal or for the deposit or concealment thereof, respectively, shall be forfeited; and every person who shall remove, deposit, or conceal, or be concerned in removing, depositing, or concealing any goods or commodities for or in respect whereof any duty or tax is or shall be imposed, with intent to defraud the United States of such duty or tax or any part thereof, shall be liable to a fine or penalty of not exceeding $500.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out "or duty" after "tax" in line three.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That alteration will be made.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to strike out "duty or" before "tax" in line seven.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line twenty-one and in line twenty-three I move to strike out "duty or" before "tax."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 16. And be it further enacted, That the judge of any circuit or district court of the United States or any commissioner thereof, may issue a search warrant, authorizing any internal revenue officer to search any premises, if such officer shall make oath in writing that he has reason to believe, and does believe, that a fraud upon the revenue has been or is being committed upon or by the use of said premises.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this section.

The Secretary read section seventeen of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That in case any person shall sell, give, or purchase or receive any box, barrel, bag, or any vessel, package, wrapper, cover, or envelope of any kind, stamped, branded, or marked in any way, so as to show that the contents or intended contents thereof have been duly inspected, or that the tax or duty thereon has been paid, or that any provision of the internal revenue laws has been complied with, whether such stamping, branding, or marking may have been a duly authorized act or may be false and counterfeit, or otherwise without authority of law, said box, barrel, bag, vessel, package, wrapper, cover, or envelope being empty, or containing anything else than contents which were therein when said articles had been so lawfully stamped, branded, or marked by an officer of the revenue, or falsely or fraudulently stamped, branded, or marked, shall be liable to a penalty of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars; and all such boxes, barrels, bags, vessels, packages, wrappers, covers, and envelopes, with their contents, shall be forfeited to the United States. And any person who shall make, manufacture, or produce any box, barrel, bag, vessel, package, wrapper, cover, or envelope, stamped, branded, or marked as above described, or shall stamp, brand, or mark the same, as hereinbefore recited, shall, upon conviction thereof, be liable to penalty as before provided in this section. And any person who shall violate the foregoing provisions of this section, with intent to defraud the revenue, or to defraud any person, shall, upon conviction thereof, be liable to a fine of not less than $1,000, or imprisonment for not less than six months, or both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court; and all such articles, with their contents, shall be forfeited to the United States.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend the section by striking out "or duty" after "tax" in line six.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Before the word "contents," in line twelve, the word "the" should be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by striking out after "revenue," in line fourteen, the words "or falsely or fraudulently stamped, branded, or marked," and inserting "such person."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "dollars," in line seventeen, to strike out the words "and all such boxes, barrels, bags, vessels, packages, wrappers, covers, and envelopes, with their contents, shall be forfeited to the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause at the end of the section:

And all such articles, with their contents, shall be forfeited to the United States.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And all articles sold, given, purchased, received, made, manufactured, produced, branded, stamped, or marked in violation of the provisions of this section, and all their contents, shall be forfeited to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the eighteenth section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 18. And be it further enacted, That where any whisky, oil, tobacco, or other articles of manufacture or produce, requiring brands, stamps, or marks of whatever kind to be placed thereon, shall be sold upon distraint, forfeiture, or other process provided by law, the same not having been branded, stamped, or marked as required by law, the officer selling the same shall, upon sale thereof, fix or cause to be affixed the brands, stamps, or marks so required, and deduct the expense thereof from the proceeds of such sale.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this section.

Sections nineteen and twenty, to which no amendment was reported, were read as follows:

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That manual-labor schools and colleges shall not be required to pay a manufacturer's or special tax while the proceeds of the labor of such institutions are applied exclusively to the support and maintenance of such institutions.

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That no suit shall be brought against any collector of customs or of internal revenue for any duty, license, special tax, or tax paid, unless such suit is brought within six months from the passage of this act, or within six months after the payment of such duty or tax.

The Secretary read the twenty-first section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 21. And be it further enacted, That section fifteen of the act of March 3, 1865, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1864," be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that in any port of the United States in which there is more than one collector of internal revenue, the Secretary of the Treasury may designate one of said collectors to have charge of all matters relating to the exportation of articles subject to tax under the laws to provide internal revenue; and at such ports as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem it necessary, there shall be an officer appointed by him to superintend all matters of exportation and drawback, under the direction of the collector, whose compensation therefor shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but shall not exceed, in any case, an annual rate of $2,000, excepting at New York, where the compensation shall be an annual rate of $3,000. And all the books, papers, and documents in the bureau of drawback in the respective ports, relating to the drawback of duties paid under the internal revenue laws, shall be delivered to said collector of internal revenue; and any collector of internal revenue, or superintendent of exports and drawbacks, shall have authority to administer such oaths and certify to such papers as may be necessary under any rules and regulations that may be prescribed under the authority herein conferred.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line twenty-two of that section the word "duties" should be "taxes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The Secretary read sections twenty-two and twenty-three, to which no amendment was reported, as follows:

SEC. 22. And be it further enacted, That every person, firm, or corporation, who distills or manufactures spirits or alcohol by continuous distillation from grain, who brews or makes mash, wort, or wash, for distillation or the production of spirits, shall be deemed a distiller under this act. And the making or keeping by any person of grain, mash, wash, or beer, prepared or fit for distillation, together with the possession by such person of a still or other apparatus capable of use for distilling, upon the same premises, shall be deemed and taken as presumptive evidence that such person is a distiller within the meaning of this act.

SEC. 23. And be it further enacted, That every person, firm, or corporation, who rectifies, purifies, or refines distilled spirits or wines by any process, or who, by mixing distilled spirits or wine with any materials, manufactures any spurious, imitation, or compound liquors for sale, under the name of whisky, brandy, gin, rum, wine, "spirits" or "wine bitters," or any other name, shall be regarded as a rectifier under this act.

The twenty-fourth section was next read, as follows:

SEC. 24. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall carry on any business of distilling or rectifying without having paid the special tax as required by law, he or they shall, for every such offense, besides being liable to the payment of the tax upon the spirits distilled, also be liable to a penalty of one hundred per cent. in addition thereto, to be assessed by the assessor, and shall each be subject, upon conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; and upon sufficient information of such offense, the collector, deputy collector, or other authorized officer of the district in which the same shall be alleged to have been committed, may enter upon the premises of the person or persons by whom such offense is alleged to have been committed, using such force as may be necessary for that purpose, and may seize all spirits or spirituous liquors, and all materials for making or preparing the same respectively, and all vessels and utensils containing the same, and all stills or other apparatus capable of being used for distilling, and may hold the same. And the said collector, upon the assessment aforesaid having been made, and upon the conviction of the said person or persons, shall sell such stills, apparatus, and other materials, vessels, utensils, and liquors so seized, and shall apply the proceeds in satisfaction of such assessment, and of the fine, if imposed; and the said assessment and fine, or such part thereof as shall not have been so satisfied, shall, until paid, be a lien in favor of the United States, from and after the time when such assessment is made, or such fine laid, upon all property and rights to property of the person by whom such offense shall have been committed, and upon his interest in the lands and premises in which it shall have been committed, and upon all his property therein, and such lien may be enforced by levy and distraint by said collector, or by suit in rem; and when the personal property found shall not be sufficient to satisfy the same, such lands and premises may be seized, and upon the decree of the court the interest aforesaid sold, and proceeds applied in payment thereof; and such assessed penalties and fines, when recovered, shall be distributed according to law.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out all of this section after the enacting clause, and in lieu of the words stricken out to insert the following:

That if any person shall carry on the business of a distiller or rectifier without having paid the special tax, as required by law, he shall for every such offense be liable to a fine of not less than double the tax imposed upon the spirits distilled, or double the special tax due for the spirits rectified by such person or found upon the premises hereinafter mentioned, and to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years; and all the spirituous liquors so distilled or rectified, or owned by such person, or found as hereinafter mentioned, and all materials for making or preparing the same, and all vessels containing the same, and all stills or other apparatus capable of being used for distilling, owned by such person or found upon any premises where such business shall be carried on in violation of this section, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized by the collector or deputy collector of the district within which such offense is committed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Committee on Finance propose to strike out sections twenty-five, twenty-six, and twenty-seven, and to put them in a new draft which will be found on pages 183, 184, and 185. Unless some Senator insists on the reading of the sections stricken out, their reading may be dispensed with.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is there no change but in phraseology?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The substance of the three sections is put into one section, in a new draft. That is all. The sections can be read if their reading is desired.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not wish to have them read if the committee only propose a mere change of phraseology.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the sections proposed to be stricken out will be dispensed with.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be inserted as section twenty-five, in lieu of sections twenty-five, twenty-six, and twenty-seven of the House bill, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That every person engaged in or intending to be engaged in the business of a distiller or rectifier, shall give notice in writing, subscribed by him, to the assessor of the district within which such business is to be carried on, stating the name or style under which, the name or names, and the place or places of residence of the person or persons by whom and the place where said business is to be carried on, and whether of distilling or rectifying. In case of a distiller, the notice shall also state the kind of stills, boilers, and other implements to be used, the capacity of each, the name or names of the owner or owners of the premises on which the distillery is or is to be situated, and if such premises are leased, the terms of the lease. In case of any change in the location, form, capacity, ownership, agency, or superintendence of such distillery, still, boilers, or other implements, like notice shall be given, as aforesaid, within twenty-four hours of such change. Such person shall also give bond, in form to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with sureties approved by the collector aforesaid, who may approve the same if he shall be satisfied, by affidavits made on said bond, of the sufficiency of said sureties, conditioned that he will comply with all the requirements of the law in relation to distilled spirits. The penal sum of such bond shall be equal to double the amount of the tax on the spirits that can be distilled by such still or stills or other implements during a period of fifteen days; said collector may refuse to approve said bond when, in his judgment, the location of the distillery is such as would enable the distiller to defraud the revenue, and in case of such refusal, the distiller may appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, whose decision in the matter shall be final. A new bond may be required in case of the death, insolvency, or removal of either of the sureties, or in any other contingency, at the discretion of the collector.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to add to the section just adopted these words:

Any person failing to give the notice or bond hereinbefore required, or giving a false or fraudulent notice, shall be liable to the fine and forfeiture provided in the last preceding section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read section twenty-eight, which by virtue of the amendments already made becomes section twenty-six:

Sec. [28] 26. And be it further enacted, That no person, firm, or corporation shall use any still, boiler, or other vessel, for the purpose of distilling in any building or on any premises where beer, lager beer, ale, porter, or other fermented liquors are manufactured; and no still, boiler, or other vessel, shall be used as aforesaid in any building or on any premises where beer, lager beer, ale, porter, or other fermented liquors, vinegar, or other, are manufactured or produced, or where sugars or sirups are refined, or where liquors of any description are retailed, or any other business is carried on, or in any dwelling-house; and every person who shall use such still, boiler, or other vessel, for the purpose of distilling, as aforesaid, in any building or other premises where the above specified articles are manufactured, produced, or other business is carried on, or in any dwelling-house, or who shall procure the same to be done, shall forfeit such stills, boilers, or other vessels so used, and all the spirits distilled, and pay a fine of $1,000, and be imprisoned for not less than six months nor more than one year, in the discretion of the court; and any person, firm, or corporation, who shall manufacture any still, boiler, or other vessel, to be used for the purpose of distilling, shall, before the same is removed from the place of manufacture, notify the collector where such still, boiler, or other vessel is to be used or sent, of the intention to send or set up the same, and of its capacity, and the time when the same is to be sent or set up; and no such still, boiler, or other vessel, shall be set up without the permit in writing of the collector for that purpose; and any person, firm, or corporation, who shall set up such still, boiler, or other vessel, without first obtaining a permit from the collector of the district in which such still, boiler, or other vessel is intended to be used, or who shall fail to give such notice, shall pay in either case the sum of $500, and shall forfeit the distilling apparatus thus manufactured or set up in violation of law: Provided, That saleratus may be made or manufactured in any building or on any premises where spirits are distilled: Provided further, That any boiler used in generating steam or heating water to be used in such distillery may be located in any other building or on any other premises to be connected with such still or boiling tubs, by suitable pipes or other apparatus, or the steam from such boiler in the distillery may be conveyed to other premises to be used for manufacturing or other purposes.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by striking out after "person," in line one, the words "firm or corporation."

Mr. SPRAGUE. Why strike out those words?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Because there is a general provision in another place making "person," wherever that word occurs, apply to firms and corporations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee to this section was to strike out, in lines five, six, and seven, these words:

Are manufactured; and no still, boiler or other vessel shall be used as aforesaid in any building or on any premises where beer, lager beer, ale, porter, or other fermented liquors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line eighteen, after "dollars," to strike out "and" and insert "or;" and after "not," in line nineteen, to strike out "less than six months nor;" so as to read, "pay a fine of $1,000 or be imprisoned for not more than one year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "person," in line twenty, to strike out the words "firm or corporation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment is agreed to, no objection being made.

The next amendment was after the word "sent," in line twenty-five, to strike out the words "of the intention to send or set up the same" and insert "and by whom it is to be used."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "person," in line twenty-nine, to strike out "firm or corporation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The next amendment was in line thirty-five to strike out "manufactured" and insert "removed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read section [twenty-nine] twenty-seven of the bill, as follows:

Sec. [29] 27. And be it further enacted, That every rectifier or wholesale dealer in distilled spirits shall enter, daily, in a book or books kept for the purpose, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, the number of proof gallons of spirits purchased or received, of whom purchased and received, and the number of proof gallons sold or delivered; and every rectifier or wholesale dealer who shall neglect or refuse to keep such record shall forfeit all spirits in his possession, together with the apparatus, tools, and implements used, and be subject to a fine of $500, or imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than one year, in the discretion of the court. And every rectifier shall mark with a stencil-plate, on each package of five gallons or more of distilled or rectified spirits sold by him, his name and place of business.

Mr. FESSENDEN. After the word "mark," in line thirteen, I move to strike out the words "with a stencil-plate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read section [thirty] twenty-eight, as follows:

Sec. [30] 28. And be it further enacted, That the owner or owners of any distillery shall provide, at his or their own expense, a warehouse suitable for the storage of bonded spirits, of their own manufacture only; or he or they may provide a secure room, in a suitable building, to be used as such warehouse, but no dwelling-house shall be used for such purpose, and no door, window, or other opening shall be made or permitted in the walls thereof, leading to any other room or building used for any other purpose, or into the distillery; and after a bond has been given, as hereinafter provided, such warehouse or room, when approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, on report of the district collector, is hereby declared to be a bonded warehouse of the United States, and shall be used only for the storing of spirits manufactured by the owner, agent, or superintendent of such distillery, and shall be under the custody of the inspector as hereinafter provided; and shall be kept locked up by the proper officer in charge at all times except when he shall be present; and the tax on the spirits stored in such warehouse shall be paid before removal from such warehouse unless removed in pursuance of law. And the owner or owners of such warehouse shall execute a general bond to the United States with two or more sureties, to be approved by the collector; and such bond shall be for not less than the amount of duties on the spirits to be covered thereby, and in such form, and containing such conditions, as shall be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and may be changed from time to time by the collector in regard to the amount and sureties thereof.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by striking out the word "may," in line twenty-seven, and inserting "shall;" after "changed," in line twenty-eight, inserting "or renewed;" after "time," in line twenty-eight, striking out "by the collector;" and after "thereof," in line twenty-nine, inserting "as the collector may require;" so as to make the clause read:

Shall be changed or renewed from time to time in regard to the amount and sureties thereof as the collector may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line twelve of that section I move to strike out "Commissioner of Internal Revenue" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. In line twenty-five the word "duties" should be "taxes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The Secretary read section [thirty-one] twenty-nine, as follows:

Sec. 31. And be it further enacted, That general bonded warehouses, for the storage of spirits or other merchandise allowed by law to be placed in bond to secure the payment of the internal revenue tax thereon, or the exportation thereof, may be established under such rules and regulations and upon the execution of such bonds as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, and shall be in the immediate custody of store-keepers who shall be appointed for that purpose, whose compensation shall be paid monthly to the collector of the district by the owners or proprietors of such warehouse, and shall not exceed the rates which may be allowed to storekeepers of bonded warehouses established under the laws and regulations relating to customs.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In lines six and seven the words "Commissioner of Internal Revenue" should be "Secretary of the Treasury."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made, no objection being interposed.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by adding to it the following proviso:

Provided, That any article manufactured in a bonded warehouse established under the one hundred and sixty-eighth section of the internal revenue act of June 30, 1864, and located in any of the Atlantic States, may be removed therefrom for transportation to a customs bonded warehouse at any port on the Pacific coast of the United States, for the purpose only of being exported therefrom, under such rules and regulations, and upon the execution of such bonds or other security, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read section [thirty-two] thirty, as follows:

SEC. [32] 30. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury an inspector for every distillery established according to law, who shall take an oath faithfully to perform his duties; and who shall take an account of all the meal and vegetable productions or other substances to be used for the purpose of producing spirits, when put into the mash tub or otherwise used; and shall inspect, gauge, and prove all the spirits distilled, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and shall take charge of the bonded warehouse established for the distillery in conformity to law; and such warehouse shall be in the joint custody of such inspector and the owner thereof, his agent or superintendent; and when any spirits shall be placed in such warehouse an entry therefor, in such form as shall be prescribed by regulations, shall immediately be made and signed by the owner of said spirits, and shall have indorsed thereon a certificate of the inspector that the spirits mentioned have been duly inspected and received in said warehouse, and such entry and certificate shall be filed with the collector of the district; and whenever such warehouse is within the limits of any port of entry where there shall be a superintendent of exports, a duplicate of such entry and certificate shall forthwith be filed in the office of such superintendent; and said inspector shall also certify to the returns to be made by the distiller to the assessor; and shall not engage in any other business while employed as an inspector; and shall be paid five dollars per day for the time during which he is engaged; and the amount of compensation thus paid for inspection shall be assessed by the assessor upon the distiller, and returned to the collector monthly; and in addition to the above compensation, such inspector shall receive one eighth of one cent for each and every proof gallon of distilled spirits inspected by him and removed to the bonded warehouse, which shall be paid by the distiller or owner of the spirits; but no compensation shall be allowed to such inspector for more than one inspection of such spirits. And in case the duties of such inspector shall be greater at any time than he can perform, upon the joint application of the inspector and owner of such distillery, the collector may appoint an assistant inspector; and upon the refusal of the distiller to join in such application, the collector shall decide as to such necessity; and such assistant inspector shall qualify in the same manner and be subject to the same penalties as the inspector, and he shall be paid in the same manner as the inspector, at a rate not exceeding the sum of three dollars per day while so employed; and in case of disagreement as to the necessity of retaining the services of such assistant, between the owner of the distillery and the inspector, the collector shall decide as to such necessity, and his decision in the matter shall be final. And in case of absence by sickness, or from any other cause, of such inspector or assistant, the collector may appoint an officer to take temporary charge of such distillery and warehouse, who shall receive the same rate of pay as said inspector or assistant for the time he may be so employed, such amount to be deducted from the pay of the absent officer: Provided, That the owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery who shall use, cause, or permit to be used, any materials for the purpose of producing spirits, or shall distill and remove any spirits in the absence of the acting inspector or assistant, without permission granted by the collector of the district, shall forfeit and pay double the amount of taxes on the spirits so produced, distilled, or removed, and in addition thereto a fine of $1,000, to be recovered in the manner provided for other penalties imposed by this act: Provided further, That any person who shall ship, transport, or remove any spirituous or fermented liquors or wines, under any other than the proper name or brand known to the trade as designating the kind and quality of the contents of the casks or packages containing the same, or who shall cause the same to be done, shall forfeit the same, and shall, on conviction thereof, be subject to and pay a fine of $500.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out the following clause after the word "district" in line twenty-one:

And whenever such warehouse is within the limits of any port of entry where there shall be a superintendent of exports, a duplicate of such entry and certificate shall forthwith be filed in the office of such superintendent; and said inspector shall also certify to the returns to be made by the distiller to the assessor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "and," in line twenty-six, to insert "said inspector."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "monthly," in line thirty-one, to insert "for collection."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line forty-one to strike out "collector" and insert "Secretary," so as to read, "the Secretary of the Treasury may appoint an assistant inspector."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line fifty-four to strike out "appoint an officer" and insert "designate a person."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "shall," in line fifty-six, to insert "during such absence perform the duties;" and after "pay," in line fifty-seven, to insert "and be paid in the same manner."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out in lines fifty-nine and sixty the words "such amount to be deducted from the pay of the absent officer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line sixty-three, before "remove," to strike out "and" and insert "or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The next amendment was to insert after "thereto," in line sixty-seven, the words "be liable to."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "penalties," in line sixty-nine, to strike out "imposed by this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. [33] 31. And be it further enacted, That there shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, in every collection district where the same may be necessary, one or more general inspectors of spirits, who shall take an oath faithfully to perform his duties, in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, and who shall be entitled to receive one quarter of one cent for each and every wine-gallon gauged and proved by him; and any owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery or bonded warehouse who shall refuse to admit an inspector upon such premises, so far as it may be necessary for the performance of his duties, or who shall obstruct an inspector in the performance of his duties, shall forfeit and pay the sum of $500, to be recovered in the manner provided for recovery of other penalties imposed by this act.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out after the word "spirits," in line four, these words: "who shall each take an oath faithfully to perform his duties, in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Before the word "gallon," in line eight, I move to strike out "wine" and to insert "proof;" and after "him" in the same line to insert, "to be paid by the owner of the spirits;" so that it will read:

Who shall be entitled to receive one quarter of one cent for each and every proof gallon gauged and proved by him, to be paid by the owner of the spirits, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those changes will be made unless there be objection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The next section, the thirty-fourth of the House bill, or thirty-second, according to our numbering, is reported to be stricken out and a new draft inserted. I think the reading of the original may be omitted. The new draft begins on page 195.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the section proposed to be stricken out will be omitted. The words proposed to be inserted only will be read.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

That every person making or distilling spirits, or owning any still, boiler, or other vessel used for the purpose of distilling spirits, or having such still, boiler, or other vessel so used under his superintendence, either as agent or owner, or using any such still, boiler or other vessel, shall from day to day make, or cause to be made, true and exact entry in a book, to be kept in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, of the number of pounds or gallons of materials used for the purpose of producing spirits, the number of gallons of spirits distilled, the number of gallons placed in warehouse, and the proof thereof, and the number of gallons sold, with the proof thereof, and the name and place of business or residence of the person to whom sold; and shall also on the 1st, 11th, and 21st days of each month, or within five days thereafter, render to the assessor or assistant assessor an account in duplicate taken from his books in the particulars, hereinbefore recited, verified by oath, of all the facts occurring after the last day of account preceding. The entries to be made in the books of the distiller, as aforesaid, shall, upon the several days when the returns are made, be provided, be verified by oath or affirmation of the person or persons by whom such entries shall have been made, in the presence of the assessor or assistant assessor, or other proper officer, who shall append thereto his certificate of the execution of the same. The owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery shall in case the original entries required to be made in his books by this act shall not have been made by himself, subjoin to the certificate of the person by whom they were made the following oath or affirmation: "I do certify that to the best of my knowledge and belief the foregoing entries are just and true, and that I have taken all the means in my power to make them so." Said book shall always be open for the inspection of any assessor, assistant assessor, collector, deputy collector, revenue agent, or inspector, and any promises where distilling shall be carried on shall be open to said officers, or either of them, at all times in day or night while such distillery is in operation. Any person who shall violate the provisions of this section shall for every such offense be liable to a fine of $500. Any person who shall render an account under the provisions of this section which shall be false or fraudulent, shall be liable to a fine of not less than $500, or to imprisonment not less than six months.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [35] 33. And be it further enacted, That, in addition to the special tax provided, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all spirits that may be distilled and removed from the bonded warehouse for consumption or sale, of first proof, on and after the passage of this act, a tax of two dollars on each and every proof gallon; and the said tax shall be a lien on the spirits distilled, on the distillery used for distilling the same, with the stills, vessels, fixtures, and tools therein, and on the interest of said distiller in the lot or tract of land whereon the said distillery is situated, until the said tax shall be paid: Provided, That brandy distilled from grapes, apples, or peaches, shall pay $1 50 per gallon: And provided further, That the tax on all spirits shall be collected at no lower rate than the basis of first proof, and shall be increased in proportion for any greater strength than the strength of first proof.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out after the word "that" in line one the words "in addition to the special tax provided;" after the word "all" in line three to insert "distilled;" after "spirits" in line three to strike out "that may be distilled and removed from the bonded warehouse for consumption or sale, of first proof, on and after the passage of this act," and in lieu thereof to insert "upon which no tax has been paid according to law;" after "gallon" in line seven to insert "to be paid by the distiller, owner, or any person having possession thereof;" to strike out "said" before "tax" in line eight; after "situated" in line twelve to insert "from the time said spirits are distilled;" and in lines fourteen, fifteen, and sixteen to strike out "that brandy distilled from grapes, apples, or peaches, shall pay $1 50 per gallon; and provided further;" so as to make the section read:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all distilled spirits upon which no tax has been paid according to law, a tax of two dollars on each and every proof gallon, to be paid by the distiller, owner, or any person having possession thereof; and the tax shall be a lien on the spirits distilled, on the distillery used for distilling the same, with the stills, vessels, fixtures, and tools therein, and on the interest of said distiller in the lot or tract of land whereon the said distillery is situated, from the time said spirits are distilled until the said tax shall be paid: Provided, That the tax on all spirits shall be collected at no lower rate than the basis of first proof, and shall be increased in proportion for any greater strength than the strength of first proof.

The amendments were agreed to.

The Secretary read section [thirty-six] thirty-four, as follows:

Sec. [36] 34. And be it further enacted, That proof spirit shall be held and taken to be that alcoholic liquor which contains one half its volume of alcohol of a specific gravity of seven thousand nine hundred and thirty-nine, (7939) at sixty degrees Fahrenheit, and the tax on all spirits shall be levied according to their equivalent in proof spirits; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to adopt, procure, and prescribe for use, such hydrometers, weighing and gauging instruments, meters or other means for ascertaining the strength and quantity of spirits subject to tax, and to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to insure a uniform and correct system of inspection, weighing and gauging of spirits subject to tax throughout the United States. And in all sales of spirits hereafter made, where not otherwise specially agreed, a gallon shall be taken to be a gallon of first proof, according to the foregoing standard set forth and declared for the inspection and gauging of spirits throughout the United States.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend in line four, after "(7939)," by inserting "ten thousandths," and after "Fahrenheit," in line five, by striking out "and the tax on all spirits shall be levied according to their equivalent in proof spirits."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee further propose to amend the section in line fourteen after "all" by striking out "sales of spirits hereafter made," and inserting "cases."

Mr. FESSENDEN. That should be non-concurred in; it is a mistake.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

Sec. [37] 35. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery established as hereinbefore provided, shall erect, in a room or building to be provided and used for that purpose, and for no other, two or more receiving cisterns, each to be at least of sufficient capacity to hold all the spirits distilled during the day of twenty-four hours, into one of which shall be conveyed each day all the spirits manufactured in said distillery during that day; and such cisterns shall be so constructed as to leave an open space of at least three feet between the tops thereof and the floor or roof above, and of not less than eighteen inches between the bottoms thereof and the floor below, and shall be separated in such a manner as will enable the inspector to pass around the same, and shall be connected with the outlet of the stills, boilers, or other vessels used for distilling, by suitable pipes or other apparatus so constructed as always to be exposed to the view of the inspector; such cisterns and the room in which they are contained shall be in charge of and under the look and seal of the inspector; and on the third day after the spirits are conveyed into such cisterns the same shall be drawn off into casks or other packages, under the supervision of the inspector, and shall be immediately inspected, gauged, proved, and the casks or packages marked, as herein provided, and be removed directly to the bonded warehouse before mentioned: Provided, That the spirits may be drawn off from said cisterns at any time previous to the third day, if so desired by the owner, agent, or superintendent of such distillery; and all locks and seals required under this act shall be provided by the Secretary of the Treasury, at the expense of the owner of the distillery, and shall be combination locks and susceptible of at least ninety-six changes, and the bits of the keys thereof shall be changed at least once a week, and shall always be in the custody of the inspector or assistant inspector, or the officer having charge of the distillery and warehouse.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section by striking out after "distillery," in line thirty, the words "and shall be combination locks and susceptible of at least ninety-six changes, and the bits of the keys thereof shall be changed at least once a week," and inserting "or warehouse."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee also proposed to insert the words "the keys" before "shall" in line thirty-three.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line twenty-eight of that section I move to strike out "under this act" and insert "by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read section [thirty-eight] thirty-six, as follows:

Sec. 38. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall knowingly and fraudulently use any false weights and measures in ascertaining, weighing, or measuring the quantities of grain, meal, or vegetable materials, molasses, or beer, or other substances to be used for distillation, or who shall fraudulently make false record of the same, or who shall destroy or tamper with any locks or seal which may be placed on any cistern, rooms, or buildings by the duly authorized officers of the revenue, shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned for the term of two years, and pay a fine not exceeding $1,000, in the discretion of the court; and any person who shall use any molasses, beer, or other substances, whether fermented on the premises or elsewhere, for the purpose of producing spirits, before an account of the same shall have been registered in the proper record book provided for this purpose, shall forfeit and pay the sum of $1,000 for each and every offense so committed.

The Committee on Finance proposed before "measures," in line three, to strike out "and" and insert "or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction will be made.

The next amendment of the committee was in lines nine and ten to strike out the words "be guilty of felony and," and to strike out "shall" before "be," in line ten.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to strike out "or," at the end of the fourth line of that section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read section [thirty-nine] thirty-seven, as follows:

Sec. [39] 37. And be it further enacted, That on all wines, liquors, or compounds known or denominated as wine, made in imitation of sparkling wine or champagne and put up in bottles in imitation of any imported wine, or with the pretense of being imported wine, or wine of foreign growth or manufacture, there shall be levied and paid a tax of six dollars per dozen bottles, each bottle containing more than one pint and not more than one quart, or three dollars per dozen bottles, each bottle containing not more than one pint; and the returns, assessment, collection, and time of collection of the tax on such imitation wines shall be subject to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And any person who shall willfully and knowingly sell, or offer for sale, any such wine made after the passage of this act, upon which the tax herein imposed has not been paid, or which has been fraudulently evaded, shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a penalty of $1,000, or to imprisonment not exceeding one year, at the discretion of the court.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by inserting after "pint," in line ten, the words "said tax to be paid by the manufacturer, owner, or person having possession thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out in line sixteen the words "passage of this act" and insert "this act takes effect."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

Sec. [40] 38. And be it further enacted, That every owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery shall, at all times when required, supply all assistance, lights, ladders, tools, staging, or other things necessary for inspecting the premises, stock, tools, and apparatus belonging to such person or persons having paid the special tax aforesaid, and shall open all doors, and open for examination all boxes, packages, and all casks, barrels, and other vessels not under the control of the inspector, when required so to do by any duly authorized officer, under a penalty of $200 for any refusal or neglect so to do.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out after "person," in line five, the words "or persons having paid the special tax aforesaid."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next section was read, as follows:

Sec. [41] 39. And be it further enacted, That all spirits distilled shall, before the same are removed to the bonded warehouse, be inspected, gauged, and proved by the inspector appointed for that purpose, after the same has been drawn into casks or packages, each of not less capacity than twenty gallons, wine measure, and said inspector shall mark, by cutting or branding, upon the cask or package containing such spirits, in a manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the quantity and proof of the contents of such cask or package, with the date of inspection, the collection district, the name of the inspector, and the name of the distiller, and also the number of each cask in progressive order, such progressive number, for every distiller, to begin with number one with the first cask or package inspected after this act, and subsequently with number one with the first cask inspected on or after the 1st day of January in each year, and no two or more casks warehoused in the same year by the same distiller shall be marked with the same number, and the officer in charge of the warehouse shall refuse to allow any cask of spirits to be taken out therefrom which has not cut or branded thereon all the several particulars aforesaid, and in the manner required by this act. And the inspector or other revenue officer in charge of any distillery shall make a prompt return of all spirits inspected by him in accordance with the provisions of this act, and the name of the distiller, to the collector, and a duplicate thereof to the assessor of the district; and any person who shall fraudulently evade or attempt fraudulently to evade the payment of the tax upon any spirits distilled as aforesaid, by changing any marks upon any such cask or package, or in any other manner whatever, or who shall fraudulently put into such cask or package spirits of greater strength than that inspected and certified to by the inspector, shall pay double the amount of tax on each proof gallon of the quantity of such spirits, and forfeit and pay as a penalty the additional sum of $500 for each cask or package so altered or changed, to be recovered as herein provided; and any inspector, assistant inspector, or officer temporarily in charge of any distillery under this act who shall conspire with the proprietor of any distillery or with any other person or persons to defraud the United States of the revenue or tax arising from distilled spirits or any part thereof, or who shall, with intent to defraud the United States of such revenue or tax, make any false or fraudulent entry, certificate, or return, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; and any person who shall fraudulently use any cask or package bearing inspection marks, for the purpose of selling any other spirits than that so inspected, or for selling spirits of a quantity or quality different from that so inspected, shall be imprisoned for a term of six months, or shall pay a fine of $100 for each cask or package so used, in the discretion of the court; and any person who shall knowingly purchase or sell, with inspection marks thereon, any cask or package, after the same has been used for distilled spirits, or who shall fraudulently omit to erase or obliterate the inspection marks upon any such package or cask at the time of emptying the same, shall forfeit and pay the sum of fifty dollars for every cask so purchased or used, or on which the marks are not so obliterated. And any person who shall, with fraudulent intent, use any inspector's brands or plates upon any cask or package containing or purporting to contain distilled spirits, except in the employ of the inspector, or who shall knowingly make or use any counterfeit or spurious brand or plate upon any cask or package of distilled spirits, as aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall forfeit the same, and shall pay a fine of $1,000, and be imprisoned for not less than two nor more than five years. And any inspector who shall permit any person not employed by him to use any of his brands or plates, or who shall negligently or willfully leave such brands or plates where they can be used by any other person than those who may be in his employ, shall pay a fine not exceeding $1,000, in the discretion of the court. And any inspector who shall employ any owner, agent, or superintendent of any distillery or warehouse under his supervision, or who shall employ any person in the service of such owner, agent, or superintendent, to use his plates or brands, or to discharge any of the duties imposed by this act upon such inspector, shall, for each offense so committed, be subject to the same fine last mentioned.

The committee proposed to strike out "or" after "cutting," in line six, and to insert after "branding" the words "or otherwise."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The committee also proposed to insert after "act," in line fourteen, the words "takes effect."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. At the end of line twenty I move to strike out the words "cut or branded" and to insert "marked," and in line twenty-two to strike out "this act" and insert "law."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those amendments will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line twenty-five I move to strike out "this act" and to insert "law."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert after "spirits," in line thirty-four, the words "to be assessed and collected as in case of other taxes."

The amendment was agreed to.

In line thirty-seven the committee proposed to strike out "herein" before "provided," and after "provided" to insert "by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line thirty-nine I move to strike out the words "under this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out in line forty-five the words "shall be guilty of a misdemeanor," and to insert in lieu of them the following:

Or place any false or fraudulent mark upon any cask or package shall, on conviction thereof, pay a fine of not less than $1,000, and be imprisoned for not less than two nor more than five years.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Why not limit these penalties up as well as down?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Perhaps it would be dangerous.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There is another clause like the one just read. I presume the chairman of the Committee on Finance hardly means it. The provision is that a party shall be fined not less than $500 and imprisoned not less than six months, leaving it at the discretion of the court to fine him $500,000, and imprison him ninety-nine years if he chooses. I notice in the amendment just offered there is a limitation both ways upon the imprisonment, but the provision as to fine is that the fine shall not be less than $1,000. Ought it not to be limited the other way? It is usual in laws of this kind to impose a limitation both ways.

In the seventeenth section the same thing occurs; I had intended to call attention to it, but it escaped me when the section was read. It is provided in that section "and any person who shall violate the foregoing provisions of this section with intent to defraud the revenue or to defraud any person, shall, upon conviction thereof, be liable to a fine of not less than $1,000, or imprisonment for not less than six months, or both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court."

It should not be in the discretion of the court to impose fine and imprisonment ad libitum. Of course the committee can hardly mean to leave it in that way. The amendment just offered says a fine of not less than $1,000. Why not say "and not more than $5,000?"

Mr. FESSENDEN. These are serious offenses, and I should not like to have the punishment made very light.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It can hardly be meant to imprison a man for life.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think the judges in our section of country would do that. Perhaps they might be more severe in the Senator's section. If the Senator will look at the offenses and make suggestions as to what the limit ought to be, I shall not object to any reasonable amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not care what the limit is, but I think there should be some limit, not exceeding a certain amount. I would not leave a discretion to impose any amount of fine or any term of imprisonment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will modify the amendment by saying "a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned for not less than two nor more than five years."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Now I propose to go back to the seventeenth section, on page 175 and there make an amendment to suit the Senator's views.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose the Senator from Maine will look this bill over again. He will find that an amendment of the same kind is wanted in several places where there is no limitation on the amount to which the fine or the duration to which the imprisonment may extend. I think it would be well to put such a limitation in all cases. I suggest it to him for his consideration.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend section seventeen so as to make it read, in lines twenty-eight, twenty-nine, and thirty:

A fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than five years, or both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line fifty-seven, of section [forty-one] thirty-nine, I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "two hundred," so as to make the penalty there $200 instead of $50.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line sixty-two I move to strike out the words "except in the employ of the inspector."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed, in line sixty-six, to strike out "the same" after "forfeit;" and to insert "such cask or package, with its contents."

Mr. FESSENDEN. Instead of adopting that amendment I move to strike out all after "thereof" in line sixty-six to "shall" in line sixty-seven. The words to be stricken out are "shall forfeit the same and;" so that it will then read:

Who shall knowingly make or use any counterfeit or spurious brand or plate upon any cask or package of distilled spirits, as aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, on conviction thereof, shall pay a fine of $1,000, and be imprisoned for not less than two nor more than five years.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. After "years," in line sixty-nine, I move to insert "and such cask or package, with its contents, shall be forfeited to the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee also proposed to strike out "same," in line eighty-one, before "fine."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out the words "by this act," in line seventy-nine, and to insert "by law."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [42] 40. And be it further enacted, That any person or persons who shall add, or cause to be added, any ingredients to any spirits before the tax imposed by law shall have been paid thereon, for the purpose of creating a fictitious proof, shall, upon conviction, be subject to a fine of $1,000 for each cask or package so adulterated, and be imprisoned for not more than two nor less than one year, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend this section in line seven by striking out "more than two nor," and after "one" inserting "nor more than two," and by adding an "s" to "year," so as to read, "and be imprisoned for not less than one nor more than two years, in the discretion of the court."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. At the end of the section I move to add the following words: "and such cask or package, with its contents, shall be forfeited to the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read section [forty-three] forty-one, as follows:

SEC. [43] 41. And be it further enacted, That any distilled spirits, upon which a tax is imposed by law, which has been inspected, gauged, proved, and marked by the inspector, according to the provisions of this act, may be removed without the payment of tax from the bonded warehouse owned by the distiller, under such rules and regulations, and upon the execution of such transportation bonds or other security, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and may be transported to any general bonded warehouse used for the storage of distilled spirits, established under the internal revenue laws and regulations, after having been branded as follows: "U. S. bonded warehouse, — district, —; for transportation to — district, —." (Inserting in each case the number of the district and name of the State;) and immediately after the arrival of such distilled spirits at the bonded warehouse within the district of the collector to which it has been transferred, it shall again be inspected and placed in bond; and the tax shall be assessed and paid on any deficiency or reduction of the number of proof gallons (except the actual loss, not exceeding five per cent. for leakage) received at the warehouse, from the number of proof gallons as stated in the bond given at the place of shipment; and no allowance shall be made, except for the actual loss as aforesaid, or for destruction by unavoidable accident, or by the elements; and any distilled spirits entered in a general bonded warehouse shall be subject to such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, and be chargeable with the same costs and expenses, in all respects, to which imported goods deposited in public store or bonded warehouse may be subject, and shall be in charge of a store-keeper, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, who, with the owner and proprietor of the warehouse, shall have the joint custody of all the distilled spirits so stored in said warehouse, which shall be at the risk of the owner of the said spirits; and all labor on the same shall be performed by the owner or proprietor of the warehouse, under the supervision of the officer in charge of the same, and at the expense of said owner or proprietor. And the same fees shall be paid for execution of all papers, instruments, and documents relating to the exportation of any spirits or other merchandise, as are charged to exporters for like services in the custom-house; and all expense and services required in the removal, transfer, and shipment of the same for export shall be paid by the owner thereof: Provided, That any distilled spirits may be withdrawn from a bonded warehouse, after having been inspected and gauged by the proper officer, and after the payment to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which the warehouse is situated of the tax imposed by law; and when so delivered, shall be branded "U. S. bonded warehouse, tax paid;" or may be removed from said warehouse without the payment of the tax for the purpose of being exported; or for the purpose of being rectified, or redistilled, canned, or put into other packages under such rules and regulations and the execution of such bonds or other security as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; but such removal of bonded spirits for the purpose of being rectified, redistilled, or put into other packages, shall be allowed but once on the same spirits; and any spirits so removed for redistillation, rectification, or change of package, shall be returned to the same warehouse, and shall again be inspected; and the tax shall be paid to the said collector on any deficiency or reduction beyond three per cent. And such spirits may be afterward withdrawn from the warehouse for consumption after the payment to the collector of internal revenue of the tax imposed by law, or may be withdrawn for exportation without the payment of tax as provided by law. And no drawback shall be allowed on any distilled spirits on which the tax has been paid; but nothing in this section shall be so construed as to prevent the manufacture in bond for exportation, without the payment of duties, of medicines, preparations, compositions, perfumery, cosmetics, cordials, and other liquors manufactured wholly or in part of domestic spirits, as provided by law.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section by striking out in line two, after "spirits," the words "upon which a tax is imposed by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line two to strike out "has" and insert "have."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line four the words "this act" should be changed to "law."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That alteration will be made.

The next amendment of the committee was before "Secretary," in line nine, to insert "Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line nineteen to strike out "bond" and insert "bonded warehouse."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the words "assessed and" before "paid" in line twenty.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out, in lines sixteen and seventeen, the words "the bonded warehouse within."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out the following words from line nineteen to line twenty-seven:

And the tax shall be paid on any deficiency or reduction of the number of proof gallons (except the actual loss, not exceeding five per cent. for leakage) received at the warehouse, from the number of proof gallons as stated in the bond given at the place of shipment; and no allowance shall be made, except for the actual loss as aforesaid, or for destruction by unavoidable accident, or by the elements.

And in lieu of them to insert:

And the tax shall be paid on the difference between the number of proof gallons as stated in the bond given at the place of shipment and the number received at the warehouse, less the allowance for leakage as established by the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and except for actual destruction by unavoidable accident, by the elements, or by the public enemy no other allowance for loss shall be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed further to amend the section by inserting after "packages," in line fifty-seven, the following words:

After the quantity and proof of the spirits to be removed have been ascertained and inspected as required by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee also proposed to insert after "as," in line sixty, the words "the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed to strike out "any," in line sixty-five, before "spirits," and insert "all."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed to strike out "three" and insert "five" before "per cent." in line sixty-nine.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That may be non-concurred in.

The amendment was rejected.

The committee proposed to strike out after the words "per cent.," in line sixty-nine, the following:

And such spirits may be afterward withdrawn from the warehouse for consumption after the payment to the collector of internal revenue of the tax imposed by law, or may be withdrawn for exportation without the payment of tax as provided by law.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

And upon spirits removed under bond for the purpose of being redistilled or rectified, or change of package as aforesaid, and upon which an allowance shall have been made, as herein provided, the duty upon such allowance shall be paid, together with the duties imposed by law upon such spirits, in case such spirits shall be withdrawn for consumption or sale, or for transportation without being exported.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend the committee's amendment by striking out "duty" at the end of line seventy-six and inserting "tax," and in line seventy-seven by striking out "duties" and inserting "taxes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. In line eighty-four of the section the word "duties" should be "taxes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The Secretary read section [forty-four] forty-two, as follows:

SEC. [44] 42. And be it further enacted, That any spirits or other merchandise may be removed from bonded warehouse, for the purpose of being exported, upon the order of the superintendent of exports for the port whence the spirits are to be exported; and such order shall state the port to which such spirits are to be shipped, and the name of the vessel, and also the number of proof gallons, and the marks of the packages or casks, which shall be taken from and shall agree with the return of said spirits made by the inspector of the warehouse; and such spirits or other merchandise shall be branded "U. S. bonded warehouse, for export," and shall be put on board of the vessel in or by which they are to be exported, by an officer under the direction of the superintendent of exports, and placed under the supervision of an officer of the customs, after a bond shall have been given in such form and containing such conditions as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, with one or more sureties, to be approved, as to the sufficiency of the sureties, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may direct. And such bond shall be canceled upon the presentation of the proper certificate that said spirits have been landed at the port named in said bond, or at any other port without the jurisdiction of the United States, or upon satisfactory proof that after shipment the spirits have been lost. And at any port where there shall be no superintendent of exports, all the duties and services required of superintendents of exports and drawback shall devolve upon and be performed by the collector of internal revenue designated to have charge of exportations.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend the section by striking out after the word "casks," in line eight, the words "which shall be taken from and shall agree with the return of said spirits made by the inspector of the warehouse."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was after "bond," in line fifteen, to insert "with good and sufficient sureties."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "revenue," in line seventeen, to insert "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after "prescribe," in line nineteen, to strike out "with one or more sureties, to be approved, as to the sufficiency of the sureties, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may direct."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [45] 43. And be it further enacted, That any person or persons who shall execute or sign any false or fraudulent bond, permit, entry, or other document, required by law or regulations, or who shall fraudulently procure the same to be executed, or who shall connive at the execution thereof, by which the payment of any internal revenue tax or duty shall be evaded, or attempted to be evaded, or which shall be executed, or purport to be executed, for the purpose of placing in or withdrawing from any bonded warehouse, any spirits or other merchandise for any purpose whatever, or which shall in any way be used or attempted to be used in fraud of the internal revenue laws and regulations, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall forfeit all right, title, and interest in and to such spirits or other merchandise to which such instrument relates, or purports to relate, and shall be imprisoned for a term not less than one nor more than five years, at the discretion of the court. And any inspector, assistant inspector, or officer temporarily in charge of any distillery under this act, who shall conspire with the proprietor of any distillery, or with any other person or persons to defraud the United States of the revenue or tax arising from distilled spirits or any part thereof, or who shall, with intent to defraud the United States of such revenue or tax, place any false or fraudulent mark upon any cask or package, or make any false or fraudulent entry, certificate, or return, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned not less than two nor more than five years, at the discretion of the court.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section by striking out after "regulations," in line twelve, the words "shall be deemed guilty of a felony and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. In line six I move to strike out "or duty" after "tax."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out all after the word "court" in the seventeenth line to the end of the section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [46] 44. And be it further enacted, That any person owning any distilled spirits intended for sale, manufactured prior to the time when this act takes effect, exceeding fifty gallons altogether, shall notify in writing the collector of the district wherein such spirits may be stored, held, or owned, within sixty days thereafter, to gauge and prove the same; and upon the receipt of said notice the collector shall cause said spirits to be gauged and proved, and the casks or packages containing the same to be marked by the inspector in the following manner:—Manufactured prior to 186——Inspector—district. Inspected—186——And no spirits so manufactured, held, or owned shall be gauged, proved, or marked in any cistern or other stationary vessel, but shall be gauged, proved, and marked only in barrels, casks, or packages in which the same shall have been placed; and the quantity held in each tub shall be estimated by the inspector, and, when drawn off into packages, shall be gauged and marked as herein provided. Upon the receipt of the return the collector shall immediately forward to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue a copy thereof; and any person holding or owning such spirits, and refusing or neglecting to notify the collector, as in this section provided, shall forfeit the same and pay the sum of $500, to be collected in the manner provided by law for the collection of other penalties. No distilled spirits on which the tax has been paid shall be stored or allowed to remain on any distillery premises, under the penalty of a forfeiture of all spirits so found. And all spirits, after being removed from the original package in which it was inspected and gauged into other packages for purposes of rectification, redistillation, or change of proof, shall again be inspected and gauged and properly branded; and the absence of an inspector's brand shall be taken and held as sufficient cause or evidence upon which any spirits so found may be forfeited.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out in line thirty-five, after "which," the words "it was" and to insert "they were."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

The committee also proposed to add to the section the following words:

And any person who shall change the character of any spirits, either by rectification, mixing, or otherwise, after they have been duly inspected and marked, as hereinbefore provided, and place the same in other packages for consumption or sale without first stamping or branding upon such package, in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, the word "rectified," shall forfeit such spirits, and the same may be seized by the collector or deputy collector of the district where such spirits may be found, or by such other collector or deputy collector as may be specially authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for that purpose. And any person who shall so brand any package containing spirits knowing the taxes thereon have not been paid, shall forfeit such spirits, and be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be imprisoned for not more than two years, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [47] 45. And be it further enacted, That all boilers, stills, and other vessels, tools, and implements, used in distilling or rectifying, and forfeited under any of the provisions of this act, and all condemned material, together with any engine, or other machinery connected therewith, and all empty barrels, and all grain or other material suitable for distillation, shall, under the direction of the court in which the forfeiture is recovered, be sold at public auction, and the proceeds thereof, after deducting the expenses of sale, shall be disposed of according to law; and all fines and forfeitures incurred or imposed by virtue of this act shall be sued for and recovered as by law provided, with costs of suit. And all spirits or spirituous liquors which may be forfeited under the provisions of this act, unless herein otherwise provided, shall be disposed of by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct. The term "person," as used in this act, shall be held to include persons, firm, body-corporate, company, or association.

The committee proposed to amend this section by striking out after "law," in line ten, the words, "and all fines and forfeitures incurred or imposed by virtue of this act shall be sued for and recovered as by law provided, with costs of suit."

The amendment was agreed to.

After "direct," in line sixteen, the committee proposed to strike out, "the term 'person,' as used in this act, shall be held to include persons, firm, body-corporate, company, or association;" and in lieu of these words insert the following:

And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to exempt distillers of brandy from apples, peaches, or grapes, exclusively, from such of the provisions of this act, relating to the manufacture of spirits, as in his judgment may seem expedient. And any word or words in any and all parts of this act, and of all acts to which this act is additional, indicating or referring to person or persons, shall be taken to include partnerships, firms, associations, bodies corporate or politic, or any other party whatsoever, when not otherwise designated, or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee proposed to insert as a new section at this point the following:

SEC. 46. And be it further enacted, That any person who shall remove any distilled spirits from the place where the same are distilled, otherwise than into a bonded warehouse as provided by law, shall be liable to a fine of double the amount of the tax imposed thereon, or to imprisonment for not less than three months. All distilled spirits so removed, and all distilled spirits found elsewhere than in a bonded warehouse, not having been removed from such warehouse according to law, and the tax imposed by law on the same not having been paid, shall be forfeited to the United States; or may, immediately upon discovery, be seized, and after assessment of the tax thereon, may be sold by the collector for the tax and expenses of seizure and sale. And proceedings upon such seizure shall be according to existing provisions of law in relation to distraint, and in conformity with any regulations which shall be made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And the burden of proof shall be upon the claimant of said spirits to show that the requirements of law in regard to the same have been complied with. And any person who shall aid or abet in the removal of distilled spirits from any distillery otherwise than to a bonded warehouse, as provided by law, or shall aid in the concealment of such spirits so removed, shall be liable, on conviction thereof, to a fine of not less than $200, or to imprisonment for not less than three months; or any other person who shall remove, or shall aid or abet in the removal of any distilled spirits from any bonded warehouse other than is allowed by law, shall be liable to a fine of $1,000, or to imprisonment for not less than six months.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend the amendment in line twenty-four by inserting after the word "hundred" the words "nor more than one thousand;" in line twenty-five, by inserting after the word "three" the words "nor more than twelve;" in line twenty-eight, by inserting after the words "fine of" the words "not more than;" and in line twenty-nine, by inserting the words "nor more than twelve" before the word "months;" so that the clause will read:

And any person who shall aid or abet in the removal of distilled spirits from any distillery otherwise than to a bonded warehouse, as provided by law, or shall aid in the concealment of such spirits so removed, shall be liable, on conviction thereof, to a fine of not less than two hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, or to imprisonment for not less than three nor more than twelve months; or any other person who shall remove, or shall aid or abet in the removal of any distilled spirits from any bonded warehouse other than is allowed by law, shall be liable to a fine of not more than $1,000, or to imprisonment for not less than six nor more than twelve months.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The Secretary read the next section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. [48] 47. And be it further enacted, That every brewer shall file with the assistant assessor of the assessment district in which he shall design to carry on his business a notice, in writing, stating therein the name of the person, company, corporation, or firm, and the names of the members of any such company or firm, together with the place or places of residence of such person or persons, and a description of the premises on which the brewery is situated, and of his or their title thereto, and the name or names of the owner or owners thereof; and also the whole quantity of malt liquors annually made and sold at the brewery for two years last preceding the date of filing such notice.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section in line two by inserting after the word "shall" the words "before commencing or continuing business after this act takes effect."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to strike out the word "last" in line twelve, before the word "preceding," and to insert "next," so as to read, "next preceding the date of filing such notice."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [49] 48. And be it further enacted, That every brewer shall execute a bond to the United States, to be approved by the collector of the district, in a sum equal to twice the amount of tax which, in the opinion of the assessor, said brewer will be liable to pay during any one month, which bond shall be renewed on the 1st day of May in each year, and shall be conditioned that he will pay or cause to be paid, as herein provided, the tax required by law on all beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other fermented liquors aforesaid made by him, or for him, before the same is sold or removed for consumption or sale, except as hereinafter provided; and that he will keep, or cause to be kept, a book in the manner and for the purposes hereinafter specified, and which shall be open to inspection by the proper officers as by law required, and that he will in all respects faithfully comply, without fraud or evasion, with all requirements of law relating to the manufacture of any malt liquors before mentioned: Provided, That no brewer shall be required to pay a special tax as a wholesale dealer by reason of selling at wholesale, at a place other than his brewery, malt liquors manufactured by him.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section in line thirteen by striking out, after the word "specified," the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next three sections, to which the Committee on Finance reported no amendment, as follows:

SEC. [50] 49. And be it further enacted, That there shall be paid on all beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquors, by whatever name such liquors may be called, a tax of one dollar for every barrel containing not more than thirty-one gallons; and at a like rate for any other quantity or for any fractional part of a barrel which shall be brewed or manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or sale within the United States; which tax shall be paid by the owner, agent, or superintendent of the brewery or premises in which such fermented liquors shall be made, in the manner and at the time hereinafter specified: Provided, That fractional parts of a barrel shall be halves, quarters, sixths, and eighths; and any fractional part of a barrel containing less than one eighth shall be accounted one eighth; more than one eighth and not more than one sixth shall be accounted one sixth; more than one sixth and not more than one quarter shall be accounted one quarter; more than one quarter and not more than one half shall be accounted one half; more than one half and not more than one barrel shall be accounted one barrel; and more than one barrel and not more than sixty-three gallons shall be accounted two barrels or a hoghead.

SEC. [51] 50. And be it further enacted, That every person owning or occupying any brewery or premises used or intended to be used for the purpose of brewing or making such fermented liquors, or who shall have such premises under his control or superintendence as agent for the owner or occupant, or shall have in his possession or custody any brewing materials, utensils, or apparatus, used or intended to be used on said premises in the manufacture of beer, lager beer, ale, porter, or other similar fermented liquors, either as owner, agent, or superintendent, shall from day to day enter or cause to be entered, in a book to be kept by him for that purpose, the kind of such fermented liquors, the description of packages, and number of barrels and fractional parts of barrels of fermented liquors made, and also the quantity sold or removed for consumption or sale, and shall also from day to day enter or cause to be entered, in a separate book to be kept by him for that purpose, an account of all material by him purchased for the purpose of producing such fermented liquors, including grain and malt, and shall render to said assessor or assistant assessor, on or before the 10th day of each month, a true statement in writing, taken from his books, of the whole quantity or number of barrels and fractional parts of barrels of fermented liquors brewed and sold or removed for consumption or sale during the preceding month; and shall verify or cause to be verified the said statement and the facts therein set forth by oath or affirmation, to be taken before the assessor or assistant assessor of the district, according to the form required by law; and shall immediately forward to the collector of the district a duplicate of said statement, duly certified by the assessor or assistant assessor. And said books shall be open at all times for the inspection of any assessor or assistant assessor, collector, deputy collector, inspector, or revenue agent, who may take memorandums and transcripts therefrom.

SEC. [52] 51. And be it further enacted, That the entries made in such books shall, on or before the 10th day of each month, be verified by the oath or affirmation of the person or persons by whom such entries shall have been made, which oath or affirmation shall be written in the book at the end of such entries, and be certified by the officer administering the same, and shall be in form as follows: "I do swear (or affirm) that the foregoing entries were made by me, and that they state truly, according to the best of my knowledge and belief, the whole quantity of fermented liquors brewed, the quantity sold, and the quantity removed from the brewery owned by —, in the county of —. And further, that I have no knowledge of any matter or thing, required by law to be stated in said entries, which has been omitted therefrom." And the owner, agent, or superintendent aforesaid, shall also, in case the original entries made in his books shall not have been made by himself, subjoin thereto the following oath or affirmation, to be taken in manner as aforesaid: "I do swear (or affirm) that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, the foregoing entries fully set forth all the matters therein required by law, and that the same are just and true, and that I have taken all the means in my power to make them so."

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [53] 52. And be it further enacted, That the owner, agent, or superintendent of any brewery, vessels, or utensils used in making fermented liquors, who shall evade or attempt to evade the payment of the tax thereon, or fraudulently neglect or refuse to make true and exact entry and report of the same in the manner herein required, or to do or cause to be done any of the things by law required to be done by him as aforesaid, or who shall intentionally make false entry in said book or in said statement, or knowingly allow or procure the same to be done, shall forfeit, for every such offense, all the liquors made by him or for him, and all the vessels, utensils, and apparatus used in making the same, and be liable to a penalty of not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, to be recovered with costs of suit, and shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year; and said liquors, utensils, and apparatus may be seized and held by any collector or deputy collector until a decision shall be had thereon according to law: Provided, That proceedings to enforce said forfeiture shall be commenced by such collector within twenty days after the seizure thereof. And such proceedings shall be in the nature of a proceeding in rem, or in any proper form of action, in the circuit or district court of the United States for the district where such seizure is made, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction. And any brewer who shall neglect to keep the books, or refuse to furnish the account and duplicate thereof, as hereinbefore provided, or who shall refuse to permit the proper officer to examine the books in the manner provided, shall, for every such refusal or neglect, forfeit and pay the sum of $300.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section by inserting after the word "seized," in line seventeen, the words, "by the collector or deputy collector of the proper district, or by such other collector or deputy collector as may be specially authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for that purpose."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. In line six I move to strike out the word "herein" before "required," and after "required" to insert "by law;" and in line thirty, I move to strike out "hereinbefore" before "provided," and after "provided" to insert "by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [54] 53. And be it further enacted, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall cause to be prepared, for the payment of tax aforesaid, suitable stamps denoting the amount of tax herein required to be paid on the hoghead, barrels, and halves, quarters, sixths, and eighths of a barrel of such fermented liquors, and shall furnish the same to the collectors of internal revenue, who shall each be required to keep on hand, at all times, a supply equal in amount to two months' sales thereof, if there shall be any brewery or brewery warehouse in his district, and the same shall be sold by such collectors only to the brewers of their districts, respectively; and such collectors shall keep an account of the number and values of the stamps sold by them to each of such brewers, respectively; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall allow upon all sales of such stamps in sums of $200 or more at one time, to any brewer, and by him used in his business, a deduction of seven and one half per cent.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section by striking out, after the word "respectively," in line fourteen, the following words:

And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall allow upon all sales of such stamps in sums of $200 or more at one time, to any brewer, and by him used in his business, a deduction of seven and one half per cent.

And inserting in lieu thereof:

And the amount paid into the Treasury by any collector on account of the sale of such stamps to brewers shall be included in estimating the commissions of such collector and of the assessor of the same district.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend the section, in line three, by inserting the word "the" before "tax;" and in line four by striking out the word "herein" before "required."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, to which the Committee on Finance proposed no amendment, as follows:

SEC. [55] 54. And be it further enacted, That every brewer shall obtain from the collector of the district in which his brewery or brewery warehouse may be situated, and not otherwise, unless said collector shall fail to furnish the same upon application to him, the proper stamp or stamps; and shall affix upon the spigot-hole or tap (of which there shall be but one) of each and every hoghead, barrel, keg, or other receptacle, in which any fermented liquor shall be contained, when sold or removed from such brewery or warehouse, a stamp denoting the amount of the tax herein required upon such fermented liquor, in such a way that the said stamp or stamps will be destroyed upon the withdrawal of the liquor from such hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel, or upon the introduction of a faucet or other instrument for that purpose; and shall also, at the time of affixing such stamp or stamps, as aforesaid, cancel the same by writing or imprinting thereon the name of the person, firm, or corporation by whom such liquor may have been made, or the initial letters thereof, and the date when canceled. Every brewer who shall refuse or neglect to affix and cancel the stamp or stamps herein required in the manner aforesaid, or who shall affix a false or fraudulent stamp thereto, or knowingly permit the same to be done, shall be liable to pay a penalty of $100 for each barrel or package on which such omission or fraud occurs, and shall be liable to imprisonment for not more than one year.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend this section, in line ten, by striking out the word "herein" before "required;" and in line twenty by striking out "herein" before "required," and after "required" inserting "by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [56] 55. And be it further enacted, That any brewer, earman, agent for transportation, or other person, who shall sell, remove, receive, or purchase, or in any way aid in the sale, removal, receipt, or purchase of any fermented liquor contained in any hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel from any brewery, or brewery warehouse, upon which the stamp herein required shall not have been affixed, or on which a false or fraudulent stamp is affixed, with knowledge that it is such, or on which a stamp once canceled is used a second time; and any retail dealer or other person, who shall withdraw or aid in the withdrawal of any fermented liquor from any hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel containing the same, without destroying or defacing the stamp affixed upon the same, or shall withdraw or aid in the withdrawal of any fermented liquor from any hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel, upon which the proper stamp shall not have been affixed, or on which a false or fraudulent stamp is affixed, as hereinbefore required, shall be liable to a fine of $100, and to imprisonment not more than one year. Every person who shall make, sell, or use any false or counterfeit stamp or die for printing or making stamps which shall be in imitation of, or purport to be a lawful stamp or die of, the kind before mentioned, or who shall procure the same to be done, shall be guilty of a felony, and be imprisoned for the term of five years: Provided, That every brewer, who sells fermented liquor at retail at the brewery or other place where the same is made, shall affix and cancel the proper stamp or stamps upon the hogheads, barrels, kegs, or other vessels in which the same is contained, and shall keep an account of the quantity so sold by him, and of the number and size of the hogheads, barrels, kegs, or other vessels in which the same may have been contained, and shall make a report thereof, verified by oath, monthly, to the assessor, and forward a duplicate of the same to the collector of the district: And provided further, That brewers may remove malt liquors of their own manufacture from their breweries or other places of manufacture to a warehouse or other place of storage occupied by them within the same district, in quantities of not less than six barrels in one vessel without affixing the stamp or stamps herein required, but shall affix the proper stamp or stamps, as aforesaid, upon such liquor when sold or removed from such warehouse or other place of storage: And provided further, That where fermented liquor has become sour or damaged, so as to be incapable of use as such, brewers may sell the same for manufacturing purposes, and may remove the same to places where it may be used for such purposes, in casks or other vessels, unlike those ordinarily used for fermented liquors, containing respectively not less than one barrel each, and having the nature of their contents branded upon them, without affixing thereon the stamp or stamps herein required.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section by inserting after the word "storage," in line forty-two, the following:

But when the manufacturer of any ale or porter manufactures the same in one collection district, and owns, occupies, or hires a depot or warehouse for the storage and sale of such ale or porter in another collection district, he may, without affixing the stamps on the casks at the brewery, as herein provided for, remove or transport, or cause to be removed or transported, said ale and porter, in quantities not less than one hundred barrels at a time, under a permit from the collector of the district wherein said ale or porter is manufactured, to said depot or warehouse, but to no other place, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe or deem necessary; and thereafter the manufacturer of the ale and porter so removed shall stamp the same when it leaves such depot or warehouse, in the same manner and under the same penalties and liabilities as when stamped at the brewery, as herein provided; and the collector of the district in which such depot or warehouse is situated shall furnish the manufacturer with the stamps for stamping the same, as if the said ale and porter had been manufactured in his district.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend the amendment, in lines forty-nine, fifty-five, and sixty-one, by striking out the word "and" before "porter," and inserting "or," so that it will read, "ale or porter."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move further to amend the amendment in line fifty-four, by striking out the words "or deem necessary."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move further to amend this section in line seven by striking out the word "herein" before "required," and after "required" inserting "by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. After the word "affixed," in line seventeen, I move to strike out the words "as hereinbefore required."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to strike out, in line twenty-four, the words "be guilty of felony and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. In line thirty-nine I move to insert the word "proper" before "stamp;" in line forty to strike out the words "herein required;" and in lines forty and forty-one to strike out the words "proper stamp or stamps, as aforesaid," and to insert the word "same;" so that it will read:

Without affixing the proper stamp or stamps, but shall affix the same upon such liquor when sold or removed from such warehouse or other place of storage.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. In line sixty-nine I move to strike out the word "branded" and to insert "marked;" and in line seventy to strike out the word "herein" before "required;" so as to read, "and having the nature of their contents marked upon them, without affixing thereon the stamp or stamps required."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, to which the Committee on Finance proposed no amendment, as follows:

SEC. [57] 53. And be it further enacted, That every brewer shall brand, or cause to be branded, upon every hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel, containing the fermented liquor made by him, before it is sold or removed from the brewery or brewery warehouse, or other place of manufacture, the name of the person, firm, or corporation by whom such liquor was manufactured, and the place where the same shall have been made; and any person, other than the owner thereof, or his agent, who shall intentionally remove or deface such brand therefrom, shall be liable to a penalty of fifty dollars for each cask from which the brand is so removed or defaced.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend this section, in line two, by striking out the word "brand" and inserting "mark;" and in the same line by striking out the word "branded" and inserting "marked in such manner as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue;" and also by striking out, in lines ten and eleven, the word "brand" and inserting "mark."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, to which the Committee on Finance reported no amendment, as follows:

SEC. [58] 57. And be it further enacted, That every person, other than the purchaser or owner of any fermented liquor, or person acting on his behalf, or as his agent, who shall intentionally remove or deface the stamp affixed, as herein required, upon the hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel, in which the same may be contained, shall be liable to a fine of fifty dollars for each such vessel from which the stamp is so removed or defaced, and to render compensation to such purchaser or owner for all damages sustained by him therefrom.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. After the word "affixed," in line four, I move to strike out the words "as herein required."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, to which the Committee on Finance reported no amendment, as follows:

SEC. [59] 58. And be it further enacted, That the ownership or possession by any person of any fermented liquor after its sale or removal from brewery or warehouse, or other place where it was made, upon which the tax required shall not have been paid, shall render the same liable to seizure where ever found, and to forfeiture; and that the want of the proper stamp or stamps upon any hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel in which fermented liquor may be contained after its sale or removal from the brewery where the same was made, or warehouse, as aforesaid, shall be notice to all persons that the tax has not been paid thereon, and shall be prima facie evidence of the non-payment thereof.

The Secretary read the next section, to which the Committee on Finance reported no amendment, as follows:

SEC. [60] 59. And be it further enacted, That every person who shall withdraw any fermented liquor from any hoghead, barrel, keg, or other vessel upon which the proper stamp or stamps shall not have been affixed as herein required, for the purpose of bottling the same, or who shall carry on, or attempt to carry on, the business of bottling fermented liquor in any brewery or other place in which fermented liquor is made, or upon any premises having communication with such brewery or any warehouse, shall be liable to a fine of $500, and the property used in such bottling or business shall be liable to forfeiture.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. In line four, after the word "affixed," I move to strike out the words "as herein required."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [61] 60. And be it further enacted, That any assessor, collector, inspector, or revenue agent, who shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or in the production by distillation, or by other process, of spirits, ale, or beer, or other fermented liquors, shall, on conviction before any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, pay a penalty not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, in the discretion of the court.

The Committee on Finance reported two amendments to this section. The first was in line three to strike out the word "be" and to insert "hereafter become" before the word "interested."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of the section the following:

And any such officer interested as aforesaid in any such manufacture at the time of the passage of this act, who shall fail to divest himself of such interest within sixty days thereafter, shall be held and declared to have become so interested after the passage of this act.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend the amendment in lines ten and eleven by striking out the words "at the time of the passage of this act" and inserting "after this act takes effect."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The same alteration should be made at the end of the amendment, striking out the words "the passage of this act" and inserting "this act takes effect."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

SEC. [62] 61. And be it further enacted, That every officer or employé appointed or holding office in the Bureau of Internal Revenue under authority of law, whose payment, charges, salary, or compensation shall be composed, either wholly or in part, of fees, commissions, allowances, or rewards, from whatever source derived, shall be required to render to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under regulations to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, a statement under oath, setting forth the entire amount of such fees, commissions, emoluments, or rewards, of whatever nature or from whatever source received, during the time for which said statement is rendered; and any false statement knowingly and willfully rendered under the requirements of this section, or regulations established in accordance therewith, shall be deemed wilful perjury, and punished, on conviction thereof, as provided in section forty-two of the act of June 30, 1864, to which this act is an amendment; and any neglect or omission to render such statement when required shall be punished, on conviction therefor, by a fine of not less than $200 nor than $500, in the discretion of the court.

The Committee on Finance proposed to amend this section in line two, by inserting the words "internal revenue" before the word "officer," and by striking out, after the word "officer," the words "or employé appointed or holding office in the Bureau of Internal Revenue under authority of law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, to which the Committee on Finance reported no amendment, as follows:

SEC. [63] 62. And be it further enacted, That so much of this act as changes the existing law relating to distilled spirits and fermented liquors shall take effect from and after the 1st day of September, 1866.

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert after the above section the following as a new section:

SEC. 63. And be it further enacted, That if any person or persons shall, directly or indirectly, promise, offer, or give, or cause or procure to be promised, offered, or given, any money, goods, right in action, bribe, present or reward, or any promise, contract, undertaking, obligation, or security for the payment or delivery of any money, goods, right in action, bribe, present, or reward, or any other valuable thing whatever to any officer of the United States, or person holding any place of trust or profit, or discharging any official function under, or in connection with, any Department of the Government of the United States, after the passage of this act, with intent to influence his decision or action on any question, matter, cause, or thing which may then be pending, or may by law be brought before him in his official capacity, or in his place of trust or profit, or with intent to influence any such officer or person to commit, or aid or abet in committing, any fraud on the revenue of the United States, or to connive at or collude in, or to allow or permit, or make opportunity for, the commission of any such fraud, and shall be thereof convicted, such person or persons so offering, promising, or giving, or causing or procuring to be promised, offered, or given any such money, goods, right in action, bribe, present, or reward, or any promise, contract, undertaking, obligation, or security for the payment or delivery of any money, goods, right in action, bribe, present, or reward, or other valuable thing whatever; and the officer or person who shall in anywise accept or receive the same, or any part thereof, shall be liable to indictment in any court of the United States having jurisdiction, and shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not exceeding three times the amount so offered, promised, or given, and imprisoned not exceeding three years; and the person convicted of so accepting or receiving the same, or any part thereof, if an officer or person holding any such place of trust or profit, shall forfeit his office or place; and any person so convicted under this section shall forever be disqualified to hold any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert as section sixty-four the following:

SEC. 64. And be it further enacted, That hereafter in all cases of seizure of any goods, wares, or merchandise which shall, in the opinion of the collector or deputy collector making such seizure, be of the appraised value of $300 or less, and which shall have been so seized as being subject to forfeiture under any of the provisions of this act, or of any act to which this is an amendment, excepting in cases otherwise provided, the said collector or deputy collector shall proceed as follows, that is to say, he shall cause a list containing a particular description of the goods, wares, or merchandise so seized to be prepared in duplicate, and an appraisal of the same to be made by three sworn appraisers, to be selected by him for said purpose, who shall be respectable and disinterested citizens of the United States, residing within the collection district wherein the seizure was made. The aforsaid list and appraisement shall be properly attested by such collector or deputy collector and the persons making the appraisement, for which service said appraisers shall be allowed the sum of $1.50 per day each, to be paid as other necessary charges of collectors according to law. If the said goods shall be found by such appraisers to be of the value of $300 or less, the said collector or deputy collector shall publish a notice, for the space of three weeks, in some newspaper of the district where the seizure was made, describing the articles, and stating the time, place, and cause of their seizure, and requiring any person or persons claiming them to appear and make such claim within thirty days from the date of the first publication of such notice: Provided, That any person or persons claiming the goods, wares, or merchandise, so seized, within the time specified in the notice, may file with such collector or deputy collector a claim, stating his or their interest in the articles seized, and may execute a bond to the United States in the penal sum of $250, with sureties, to be approved by said collector or deputy collector, conditioned that, in case of condemnation of the articles so seized, the obligors will pay all the costs and expenses of the proceedings to obtain such condemnation; and upon the delivery of such bond to the collector or deputy collector, he shall transmit the same, with the duplicate list and description of the goods seized, to the United States district attorney for the district, who shall proceed thereon in the ordinary manner prescribed by law: And provided, also, That if there shall be no claim interposed and no bond given within the time above specified, the collector or deputy collector, as the case may be, shall give ten days' notice of the sale of the goods, wares, or merchandise by publication; and at the time and place specified in said notice, shall sell the article so seized at public auction, and, after deducting the expense of appraisement and sale, he shall deposit the proceeds to the credit of the Secretary of the Treasury. And within one year after the sale of any goods, wares, or merchandise, as aforsaid, any person or persons claiming to be interested in the goods, wares, or merchandise so sold may apply to the Secretary of the Treasury for a remission of the forfeiture thereof, or any of them, and a restoration of the proceeds of the said sale, which may be granted by the said Secretary upon satisfactory proof, to be furnished in such manner as he shall prescribe: Provided, That it shall be satisfactorily shown that the applicant, at the time of the seizure and sale of the goods in question, and during the intervening time, was absent out of the United States, or in such circumstances as prevented him from knowing of such seizure, and that he did not know of the same; and also that the said forfeiture was incurred without willful negligence or any intention of fraud on the part of the owner or owners of such goods. If no application for such restoration be made within one year, as hereinbefore prescribed, then, at the expiration of the said time, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause the proceeds of the sale of the said goods, wares, or merchandise to be distributed according to law, as in the case of goods, wares, or merchandise condemned and sold pursuant to the decree of a competent court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Prior to putting that motion, the Chair, with the permission of the Senate, will lay before the Senate several bills from the House of Representatives, for reference.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 361) to reorganize and establish the Army of the United States—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

A bill (H. R. No. 698) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mercie E. Scattergood—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. No. 699) for the relief of James L. Perham—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. No. 700) for the benefit of John W. Jones—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. No. 701) granting a pension to Mrs. Imogene Buckingham, of Edgar county, Illinois—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. No. 702) granting a pension to Mrs. Charlotte E. Reed—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. No. 703) for the relief of Lieutenant Colonel Frank Lynch—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. No. 704) for the relief of Joel Farley—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. No. 705) for the relief of George W. Bush—to the Committee on Pensions.

EUROPEAN TROOPS IN MEXICO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 13th instant, a copy of a dispatch of the 4th instant, addressed to the Secretary of State by the United States minister at Paris, containing further information in regard to the employment of European troops in Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit to Congress a report of the Secretary of State, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution of the 18th instant, respecting a submission to the Legislatures of the States of an additional article to the Constitution of the United States. It will be seen from this report that the Secretary of State had, on the 16th instant, transmitted to the Governors of the several States certified copies of the joint resolution passed on the 13th instant proposing an amendment to the Constitution.

Even in ordinary times, any question of amending the Constitution must be justly regarded as of paramount importance. This importance is at the present time enhanced by the fact that the joint resolution was not submitted by the two Houses for the approval of the President, and that of the thirty-six States which constitute the Union, eleven are excluded from representation in either House of Congress, although, with the single exception of Texas, they have been entirely restored to all their functions as States, in conformity with the organic law of the land, and have appeared at the national capital by Senators and Representatives who have applied for and have been refused admission to the vacant seats. Nor have the sovereign people of the nation been afforded an opportunity of expressing their views upon the important questions which the amendment involves. Grave doubts, therefore, may naturally and justly arise as to whether the action of Congress is in harmony with the sentiments of the people, and whether State Legislatures, elected without reference to such an issue, should be called upon by Congress to decide respecting the ratification of the proposed amendment.

Waiving the question as to the constitutional validity of the proceedings of Congress upon the joint resolution proposing the amendment, or as to the merits of the article which it submits, through the executive department, to the Legislatures of the States, I deem it proper to observe that the steps taken by the Secretary of State, as detailed in the accompanying report, are to be considered as purely ministerial, and in no sense whatever committing the Executive to an approval or a recommendation of the amendment to the State Legislatures or to the people. On the contrary, a proper appreciation of the letter and spirit of the Constitution, as well as of the interests of national order, harmony, and union, and a due deference for an enlightened public judgment, may at this time well suggest a doubt whether any amendment to the Constitution ought to be proposed by Congress and pressed upon the Legislatures of the several States for final decision until after the admission of such loyal Senators and Representatives of the now unrepresented States as have been or as may hereafter be chosen in conformity with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 22, 1866.

Mr. WILSON. I move that the message be laid upon the table and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The report of the Secretary of State communicated by the President is as follows:

To the President:

The Secretary of State, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress of the 18th instant, in the following words—"that the President of the United States be requested to transmit forthwith to the Executives of the several States of the United States copies of the article of amendment proposed by Congress to the State Legislatures to amend the Constitution of the United States, passed June 13, 1866, respecting citizenship, the basis of representation, disqualification for office, and validity of the public debt of the United States, &c., to the end that the said States may proceed to act upon the said article of amendment, and that he request the Executive of each State that may ratify said amendment to transmit to the Secretary of State a certified copy of such ratification"—has the honor to submit the following report, namely, that on the 16th instant Hon. AMASA COBB, of the Committee of the House of Representatives on Enrolled Bills, brought to this Department and deposited therein an enrolled resolution of the two Houses of Congress, which was thereupon received by the Secretary of State and deposited among the rolls of the Department, a copy of which is herewith annexed.

Thereupon the Secretary of State, upon the 16th instant, in conformity with the proceeding which was adopted by him in 1865 in regard to the then proposed and afterward adopted congressional amendment of the Constitution of the United States concerning the prohibition of slavery, transmitted certified copies of the annexed resolution to the Governors of the several States, together with a certificate and circular letter. A copy of both of these communications is herewith annexed.

Respectfully submitted,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, June 20, 1866.

[Circular.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, June 16, 1866.

To his Excellency, Governor of the State of —

SIR: I have the honor to transmit an attested copy of a resolution of Congress, proposing to the Legislatures of the several States a fourteenth article to the Constitution of the United States. The decisions of the several Legislatures upon the subject are required by law to be communicated to this Department. An acknowledgment of the receipt of this communication is requested by your Excellency's most obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

The accompanying paper is the certificate of a true copy of the concurrent resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution.

A. J. GRAY.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 180) for the relief of A. J. Gray; which was to add, at the end of the bill, the words "to be paid out of the naval pension fund."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, I move that that amendment be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. AMARILLA COOK.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 238) granting a pension to Mrs. Amarilla Cook; which was to reduce the pension from twenty dollars to seventeen dollars per month.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House. I have examined it.

The motion was agreed to.

CORNELIUS CROWLEY.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 275) for the relief of Cornelius Crowley; which was to strike out the last line of the bill, and to insert in lieu thereof, "and pay him at that rate in lieu of any other pension to which he may have been entitled."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move that the Senate concur in that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 330) making further provision for the establishment of an armory and arsenal of construction, deposit, and repair on Rock Island, in the State of Illinois.

Mr. WILSON. The amendment of the House is a substitute for the whole bill. I have read it carefully, and I think it is right, and I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

MINORITY REPORT ON RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. HENDRICKS. When the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] was leaving the city a few days ago, to be absent for some days, he informed me that he and some other gentlemen of the committee of fifteen had prepared a minority report, but that it was not in a condition to be presented to the Senate at the time he left, and he requested me, as soon as its preparation was completed, to present it to the Senate for him; and for him I present to the Senate the minority report, and ask that it be printed, and ask for the printing of extra copies to correspond with the number of extra copies that were ordered of the majority report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana offers as the views of the minority the following paper, and asks that it be printed, and that an extra number of the report may also be printed. The question of printing the ordinary number is properly a matter for motion.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose it is a question whether a minority report can be made. It never has been made in this body. We have had several discussions in regard to that subject. This is an unusual proceeding in two respects: one is, its being a minority report; and the other, being presented in behalf of a committee of which the Senator who presents it is not a member. There have been one or two occasions on which the subject was discussed. I recollect that when the Kansas troubles were up, and a voluminous report was made by my colleague now deceased (Mr. Douglas) in reference to the matter, the Senator from Vermont, (Mr. Collamer,) who was also a member of the committee, desired to present his views in reference to it. The matter was discussed. The right to present a minority report was denied by Senators; and it was presented in the shape of the "views of the minority of the committee"—not called a "minority report." By looking into the proceedings, I think it will be found that he asked leave to present the views of the members of the committee agreeing with him—not calling it a minority report—and it was received in that shape. This would adopt a practice, as it is presented here, of minority reports presented in this body some two or three days, and I do not know but a week or two weeks after the majority have made their report—a practice which I, for one, would not be willing to sanction.

I think if the minority of a committee desire to present their views they should be required to present them when the majority present theirs. It was never intended that a minority of a committee should, after the majority report is submitted, write out a report to review that. I do not know what is in this minority report; I have never read it; I believe it has been presented in the House; but I have not read it and do not know what is in it; but certainly to allow a minority of a committee, at a distance of time, days and weeks after the majority have submitted their report, to come in then with a minority report, is a proceeding, I am sure, that is without precedent in the Senate. I shall object, myself, to the reception of a minority report from that committee at this day.

Mr. HENDRICKS. On the question first suggested by the Senator from Illinois, of course I have no argument to present. I have handed this to the Chair at the request of the distinguished Senator from Maryland, who is necessarily absent, and I have communicated to the Senate about what he communicated to me. If it is not proper for one Senator to present a document for another, of course I shall not undertake to do it. I presume the Senator from Maryland did not think of that point, but I cannot see any objection to that. If I were necessarily absent and should ask another Senator to present a report, I should not expect that it would be objected to on that account.

Mr. TRUMBULL. In regard to the suggestion as to objecting to the Senator's presenting it for an absent Senator, I stated that I had never known such a proceeding. I do not object to the reception of the report upon that point; I stated it to be unusual so far as I knew; but I object to a minority report from any one, from the Senator from Maryland if he were here, and particularly after this lapse of time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was going on to say that I had not read this report and of course do not present it as my own. I stated that it was the report of the gentlemen connected with that committee who dissented from the views of the majority. I have no doubt that the argument presented in that document will meet the approval of my judgment, because it is written by a very able Senator, with whose views on this subject I generally concur.

Now, upon the other question, if it be a rule of this body that a minority cannot present a report, I presume the Senator will not object to its being presented, as he says has been the practice heretofore, as "the views" of the minority of the committee who do not agree with the majority. I presume in that form he will not object, and if it has been the custom of the Senate to present it in that form I will so modify it. I do not want to depart from any usage of the Senate on a question of that kind. The Senator from Maryland stated to me that he did not know the majority were going to report at the time they did, and that he had not been able to complete his at that time. I think he wrote at least a portion of this report; how much of it he did not inform me, but he said he had not been able to complete it then. I presume his engagements were such that he could not do it. I should think it very singular because a member of the committee was unable, by reason of his engagements, to complete a report, that he should be denied a hearing before the body and the country of his views.

This is an important question, Mr. President. It is no ordinary question going to the country at this time. The majority of the committee have regarded it as an important question. They have thought it proper to present their views elaborately, not with the view of impressing the Senate with regard to the action it was about taking at the time, because that report was made to this body about the same hour at which we were called upon to vote on the proposed amendment to the Constitution; but I understand from the time it was presented, and the elaborate character of the report, that it was intended as a document to impress the judgment of the country quite as much as of the Senate.

Now, sir, if it be intended that the country shall have the whole views of the committee upon the subject, and that there shall be a full discussion of the questions by the gentlemen of the Senate who have been connected with the investigation, there can be no objection to allowing this document to go upon the files of the Senate and to the country as the views of the minority. But if it be intended that there shall be the views of but one side of this question, and that the minority shall not be heard, then it is proper to object. Why object? A Senator of this body is a member of that committee, for whom all of us and the country have a great respect—calm in his presentation of any views, courteous to the body, always dignified and logical, never introducing into his discussion of matters a partisan style, but always dignified and statesmanlike in the presentation of his views. Why then shall it be denied? If it is to be denied by the Senate upon the present occasion, I shall desire to withdraw the document rather than have it denied, and let him present it himself when he comes back.

But I think the Senator from Illinois, upon reflection, will not persist in his refusal to allow this to be presented as the views of the gentlemen who have signed it. It will then go to the country with the report already made. If it be not equal in the statement of facts and the force of its logic with the report of the majority, no hurt is done; but if it be a calm, fair, and able answer to the report of the majority, it ought not to be objected to. When the fact is communicated to the Senate that it was not presented at the time that the other report was presented, because the Senator could not prepare it then, I think that the question of time ought not to be presented.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I cannot say how fair nor how able this report is. I have not read it, and of course I cannot reply to any suggestion of that kind; nor do I desire to do so; nor does the ability of the report enter at all into the objection which I have made; nor have I any desire to keep from the country the views of the distinguished Senator who has prepared it; nothing of the sort. But, sir, we do business here according to established rules and according to usages and parliamentary law. I have never known a report of a minority brought in after this lapse of time, which might be a review of the majority report. I do not know what is in it; and therefore, for the purpose of the objection I have made, I am glad that I do not know, as I cannot be accused of objecting to it because of its intrinsic merits or demerits. But the Senator from Indiana will see that there must be some time when the views of a minority are to be received. I recollect very well what occurred when the Kansas report was brought in. I recollect with what haste the distinguished Senator from Vermont (Mr. Collamer) prepared his views upon that occasion, how he labored through the night to have them ready to present when the majority report was brought in. When the chairman of the Committee on Territories went to your desk and read himself his lengthy report, it was immediately followed by the Senator from Vermont, who read his views on the same day, at the same time.

Now, sir, I object to the reception of this for the reason which I have stated. In the first place, minority reports at that time were considered in this body as not according to the rules of the body. I do not know that a discussion has arisen since that time. I should like to look into that discussion. I do not know that any vote was taken on the occasion. At any rate, I do not think that such reports have ever been received after this length of time.

I will make my objection to the reception of this minority report that is now offered. I do not care to have any vote upon it, but I would desire that it should lie over, and we will look at the practice of the Senate to-morrow, or some other day, and see what may be the practice. I certainly do not wish to introduce any new practice, and I have no desire to keep from the country any views that the distinguished Senator wishes to present. It is not with that view that I make the objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is quite as satisfactory to me to let the question pass over for the present. I do not want to introduce any new practice into the Senate, and I do not want anything that is unreasonable to be adopted in regard to an absent Senator; therefore I accept the proposition.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 22, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CALIFORNIA AND OREGON RAILROAD.

Mr. McRUER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is this the same bill which was before the House the other day and was referred back to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad? If so, I object to its introduction. The House refused to have it referred to the Committee on Public Lands the other day.

Mr. KASSON. I hope my friend will withdraw the objection. I was one that opposed the bill; but the parties interested propose important changes, making the bill less objectionable. I hope, therefore, it will be allowed to go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I cannot withdraw the objection.

JAMES M. CASSETY.

On motion of Mr. WARD, the papers in the case of James M. Cassety were taken from the files and referred to the Committee of Claims.

WAGON ROAD.

Mr. DEFREES, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported adversely on House bill No. 107, to provide for the improvement of the wagon road from Niobrara to Virginia City; which was laid on the table.

ROCK ISLAND BRIDGE AND RAILROAD.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Military Affairs Senate bill No. 330, making further provision for the establishment of an armory and arsenal of construction, deposit, and repair on Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, with a substitute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the introduction of this bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SCHENCK. The original bill authorizes the Secretary of War to negotiate with the Rock Island Railroad Company, but there are other companies who have the right of transit across the bridge, and the only change made is to modify the bill so that the power to negotiate on the part of the Secretary of War shall extend to and include all these companies, and to settle all claims of every kind.

The substitute was read. It authorizes the Secretary of War to change and fix the position of the railroad across Rock Island and the bridge across the Mississippi river at and on the island so as best to accord with the purposes of the Government in its occupancy of said island for military purposes; and in order to effect this he is authorized to grant to the railroad company a permanent location and right of way on and across Rock Island, to be fixed and designated by him, with such quantity of land to be occupied and held for railroad purposes as may be necessary. It further provides for a grant to the parties in interest such aid, pecuniary and otherwise, toward effecting the change in their road and bridge, and establishing thereon a wagon road for the use of the Government of the United States, as may be adjudged to be fair and equitable by the board of commissioners authorized under the act of April 19, 1864, and entitled "An act in addition to an act for the establishment of certain arsenals." It extends the act of 1864 so as to include the small islands contiguous to Rock Island, and known as Benham's, Wilson's, and Winnebago Islands; and makes the following appropriations:

To liquidate claims for property in Benham's, Wilson's, and Winnebago Islands, and for property in Rock Island which has been taken in pursuance of law for military purposes, $293,600, or so much thereof, and no more, as may be necessary to pay the respective claimants such amounts as may be reported by the board of commissioners authorized by the act of April 19, 1864, and ordered by the United States circuit court to be paid to each.

To secure water-power at the head of Rock Island, $100,000.

To erect store-houses for the preservation of arms and other munitions of war, and to establish communication between Rock Island arsenal and the cities of Davenport, Iowa, and Rock Island, Illinois, $100,000.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know whether I perfectly understand this bill. It looks to me like an appropriation bill. I do not know whether there is an appropriation or not.

The SPEAKER. There is an appropriation in the bill, but the House has granted permission to the gentleman to report the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I had not heard the bill read.

The SPEAKER. Consent was granted for the reporting of the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. There are two or three hundred thousand dollars in this bill.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to know whether the granting of unanimous consent waives the point as to the bill containing an appropriation. How can anybody know what is in a bill before it is read?

The SPEAKER. When the House grants unanimous consent for the reporting of a bill, that suspends all rules.

Mr. DAWES. Without the House knowing what the bill is?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had a right to object to the reception of the bill.

Mr. SCHENCK. There is not the slightest intention to entrap the House. If, after hearing an explanation of this bill, the gentleman insists on referring the bill, it may virtually be the killing of the bill. Sir, it is a matter of great public concern that this bill should pass, in the opinion of the committee that reported it. It involves the carrying out of the intention of the Government in relation to the establishment of an arsenal at Rock Island. Gentlemen are aware that an arsenal of very great present and prospective importance has been established at Rock Island, and that for the purpose of better conducting the business of the Government at that arsenal, and sustaining it as an institution of the national Government, measures have been taken for securing a title to the adjoining small islands.

This bill passed the Senate without any objection, after a full and thorough examination there. It did not pass the Senate in the shape in which we report it, but the committee of the Senate have agreed to the modification made in this substitute, and it satisfies all parties in interest. The House committee had before them the chief of Ordnance to make a full explanation, with maps, of this whole matter, and, in fact, all the parties in interest have come unanimously to the conclusion that the bill ought to pass the House in the form in which it was intended to be modified by the Senate. With this explanation I submit if it is not right to pass the bill at once without referring it to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEVENS. I think the principle of taking up in the House a bill containing an appropriation of two or three hundred thousand dollars is one that never ought to be allowed. The object of committing bills is to have them printed so that members may examine them. I hope the bill will take the ordinary course. If the gentleman wishes to make it a special order I have no objection, but I move now that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be printed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to propose an amendment to this bill, to which I presume the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] will not object; and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] will yield to me for one moment, I will state the amendment I propose.

Mr. STEVENS. I will hear the amendment of the gentleman, but I shall insist upon my motion to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Among other things this bill provides for changing the location of the Rock Island bridge; and to that extent it will certainly meet with the favor of every person in the West who knows what has been the obstruction which that bridge has caused to the navigation of the Mississippi river. I presume millions of dollars would not cover the damage. I propose, and I presume the gentleman from Ohio will have no objection to it—if he has I shall oppose the bill totally—to move the following amendment to come in at the proper place, "and the said bridge shall be so constructed as in nowise to interfere with the navigation of the Mississippi river."

Mr. MOULTON. Make it read, "not reasonably interfere."

Mr. COOK. I would suggest that it read, "not materially interfere."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It will have to be a material obstruction to the navigation to come within the scope of the amendment. Certainly the friends of this bill should not object to this amendment. The present bridge at Rock Island, as my colleague from the Ottawa district [Mr. Cook] knows very well, is a great obstruction of the navigation of the river.

Mr. STEVENS. I think this bill should be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The House can just as well consider it here as in Committee of the Whole. We have it before us now, and may as well act upon it at this time as at any other time.

Mr. STEVENS. If I had known what the bill contained, I should have raised the point of order. But I did not know that, and therefore did not raise the point in time.

Mr. SCHENCK. If I am not mistaken, and I think I am not, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] has himself had many a bill passed without its being referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEVENS. Not when any gentleman made the point of order that it should go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SCHENCK. Of course, if any member made the point of order in time, the gentleman from Pennsylvania could not help himself. As I said before there is no disposition on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs to entrap this House in regard to this matter, none whatever. And it is only because, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] has well said, the bill, simple as it is, can be considered here and now, that I oppose its reference to the Committee of the Whole. It is a bill which upon grounds of public utility and advantage alone the Committee on Military Affairs have unanimously agreed to recommend to the House and ask that the House pass it at once, as the Senate have promptly passed it.

In regard to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN] it seems to me that there is a reasonable proposition contained in that amendment. Perhaps it ought to read, "not interfere with the ordinary navigation of the river," or something of that kind; for as the gentleman proposed his amendment it would cover extraordinary and unusual contingencies.

Mr. STEVENS. I think we should now take a vote upon my motion to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COOK. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STEVENS. Certainly.

Mr. COOK. I want to make a suggestion to my colleague [Mr. WASHBURN] and to the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, [Mr. SCHENCK.] The bill as at present framed provides that this bridge shall be erected under the direction of the Secretary of War. It is not likely that a bridge erected under his direction will prove an obstruction to the navigation.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman tell the House how much this will cost the Government?

Mr. COOK. I do not know.

Mr. STEVENS. Some half a million dollars, I have no doubt.

Mr. SCHENCK. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] that the amount here appropriated is to carry out a law already enacted. Measures have been taken to obtain the title to the Davenport property on Rock Island, and this appropriation is to carry out what has been recommended by a commission appointed under a former law.

Mr. STEVENS. I want to see all this. I want to see the bill. I call the previous question on the motion to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment? I want to have some understanding in regard to the amendment I have suggested.

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot yield.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope, then, the previous question will be seconded, and that then the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole will be voted down.

The question was taken upon seconding the previous question; and there were, upon a division—ayes 22, noes 21; no quorum voting.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Before tellers are appointed, I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me for a moment, in order that we may have some fair understanding in regard to this amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I will hear what the gentleman has to say.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The amendment which I proposed provided that this bridge, which is to be built, not by the Government, but by the railroad company, should be so constructed as in nowise to interfere with the navigation of the Mississippi river. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] proposes to change the language of my amendment so as to provide that the construction of the bridge shall not interfere with the ordinary navigation of the river.

Mr. ALLEY. If the gentleman will allow me, I would suggest that the amendment be put in this form: that there shall be no material obstruction of the navigation of the river.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That would leave it an open question, what would be a material obstruction and what would not. I am not inclined, on the whole, to object to the modification proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, that the construction of the bridge shall not interfere with the ordinary navigation of the river. I am content to modify my amendment as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ALLEY. I think that is not the suggestion as now made by the gentleman from Ohio. The suggestion which I make meets, I believe, the approbation of the gentleman from Ohio, as I know it does of the gentlemen who are acting in accord with him in this matter. The usual and the legal form of language is that there shall be no material obstruction to the navigation of the river.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am not tenacious in regard to the particular form of the amendment which may be adopted to meet the difficulty which has been raised. The report of the committee does not embrace this point. The gentleman from Illinois proposed, in the first place, to amend by providing that the construction of the bridge should in nowise interfere with the navigation of the river. A strict compliance with that requirement would be impossible. The bridge must necessarily interfere, to some extent, with the navigation. I have therefore suggested—and the gentleman has accepted the suggestion—that the amendment be modified so as to provide that the bridge shall not interfere with "the ordinary navigation" of the river. It appears, however, that this is not quite satisfactory to a number of gentlemen well acquainted with the facts of the case. I am willing, if the gentleman from Illinois will consent, that the amendment shall be modified so as to provide that the bridge shall not materially or unnecessarily interfere with navigation. The bridge must, in the very nature of things, cause an interference, to some extent, with the navigation; but that interference may be very slight, and the inconvenience from this source may be completely overbalanced by the additional facility which the bridge will afford for railroad communication.

I desire it to be understood that this matter is no part of the report of the committee; but the limitation suggested should, I think, in some shape be added to the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. As to the general objects of this bill, I desire to say a word; and I will repeat that I do not see why the bill should not be considered in the House at the present time, while there is no other business pressing. There are some considerations in favor of the passage of this bill, although it contains a large appropriation, and I would therefore be inclined on general principles to oppose it. It is well known that the Government has made Rock Island a depository for war materials for the whole western country. One of the purposes of this appropriation is to erect buildings to protect all this vast amount of property, now exposed to damage by the weather.

Mr. GRINNELL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GRINNELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter in which I have a direct interest, as I live upon the line of this road; and I desire to say that the people I represent have no objection whatever to this bill, if it be so amended as to provide that the bridge shall not interfere materially or unnecessarily with the navigation of the river. It must be understood that a bridge cannot be built across the Mississippi river without obstructing the navigation to some extent. If we should provide, as first proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, that this bridge shall "in nowise" interfere with the navigation of the river, it would interpose an insuperable barrier to the construction of the bridge. I hope that my friend from Illinois will accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ALLEY,] the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. For one, I will be unwilling to vote for less than that, as unjust to this company as well as unjust to all companies anticipating the building of bridges. It is unjust to the railroad interest.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. But not unjust to the millions of agriculturists whose products have been destroyed by these bridges.

Mr. ALLEY. I will now propose my amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I will withdraw the motion to refer, so as to allow the amendment to come in, after which I will renew it.

Mr. ALLEY. I will remark that the amendment meets with the approbation of all parties in interest. I presume it will meet with the objection of the gentleman from Illinois. I can see no objection to it. It has the approval of the chairman of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

To be so constructed as not materially to interfere with or obstruct the navigation of the Mississippi river.

Mr. STEVENS. I renew the motion to refer the bill and amendment to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BANKS. I suggest to my colleague to insert the word "impair."

Mr. ALLEY. I agree to that modification.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I accept the amendment, and hope the motion to refer will be voted down.

Mr. STEVENS. I am willing this shall be made a special order in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. A general appropriation bill can be made a special order by a majority vote, but this will require unanimous consent.

Mr. FINCK. I object.

Mr. STEVENS. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The previous question, if seconded, will not exhaust itself until the third reading of the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I withdraw it. I presume there will be no further discussion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 63.

So the House refused to refer the bill and amendment to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ALLEY demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was adopted.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. MCULTON demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

On motion of Mr. NICHOLSON he was granted leave of absence till Tuesday next.

BUSINESS TO-MORROW.

Mr. DARLING gave notice that to-morrow after the morning hour he would announce the death of his late colleague, JAMES HUMPHREY.

The SPEAKER stated by previous order of the House the morning hour to-morrow would be devoted to public business.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. KASSON demanded the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER stated that the regular order of business was the call of the committees for reports of a private nature, commencing with the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HARRIET W. POND.

On motion of Mr. BENJAMIN, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Mrs. Harriet W. Pond; and the same was referred to the Committee of Claims.

LEONARD CASEY.

On motion of Mr. BENJAMIN, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Leonard Casey, the case being provided for under the general law; and the same was laid upon the table.

LAVINIA LENFEST AND ANDREW C. SINGER.

On motion of Mr. BENJAMIN, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the petitions of Mrs. Lavinia Lenfest and Andrew C. Singer; and the same were laid upon the table.

MRS. MERCIE C. SCATTERGOOD.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill granting increase of pension to Mrs. Mercie C. Scattergood; which was read a first and second time. It increases the pension to fifteen dollars per month.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HARRIET B. CROCKER.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back Senate bill No. 326, granting a pension to Mrs. Harriet B. Crocker, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read. It grants a pension to Mrs. Crocker, mother of Henry B. Crocker, of the fifteenth regiment Ohio volunteer infantry, of eight dollars per month, commencing on the 4th of October, 1862.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES L. PERHAM.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of James L. Perham; which was read a first and second time

The bill was read in full. It grants a pension to James L. Perham, of the tenth regiment Maine volunteers, of eight dollars per month, from February 4, 1863, to November 17, 1864, amounting to $171 36.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Catharine F. Winslow, widow of Lieutenant Colonel Winslow, on the pension-roll at the rate of thirty dollars per month, to commence from the 7th of July, 1864.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. SAWYER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SMITH, one of their Clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of House to the bill of the Senate (No. 243) to extend the time for the reversion to the United States of the lands granted by Congress to aid in the construction of a railroad from Amboy, by Hillsdale and Lansing, to some point on or near Traverse bay, in the State of Michigan, and for the completion of said road.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed an act (S. No. 381) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of marine hospitals and revenue-cutters," approved April 20, 1866, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

MRS. IMOGENE BUCKINGHAM.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill granting a pension to Mrs. Imogene Buckingham; which was read a first and second time.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to give a pension certificate to and to place the name of Mrs. Imogene Buckingham upon the roll of pensioners, with the pay and under the conditions and limitations of the widow of a private of infantry.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. COFFROTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. CHARLOTTE E. REED.

Mr. COFFROTH also, from the same committee, reported a bill granting a pension to Mrs. Charlotte E. Reed; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS TO ARTIFICERS.

Mr. PERHAM. As the purpose of the bill has been provided for by a general law, I move that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of bill of the Senate No. 116, to extend the benefits of the pension laws to artificers, and I move that it be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. AMARILLA COOK.

Mr. PERHAM also, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment, and with the recommendation that it do pass, bill of the Senate No. 288, granting a pension to Mrs. Amarilla Cook.

The bill was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Amarilla Cook, widow of John B. Cook, late deputy provost marshal of the sixteenth congressional district of the State of Ohio, on the pension-roll, at the rate of twenty dollars per month, to commence from the 5th day of March, 1865, and to continue during her widowhood.

The amendment of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was to strike out "twenty" and insert "seventeen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then read the third time and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Jane Harris, widow of George H. Harris, late a private in company I, sixth Iowa cavalry, now deceased, on the pension-rolls as entitled to a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month during her widowhood, payment to commence from October 23, 1863, the date of the death of said George H. Harris.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill No. 339, granting a pension to Benjamin Franklin.

The bill was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Benjamin Franklin, a private in company H, second regiment Minnesota cavalry volunteers, on the pension-roll, at the rate of twenty-five dollars per month, to commence from the 15th day of January, 1866, and to continue during his natural life.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JANE D. BRENT.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill No. 298, granting a pension to Jane D. Brent.

The bill was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Jane D. Brent, of Detroit, Michigan, widow of Thomas Lee Brent, late a captain in the Army of the United States, on the pension-roll, and to allow and pay to her a pension at the rate of twenty dollars per month, from and after the passage of this act, until her marriage or death, and after either event to continue the said pension to Mary Brent, daughter of the said Thomas Lee Brent, if then under the age of sixteen years, until she attains that age.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARGARET KAETZEL.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back, with a recommendation that it do not pass, Senate bill No. 329, for the relief of Mrs. Margaret Kaetzel.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Margaret Kaetzel, widow of Nicholas Kaetzel, who was a civilian employed in the service of the United States at the arsenal at Columbus, Ohio; and that she be paid a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from the 5th day of April, 1865, and to continue during her widowhood.

Mr. PERHAM. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that the same be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

CORNELIUS CROWLEY.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back, with an amendment, Senate bill No. 275, for the relief Cornelius Crowley.

The bill was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Cornelius Crowley, late a private of company F, third regiment United States infantry, on the pension-roll at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from and after the passage of this act, and to continue during his natural life.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out the words "to continue during his natural life," and insert in lieu thereof the words "pay him at that rate in lieu of any other pension to which he may be entitled."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then read the third time and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

A. J. GRAY.

Mr. PERHAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill No. 180, for the relief of A. J. Gray.

The bill was read. It requires the Commissioner of Pensions to place the name of Andrew J. Gray, late a pilot on board the United States gunboat Judge Torrence, upon the list of invalid pensioners, at the rate prescribed for officers of his rank by act of Congress approved July 14, 1862.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, which was to add at the end of the bill the words, "to be paid out of the naval fund."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. REBECCA IRWIN.

Mr. PERHAM. I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to move that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 291, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Rebecca Irwin," on the ground that, in the administration of the Pension Bureau, such cases are already provided for.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was laid on the table.

The bill, which was read at length, directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to George W. Bush, of the city of New York, late a sergeant in company G, ninetyeth regiment New York volunteers, a pension of eight dollars per month from August 29, 1863, to March 8, 1865.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF 1812.

Mr. PERHAM. I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report adversely upon House bill No. 168, granting pensions to soldiers of the war of 1812 with Great Britain.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill be laid on the table?

Mr. MILLER. I move that the bill be recommitted, with instructions to the committee to report it with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. SPALDING. I hope this motion will be adopted.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, on the 22d of January last I presented to this House the bill now under consideration, entitled "A bill granting pensions to soldiers of the war of 1812 with Great Britain," and asked that it be referred to a select committee, in order that speedy action might be had thereon; but the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] interposed an objection and had it referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and the result is, at this late day, a verbal report with a negative recommendation. This extraordinary report, it seems to me, can only be accounted for on the ground that the arduous duties of that honorable committee prevented them from giving the subject-matter due consideration, for no written report has been presented, and I cannot well see how one could be, resting upon a sound basis, embracing such a recommendation. The bill, Mr. Speaker, provides that the surviving commissioned and non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates of the Army and Navy of the war of 1812 with Great Britain, who have received an honorable discharge and are now in necessitous circumstances, and the widows of such as are deceased who are in like circumstances, shall have their names placed on the pension-list of the United States, and be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of eight dollars per month, to be computed from the 1st day of April, 1865. The sum proposed to be paid by this bill is very small, and confined exclusively to those in indigent circumstances.

A bill passed this House during the first session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress by a majority of fifty-five, giving pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1812 without confining it to those in "necessitous circumstances," and among the honorable gentlemen that are members of the present Congress who voted for that bill, I find the names of Messrs. THAYER, BINGHAM, and our distinguished Speaker, [Mr. COLFAX.] That bill seems, for some cause, perhaps for want of time, not to have been taken up in the Senate. Trouble was then about coming upon the country, and our old heroes were willing to let their claim rest for a time; but as the dark cloud that was hovering over our country is now dispelled they renew their request, and call upon this Congress to give a pittance to enable them to procure a little food and raiment in their old age and declining years.

After the space of thirty-five years from the treaty of peace by which our independence was recognized the soldiers of that war were placed on the pension-roll, only two of whom survive, to wit, Samuel Dowling, of New Hampshire, and James Barnham, of Missouri. A few years more and these two veterans will also be taken from us, and none will be left to relate the doings of those dark days; but their works will live. And now that more than fifty years have passed since the war of 1812, sometimes denominated the second war for independence, was ended, justice requires that the names of the surviving veterans of that war should be placed on the roll of pensions, so that speedy relief may be had to alleviate those that are in indigent circumstances.

These old veterans have passed their three-score years and ten, and yet they are brave. I remember, Mr. Speaker, of being at Harrisburg at the time General Lee invaded Pennsylvania with a large rebel army, and seeing some of these old soldiers crossing the bridge over the Susquehanna at double-quick, with their rifles on their shoulders, ready and willing to face the enemy. They will not honor the nation with their presence much longer. They are rapidly passing away, many having left us since I had the honor of presenting this bill, and if Congress intends to do anything for these old heroes, action ought to be taken immediately. I will read, Mr. Speaker, a circular addressed to the members of Congress by a committee appointed on the 18th of February, 1858, at a meeting of the Veteran corps of the city of New York, which is as follows:

At a meeting of the Veteran corps of the city of New York, held on the 18th day of February, 1858, it was Resolved, That a committee be appointed to address a letter to each member of Congress, asking their support of a bill to provide for the militia who were enrolled in actual service during the last war with Great Britain, and to forward the same without delay; and that Henry Raymond, James B. Murray, William Buttree, J. M. Phyle, Thomas D. Howe, John C. Howard, Daniel Whitney, Henry Baker, Harlow Porter, Charles K. Crowley, and William G. Monell compose said committee.

NEW YORK, February 22, 1858.

SIR: The undersigned, appointed under the above resolution, beg leave to submit the same to you and to solicit your advocacy of a bill, already reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, "granting pensions to the officers and soldiers of the war with Great Britain of 1812, 1813, and 1814, and their widows, and those engaged in Indian wars during that period."

The claims of those soldiers are so eloquently set forth in the report accompanying the bill, that the undersigned would not venture to add a word, but that, having participated in that struggle, and having, from natural sympathy, watched the subsequent fate of their brethren in arms, they deem it proper to state facts in relation to them which should impart additional force to these claims upon a grateful and prosperous country, and to which prosperity, they may be allowed to add, the services here alluded to have, in their opinion, greatly contributed. It must be remembered that the largest proportion of these men were, at the time of their being called upon to defend their country and to sustain the honor of her flag, in comfortable circumstances, pursuing the various arts of agriculture, manufactures, mechanics, and commerce, and were transferred to all the exposures and dangers of the camp and the garrison under mere nominal pay, and without a provision either of arms or clothing. How well their duties were performed let the battles of Queenston, of Bridgewater, of the Thames, of New Orleans, and other fields respond. At least three fourths of those who did not fall in battle have been summoned to another world in the regular course of nature, many from the operation of wounds and diseases entailed upon them by their patriotic services, leaving to their widows and children no other legacy than that of poverty and suffering.

Many of our surviving brethren are now experiencing the same miseries. These are the facts which our own eyes have witnessed, and are daily witnessing.

Our association has been organized, not merely to perpetuate the memory of those days, but to afford relief to the living, and decently to inter the dead.

This can only be partially accomplished where so few have the means; and although benevolent individuals have aided, still the cases of distress are numerous.

It must be kept in mind that no man now living who shared in these events can be short of three-score years, while many greatly exceed that age, and of course, if now in dependent circumstances, can hope for no beneficial change except through this act of national faith and public justice.

The undersigned cannot conceive it to be necessary to enlarge upon this subject. Several members of your honorable body can bear personal testimony, having participated in the services of those days, while others have learned them from their patriotic sires.

We most earnestly invoke your support of the bill, not merely as an act of charity to the necessitous, but as a reward to the faithful servants of the Republic, and as an incentive to future sacrifices for the public good.

We are, with great respect, sir, your obedient servants,

Committee of the Soldiers of 1812.

*Deceased.

This paper, it will be seen, was signed by a committee of eleven of the soldiers of the war of 1812, only three of whom now survive, to wit, Henry Raymond, Isaac Phye, and Henry Baker.

I will also read the following extract of a letter to me, written by an officer of the war of 1812, from the same city:

NEW YORK, March 14, 1866.

DEAR SIR: In the proceedings of Congress I perceive that you have introduced a bill granting pensions to soldiers of the war of 1812, which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Your honor has the heartfelt thanks of all the veterans I have conversed with, and I trust you will not let the matter rest without some definite action taken thereon. Could a law of that kind be passed it would relieve the pressing wants of many an old soldier who at this present time hardly knows where a meal of victuals is to come from, such is their abject poverty. There are some that necessity has compelled to become inmates of an almshouse, eating a pauper's food. Such is the sad condition of many of those old men who in their youthful days sacrificed everything for the benefit of their country in the hour of her peril. I would gladly confer with you at any time and in any manner to consummate this laudable object, and would beg most respectfully to suggest the propriety of forwarding a petition of the veterans of 1812 in this section of country.

I will also read the following small extract from the proceedings of a meeting of the old soldiers of that war held at Philadelphia, in my own State, in February last:

"We are grateful to learn from the public prints that a disposition is manifested at this late day by some of the Representatives in Congress to recognize in a substantial manner the services of the poor old soldiers of the second war of independence. We invite the attention of the association to this matter."

I will not trouble the House further, Mr. Speaker, by reading extracts from the numerous letters and proceedings received in relation to this matter. This seems to me to be sufficient to satisfy every member of this House of the stern necessity of immediate action in aid of the old veterans. It may be said, and has already been intimated, that the country is not in a condition to grant the relief asked for. This, I think, is a mistaken idea; we have lately passed through a terrible war, and the people bore the heavy drain of men and means with such alacrity as to astonish the world, and now, as peace and prosperity are restored, and the Government about being placed upon a firm and substantial basis, we are surely in a condition to do adequate justice to those old heroes.

It will not do to say the nation is too poor, when we have passed a law giving $25,000 to feed the poor of Washington city, many of whom were never in the Union Army, and some seven hundred thousand dollars to keep certain tribes of Indians from starvation, some of whom have even been in the rebel service; and beside, after the eloquent speech of the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] passed a bill appropriating $100,000 to enable this nation to be represented in the grand Exposition to take place in France in 1867. Of these appropriations I have nothing to say more than that, in my opinion, the claim of the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812 is more meritorious. It will not do, Mr. Speaker, for the Representatives of this great nation of over thirty million people, with such vast resources, to withhold the relief provided by this bill on the ground of want of means. The bill that passed this House by an almost unanimous vote for equalizing bounties, which will require some hundreds of millions, was just, and in the early part of the session I offered a resolution and also presented a bill looking to that end; and as to the ultimate payment of such bounties, it is a mere question of time, the recipients being comparatively young men, while those of the war of 1812 are far advanced in life, and according to the course of nature can be here but a short time, and if any provision is to be made for them it must be done quickly. It will not do to allow them to become altogether objects of public charity. The sum provided for in the bill is very small, scarcely enough to clothe and feed them in the most humble manner.

In the early part of this session a recess for a short time was frequently taken in order that our worthy Speaker might introduce to the members various generals who in the late rebellion had done good service for the preservation of the Union, which he did in his usual affable manner; and now, I beg leave as their Representative to introduce to this House the old veterans of the war of 1812, hungry, and with garments all tattered and torn, asking for the service they rendered their country a small sum in way of pension to enable them to procure food and raiment. Shall it be granted? They, like Lazarus of old, are willing to be fed on crumbs, and is this Congress not willing to grant it? Sir, while I have a voice on this floor I will stand up for the defenders of my country. No individual or nation ever lost anything by being charitable. Our officers of the Army and Navy deserve great praise, and many encomiums are cast upon them, but the privates who have to obey the command and face death are equally deserving of the gratitude of their country. Russia, England, and France, yea, all civilized nations of the world, have made provision for their old veterans, and no people are more able and willing than those of the United States to have these defenders cared for, and I am satisfied that the passage of this bill will meet the entire approbation of our constituents, (unless it is that the pension is too low.)

And now, Mr. Speaker, I move that this bill be recommitted to the committee with instructions to report the same with an affirmative recommendation, and will call for the yeas and nays. I can hardly think that any member will record his vote against allowing this pitance to an old indigent soldier; if there is he will have an opportunity of so recording his vote. I will add that this is no party measure; it is a platform on which all can safely stand.

Mr. HALE. I wish to inquire, either from the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MILLER,] who has so eloquently addressed the House upon this subject, or from any member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, what is the probable amount of annual expenditure involved in this bill. And before yielding the floor I take the opportunity to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he ought in substance to defy the members of this House to give any vote they may see fit to give on this or any other subject. I submit to him whether it is quite fair for him to say to the House, "We will let the country know who is for the old soldiers and who is against them; and I shall call for the yeas and nays." I suggest to him that if members entertain opinions which may clash with his it is very possible the yeas and nays may have no particular terror for them; and I trust he did not mean to be understood as intimating anything to that effect.

Mr. PERHAM. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the old soldiers of the war of 1812 that they have found in the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] so earnest a supporter and advocate on this floor. It cannot be expected in opposing a measure of this kind I shall be able to manifest that sort of enthusiasm as the gentleman has done.

Now, I would be glad could I bring myself to the belief that the country is in a condition for such an expenditure of the public money as this proposes. But, sir, the Committee on Invalid Pensions, after the examination they gave to the subject, came to the unanimous conclusion that we cannot do this thing now. I have nothing to say derogatory to the merits of the old soldiers of that war. They performed their duties faithfully and well, and a grateful people have done them honor from that time to the present. For fifty-two years this country with liberal hand, the Treasury of the country all the time being in easy circumstances, has been legislating for their benefit. We have granted pensions to every man who has in the least been injured in that service. We have granted pensions to the widows of all who have died of disease contracted, or wounds received, in the service. We have also given bounty land to every man who could prove he was in the service fourteen days. In this Congress, and in previous Congresses, we have been liberal in special legislation for these men.

Now, sir, the Committee on Invalid Pensions have been disposed to afford relief whenever they could find any good reason for so doing, and the votes of the House show they have always been ready to second them in this regard. It is true we pensioned the surviving soldiers of the revolutionary war about fifty-two years after the close of that war, and that now about the same time has elapsed since the close of the war of 1812. But fifty-two years after the close of the revolutionary war we were under very different circumstances from those which now surround us. We have now dependent upon us a vast number of wounded soldiers, and the widows and children of soldiers who have been killed during the rebellion, creating a heavy expense which we must meet.

In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] as to the amount of expenditure under this bill, I will say it is impossible to ascertain the number of men now living who were in the war of 1812. From the information of the Pension Bureau, and from the investigation the committee has given the subject, we have arrived at the conclusion that there are not less than one hundred and eleven thousand.

Mr. FINCK. I ask whether this bill proposes to give pensions to all of this number, or only to those who are necessitous. I would also inquire whether he has any data of the latter number.

Mr. PERHAM. I say from the best data we can procure there are living not less than one hundred and eleven thousand of these old soldiers. Calculating by the rule of three, taking the actual number of men in the revolutionary war, and the number living and pensioned fifty-two years after the close of the war, and applying it to the number in the war of 1812, now just fifty-two years after its close, there cannot be less than one hundred and eleven thousand two hundred and ninety-five men; and by the same calculation the number of widows would be forty-two thousand and eighty-one, making in all, widows and soldiers, about one hundred and fifty-three thousand.

Mr. MILLER. How many are in needy circumstances?

Mr. PERHAM. I am coming to that. It is of course impossible to ascertain how many would come under the provisions of this bill. Many of them are very aged. It is the practice of men when they get to that age to let the property they have pass into the hands of their children. Members can look around where they are acquainted and judge for themselves. We conclude after investigation the number would be about two thirds.

Mr. HALE. I ask the gentleman whether, from his observation of the effect of such a bill giving pensions to those in indigent circumstances, the proportionate number of those in indigent circumstances would not be rapidly increased.

Mr. PERHAM. I understand that an estimate was made at the Pension Bureau as to the probable number who would receive pensions under the act providing for pensions for revolutionary soldiers, and though I am not able to give the exact figures, I think it was more than two to one. Now, it is true that in this estimate we have not included sailors nor their widows. If we are going to pension soldiers and their widows we ought in justice also to pension sailors and their widows. If we do that we shall make out one hundred and fifty-three thousand entitled to pensions. If you place it at as low a figure as two thirds you have one hundred thousand in round numbers for pensions provided by this bill. A pension of eight dollars per month is ninety-six dollars a year, and with the incidental expenses it will amount to at least $100 a year. Multiply that by the whole number and you have $10,000,000 annually. I am positive that you cannot get along with less than $10,000,000 as long as the present number are living. And I will say that we go back fifteen months, so that we will have $15,000,000 of back pensions to pay. Hereafter you will have to pay annually $10,000,000. Now, it is very difficult to say how much this would amount to in the aggregate. We are paying the last of the revolutionary soldiers now, eighty-three years after the close of the war.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

SALE OF MARINE HOSPITALS, ETC.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to take up from the Speaker's table a Senate bill in relation to the sale of marine hospitals and revenue-cutters.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly proceeded to the consideration of Senate bill No. 381, to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the sale of marine hospitals and revenue-cutters," approved April 20, 1866.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. This bill is for the purpose of correcting an error in a former bill. A provision in that bill was stricken out by the committee of conference by mistake.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND GRANTS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. DONNELLY. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Public Lands Senate bill No. 221, relating to lands granted to the State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of railroads.

The bill was read. It provides that whenever it shall appear that the United States have sold or disposed of any lands granted to the Territory or State of Minnesota for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, after the passage of the act granting the same, and after the definite location of the line of road, and before the withdrawal of said lands from sale at the proper local land office, said State may by its agent select, in lieu of the lands so sold or disposed of, from any of the lands of the United States subject to sale, within twenty miles of the line of the proper road, a quantity of land equal to that so sold or disposed of; and the lands so selected shall be substituted for those so sold or disposed of by the United States, and may be disposed of by said State in all respects as if said substituted lands had been parcel of the original grant to the State.

It further provides that the time named in the act granting lands to the Territory of Minnesota to aid in the construction of a certain railroad "from Saint Paul and from Saint Anthony, by the way of Minneapolis, to a convenient point of junction west of the Mississippi river, to the southern boundary of the Territory," approved March 3, 1857, for the construction and completion of said road, is hereby extended for seven years from the passage of this act.

It further provides that all the lands heretofore granted to the Territory and State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of railroads, shall be certified to said State by the Secretary of the Interior, from time to time, whenever any of said roads shall be definitely located, and shall be disposed of by said State in the manner and upon the conditions provided in the particular act granting the same; provided that when the original quantity granted to aid in the construction of any road has been increased, the quantity authorized to be sold from time to time shall be increased correspondingly; and provided further, that on the completion of any ten miles of road the State may sell one half the quantity of lands which said State is authorized to dispose of on the completion of twenty miles.

It further provides that the lands granted specifically, lying in place, on any division of ten miles of road shall not be disposed of until the road shall be completed through and continuous with the same.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I shall object to that bill. It changes everything in regard to the granting of public lands for such purposes.

Mr. DONNELLY. The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Lands will, I have no doubt, cover the objections of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The bill ought to be printed. It makes an entire change in the system.

Mr. DONNELLY. The bill is already printed. It makes no material change in the law; it is simply a matter of detail.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to it at any rate.

REORGANIZATION OF THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, Senate bill No. 103, to reorganize the judiciary of the United States, with sundry amendments, and moved that the bill and pending amendments be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VIOLATIONS OF THE TEST OATH.

Mr. DRIGGS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of, and if they deem proper to report a bill, directing the judges and attorneys of the district courts of the United States in the States lately in rebellion to specially charge grand juries to inquire into the fact whether there have been any violations of the "test oath" by parties appointed to and entering upon the duties of office who have been disqualified from holding office on account of participation in the late rebellion, contrary to the true intent and meaning of the act of Congress prescribing said oath.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 225) for the relief of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 100) for the restoration of Lieutenant Commander Richard L. Law, United States Navy, to the active list from the reserved list.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. COOPER, his Private Secretary.

EUROPEAN TROOPS IN MEXICO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In further answer to recent resolutions of the Senate and House of Representatives, requesting information in regard to the employment of European troops in Mexico, I transmit to Congress a copy of a dispatch of the 4th of this month, addressed to the Secretary of State by the minister of the United States at Paris.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, June 22, 1866.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit to Congress a report of the Secretary of State, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution of the 18th instant respecting a submission to the Legislatures of the States of an additional article to the Constitution of the United States. It will be seen from this report that the Secretary of State had, on the 16th instant, transmitted to the Governors of the several States certified copies of the joint resolution passed on the 13th instant proposing an amendment to the Constitution.

Even in ordinary times any question of amending the Constitution must be justly regarded as of paramount importance. This importance is at the present time enhanced by the fact that the joint resolution was not submitted by the two Houses for the approval of the President, and that of the thirty-six States which constitute the Union eleven are excluded from representation in either House of Congress, although, with the single exception of Texas, they have been entirely restored to all their functions as States in conformity with the organic law of the land, and have appeared at the national capital by Senators and Representatives, who have applied for and have been refused admission to the vacant seats. Nor have the sovereign people of the nation been afforded an opportunity of expressing their views upon the important questions which the amendment involves. Grave doubts, therefore, may naturally and justly arise as to whether the action of Congress is in harmony with the sentiments of the people, and whether State Legislatures, elected without reference to such an issue, should be called upon by Congress to decide respecting the ratification of the proposed amendment.

Waiving the question as to the constitutional validity of the proceedings of Congress upon the joint resolution proposing the amendment, or as to the merits of the article which it submits through the executive department to the Legislatures of the States, I deem it proper to observe that the steps taken by the Secretary of State, as detailed in the accompanying report, are to be considered as purely ministerial, and in no sense whatever committing the Executive to an approval or a recommendation of the amendment to the State Legislatures or to the people. On the contrary, a proper appreciation of the letter and spirit of the Constitution, as well as of the interests of national order, harmony, and union, and a due deference for an enlightened public judgment, may at this time well suggest a doubt whether any amendment to the Constitution ought to be proposed by Congress and pressed upon the Legislatures of the several States for final decision until after the admission of such loyal Senators and Representatives of the now unrepresented States as have been, or as may hereafter be, chosen in conformity with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 22, 1866.

To the President:

The Secretary of State, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress of the 18th instant, in the following words—"that the President of the United States be requested to transmit forthwith to the Executives of the several States of the United States, copies of the article of amendment proposed by Congress to the State Legislatures, to amend the Constitution of the United States, passed June 13, 1865, respecting citizenship, the basis of representation, disqualification for office, and validity of the public debt of the United States, &c., to the end that the said States may proceed to act upon the said article of amendment, and that he request the Executive of each State that may ratify said amendment to transmit to the Secretary of State a certified copy of such ratification"—has the honor to submit the following report, namely, that on the 16th instant, Hon. AMASA COBB, of the Committee of the House of Representatives on Enrolled Bills, brought to this Department and deposited therein, an enrolled resolution of the two Houses of Congress, which was thereupon received by the Secretary of State and deposited among the rolls of the Department, a copy of which is herewith annexed.

Thereupon the Secretary of State, on the 16th instant, in conformity with the proceeding which was adopted by him in 1865, in regard to the then proposed and afterward adopted congressional amendment of the Constitution of the United States, concerning the prohibition of slavery, transmitted certified copies of the annexed resolution to the Governors of the several States together with a certificate and circular letter. A copy of both of these communications is herewith annexed.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

WASHINGTON, June 20, 1866.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the message be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. FINCK. I desire to move to print fifty thousand extra copies.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order after the question is taken on the motion to simply print and refer.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I rise to a question of order, whether that paper should not go to the joint committee on reconstruction. It has reference to the representation from the southern States, and if the purpose is to bury it that is the best place to bury it.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is made too late.

Mr. BANKS. It strikes me that this is in the nature of a reply to the work of the committee on reconstruction, and therefore—

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Debate is not in order.

The question being put on the motion to print and refer, there were—ayes fifty.

Before the result was announced, Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky, inquired if it was in order to have a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. It is too late now. If the gentleman rose before a division had commenced the Chair would entertain the motion.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I did not.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. If the motion does not prevail, will the motion to print fifty thousand be in order?

The SPEAKER. A motion to print an extra number of copies would go to the Committee on Printing under the law.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to make a suggestion.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I hope the motion to print will be separated from the motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I submitted the motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary because I thought at the moment that that was the proper committee. No member of the joint committee on reconstruction seemed to consider that it should go to that committee until the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] suggested it. I now understand that some of the members of that committee think it should be referred to them, and I am inclined to think, upon reflection, that it is the proper committee to which to refer it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that it is the proper committee, and had the point of order been raised in time, the Chair would have so ruled.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to modify my motion, and move that the message and accompanying documents, if any, be printed and referred to the joint committee on reconstruction.

No objection was made, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FINCK moved that fifty thousand extra copies of the message and documents be printed for the use of members.

The motion went to the Committee on Printing under the law.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GARFIELD asked and obtained leave of absence for himself for one week from today.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KASSON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the special order, being the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 387, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1867.

By unanimous consent the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by clauses for amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend the clause under the head of "Chippewas, Pillager, and Lake Winnebagoish bands," which now reads "for pay of an engineer to grist and saw mill at Leech Lake, $600," by inserting after the words "Leech Lake," the words "per third article of treaty of 22d of February, 1855."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I also move to amend the clause in relation to the Delawares, which now reads, "for interest on $46,800 at five per cent., being the value of thirty-six sections of land set apart by treaty of 1829 for education, $2,304," by inserting after the word "education" the words "per Senate resolution of January 19, 1838, and fifth article of treaty of May 6, 1856."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I also move to amend the clause in relation to the Iowas, which now reads, "for interest in lieu of investment on $57,500, balance of $157,500, to the 1st of July, 1866, at five per cent. per annum, for education or other beneficial purposes, under the direction of the President, $2,875," by inserting after the word "President" the words "per second article treaty October 19, 1838, and ninth article treaty May 17, 1854."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I also move to amend the clause under head of "Kansas," which now reads, "for interest in lieu of investment on $200,000 at five per cent. per annum, $10,000," by inserting after "per annum" "per second article treaty January 14, 1846."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I also move to amend the first clause under the head of "Kickapoos," which now reads, "for fourteenth installment of interest, at five per cent. on $100,000 for educational and other beneficial purposes, $5,000," by inserting after the word "purposes" the words "per second article treaty May 18, 1854."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I also move to amend the second clause under the head of "Menomonees," which now reads, "for first of fifteen installments of annuity upon $242,686 for cession of lands, $16,179,063," by inserting after the word "lands" the words "per third article treaty May 12, 1854, and Senate amendments thereto;" and also by striking out the words "and two eighths."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask unanimous consent of the committee to go back to the clauses under the head of "Chippewas of Lake Superior."

No objection was made.

Mr. WINDOM. I move the following as additional clauses to come in under the head of "Chippewas of Lake Superior:"

For this amount, to pay the salary and incidental expenses of a physician for the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $1,000.

For this amount, to purchase medicines for the sick of said Indians for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $500.

This amendment was prepared by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and transmitted to me with the request that I would offer it as an amendment to this bill. I have here a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, and one from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, stating that there is no fund for the payment of a physician for these Indians, and the funds of these Indians are not sufficient for that purpose.

Mr. KASSON. Let the letters be read. The Committee on Appropriations have no information on the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16, 1866.

SIR: I have the honor to request the favorable consideration of your committee upon the inclosed estimate of appropriation for the payment of the salary and incidental expenses of a physician for the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior, and the purchase of medicines for the sick of said Indians, amounting to $1,500 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867. For your information I transmit herewith copy of a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon the subject.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES HARLAN, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM WINDOM, Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 19, 1866.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter from L. B. Webb, Esq., agent for the Chippewas of Lake Superior, setting forth that there are no funds applicable to the payment of a physician for these Indians, that their annuities are so limited that they cannot pay one themselves, that there is a necessity for a physician among them, there being none nearer than eighty miles from their reservation, and asking that an application be made to Congress for an appropriation to pay a physician, who shall reside with or near the Indians.

Agent Webb correctly sets forth the facts of the case, so far as they are within the knowledge of this office, and I have no doubt there is the necessity he states for a physician for those Indians.

The amount of $1,500 per annum is specified by Agent Webb for payment of a physician, who shall furnish medicines for the Indians at his own expense. This estimate I consider reasonable.

I have therefore prepared an estimate for an appropriation for the object designated, which I have the honor to submit herewith. If you concur with the views of this office as to the propriety and necessity of such an appropriation, I would respectfully suggest that the matter be laid before the proper committees of Congress at its present session.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. N. COOLEY, Commissioner.

Hon. JAMES HARLAN, Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KASSON. I have no knowledge of the facts, except as they are stated in the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] and in the letters which have been read. I shall be obliged, therefore, to submit the question to the action of the committee, only remarking that I do not find that the appropriations for the benefit of this tribe are so small as would seem to be indicated by one of the letters. The appropriations in this bill for these Indians, for various purposes amount to a great many thousand dollars. Among the appropriations I find the following:

Fort-twelfth of twenty installments in coin, per fourth article treaty 30th September, 1854, $5,000.

The application of this sum is not specified, and I would suggest that a portion might be expended for the purchase of necessary medicines. I would remark, however, that according to the experience hitherto in the West, the fewer the medicines that find their way among these tribes, the better will be their health. If it be deemed necessary to have a physician for these Indians, I certainly am not disposed to object.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel at liberty to vote for this amendment, and I hope that the committee will not agree to it. It seems to me somewhat remarkable that after the numerous appropriations embraced in the bill, amounting to thousands of dollars, we should now be asked to send among these Indians, at an expense of $1,500, some person (who could probably now be named) as a physician to prescribe for the bodily ills of the Indians. I believe that this is only one method among ten thousand of providing for some favorites who are hanging around this Indian Bureau.

Mr. WINDOM. I am not aware of any facts in addition to those I have stated. If there be any favorites hanging around, expecting to get places, I do not know anything about that. I have offered this amendment simply because such a provision has been recommended by the chief of the Indian Office and the head of the Interior Department. Whenever there is offered here any proposition directed against the Indians, the sympathies of certain gentlemen are always aroused; but whenever it is proposed to do anything for the benefit of the Indians the proposition is at once suspected as involving some improper scheme. I believe that the appropriation which I have moved is an honest appropriation and ought to be made. I know nothing about it, however, except what I have stated.

Mr. SPALDING. The prejudice is not against the Indians, but against some of our own race, who seek to defraud the Indians as well as the Government. That is what arouses our suspicions; and the trouble is that the Indian accounts have been full of instances of such frauds, as has been found by investigation of those accounts in the committee-room.

Mr. KASSON. I think that under the circumstances it is better to let the bill go to the Senate without this amendment. The matter can be presented to the Committee on Indian Affairs of that body, with proper statements regarding the matter.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend by inserting at the end of line four hundred and fifty-three the words "per fourth article treaty September 24, 1857;" so that the paragraph will read as follows:

For grist and saw mill, and keeping the same in repairs, per fourth article treaty September 24, 1857, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend by striking out, in lines four hundred and ninety-nine and five hundred, the words "to supply a deficiency in this appropriation for the current fiscal year" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "for iron and steel;" so that the paragraph will read:

For permanent provision for three blacksmiths and assistants, and permanent provision for iron and steel for shops, per third article treaty 16th October, 1826, second article treaty 20th September, 1828, and second article treaty 29th July, 1829, $2,160; and for iron and steel, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend by striking out, in line six hundred and twenty-three, "19th," and inserting in lieu thereof "29th;" and by striking out, in line six hundred and twenty-four, the word "three" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "four;" so that the paragraph will read:

Umpqua and Calapoosias of Umpqua Valley, Oregon:

For second of five installments, of the third series, of annuity for beneficial objects, to be expended as directed by the President, per third article treaty 29th September, 1854, $1,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBB. I move to amend by inserting after line six hundred and forty-one the following:

Winnebago and Pottawatomie Indians of Wisconsin:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to take charge of certain stray bands of Winnebago and Pottawatomie Indians in the State of Wisconsin, $10,000.

This is a very necessary appropriation. I am authorized to say it was only omitted from the estimates upon which this bill was framed because of a clerical error. I will say, from my own personal knowledge, the appropriation is absolutely necessary.

Mr. SPALDING. Has the gentleman any letter from the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. COBB. There is such a letter in my possession, but I have it not here. It states the fact I have just given to the House. These Indians are located, not in my district, but in the district of my colleague, [Mr. McINDOE.] I have, therefore, no particular personal interest in the matter. My colleague left the paper with others in my possession. I have been absent for several days and did not expect this bill to come up to-day.

Mr. SPALDING. I do not doubt the gentleman's word. I only object to this mode of doing business. Here is an increase of $10,000 on the gentleman's saying that sum was left out of the estimates by a clerical mistake.

Mr. KASSON. I will say, in reference to this, that at the end of the bill my friend will find the following:

For salary of a special agent to take charge of the Winnebago and Pottawatomie Indians now in the State of Wisconsin, $1,500.

This whole subject was presented to the Committee on Appropriations, including the item of $10,000 he asks for. The committee was not satisfied of the necessity of the appropriation, and it refused to grant it. I am also instructed to move to strike out the clause for a special agent, as the Indian Bureau declares they do not want this special agent without the other appropriation, that committee declining to give it on the information furnished. That is the state of affairs as connected with this action of the committee.

Mr. COBB. I ask in what manner this subject was before the committee.

Mr. KASSON. Through the estimates. Such is my recollection.

Mr. COBB. I think there must be some mistake about this matter. I am at a great loss to see how the gentlemen who compose that committee could have come to the conclusion this should be stricken out of the estimates of the Department. The greater portion of these roving bands of Indians, to which this recommendation alludes, were originally colonized in the State of Wisconsin. They were brought there about twenty-four or twenty-five years ago. They were, some ten or fifteen years ago, induced to accept a reservation purchased in what I think is now the State of Kansas or Territory of Nebraska, and were removed to that reservation. They almost immediately returned, a large portion of them, to the State of Wisconsin. I think they have been removed half a dozen times by the authority of the Government. I have seen a person called a special agent of the Government removing them; but no sooner does he get them across the river and settled upon their reservation than they wander back again and colonize themselves on the Wisconsin river in the central part of the State. Of course, as soon as winter sets in they are left destitute, and commit depredations upon the white people. Quite a number of murders and other crimes have been committed by them.

I say unless the Government takes care of them in some way, unless some authorized agent takes charge of them or removes them, they will become an intolerable nuisance. I know that with the utmost exertion of my colleague, [Mr. McINDOE,] in whose district these Indians are, and who has a great influence with them, I say it has been with the greatest difficulty, with every personal exertion on his part, that he has prevented the white inhabitants turning out and annihilating these Indians all over the State. It has only been prevented by a pledge given that the Government would take care of these Indians, and prevent the necessity of their living by pillage, as they have done in the winter time. It is a matter of absolute necessity that something should be done. These bands of roving Indians are now without any means of support. The Government has made appropriations like this for years past, and these Indians have lived upon them up to this time. Therefore, unless the Government removes them and keeps them away, it becomes an absolute necessity that the Government should take care of them.

Mr. KASSON. I have not been able to hear the whole of the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. COBB,] but I would remind him that at the last session of Congress we appropriated $10,000 for this same purpose. I would like him to state how that appropriation was expended, if it proved insufficient, or why it is that this additional demand is made.

Mr. COBB. I can only state what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs told me in an informal conversation, and that was, that one reason why this item was not embraced in the estimates was that this special agent had not when the estimates were prepared made his report on the expenditure of the $10,000 appropriated last year.

Mr. KASSON. My impression is that the allowance of money for such a purpose will not really accomplish the object designed. These Indians are unwilling to go. They have returned, as my friend states, to their old ground. There is but one way to accomplish their removal, and that is through the military action of the Government. This idea of appropriating $10,000 year after year for this purpose is a waste of so much money. It will not enable the Government to remove the Indians. The appropriations heretofore made have been unavailing, and I believe that it would be better to rely upon the military arm of the Government.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to say a word upon this subject, in addition to what has been said by my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. COBB,] I have the honor to represent a district adjoining that of his colleague, [Mr. McINDOE,] and I know something of the state of things which has existed in that dis-strict in relation to these Indians. The Indians of this tribe have been in the habit of coming back to their own camping-grounds, and have been a great nuisance to the people all through the section of country to which my friend has referred. They have committed innumerable outrages, and I think the cheapest way of getting rid of them is to make an appropriation and employ a superintendent or agent to remove them. It would cost more to remove them by military power, even if it could be done, than the amount now asked for. The committee can well understand what a nuisance it is to the people of that section of country to have these Indians roving about, thieving, and robbing, and sometimes even murdering. I think, sir, that this will be the cheapest way to get rid of them. But I hope my friend will reduce the appropriation from $10,000 to $5,000. I think $5,000 will be enough for the purpose.

Mr. KASSON. I confess I do not see how an appropriation of $10,000 or $5,000 is going to get the Indians out of that country and keep them out of it, even though the fund be administered by a very good agent.

Mr. COBB. In reply to the gentleman I will say that I have no idea the money would be sufficient for the purpose of removing these Indians, for I have no doubt but it would cost $100,000 to remove them. This appropriation is to take care of them where they are.

Mr. KASSON. I suggest to my friend from Wisconsin, without wishing to prejudice his proposition at all, that since this bill has been printed, it has been submitted to the Indian department, and they have made no communication upon this subject to the Committee on Appropriations. I trust he will let the bill go to the Senate, and let the committee there examine the whole subject. I know of no disposition on the part of any member of the Committee on Appropriations of this House to prevent the accomplishment of this object in any proper way; but I submit to him that we are not now prepared to pass decisively upon it.

Mr. COBB. If it were my own motion, I would agree with the gentleman's suggestion, but I have made the motion in behalf of my colleague [Mr. McINDOE] who is absent, and I do not feel at liberty to withdraw it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to amend the amendment by striking out $10,000, and inserting in lieu thereof $5,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. At the end of line six hundred and ninety-seven I move to insert the words "per fifth article treaty January 31, 1855;" so that it will read:

Makah Tribe:

For first of four installments of $630,000, (being the fourth series,) under the direction of the President, per fifth article treaty January 31, 1855, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend, in line seven hundred and seventy-nine, by inserting after the word "President" the words "per fourth article treaty 11th July, 1855," so that it will read:

Nez Percé Indians:

For second of five installments, of second series, for beneficial objects, at discretion of the President, per fourth article treaty July 11, 1855, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. There are a number of these amendments which I am instructed to offer, merely inserting the dates of treaties. They are, in fact, mere verbal corrections of the bill, and it will save a great deal of time if I hand a list of them to the Clerk and let him make the corrections. I hope there will be no objection to that course being pursued.

No objection was made, and the bill was corrected accordingly.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I find the following clause in this bill:

For insurance and transportation of annuity goods and provisions to the Flathead Indians for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, $11,920 41.

Now, I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] if it is proposed to make appropriations for insuring Indian goods. I know that last year there were some seventy or eighty thousand dollars' worth of Indian goods burned at St. Louis, upon which there was no insurance.

Mr. KASSON. This provision has been heretofore placed in Indian appropriation bills. It is a simple question as to whether the Government shall insure its own goods or get them insured.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I know that Indian goods have been destroyed for the past two or three years. I know that some seventy or eighty thousand dollars' worth of Indian goods were destroyed at St. Louis last year; and I know they were not insured. If money is appropriated for this purpose, I want to know why it is not so applied.

Mr. KASSON. The Committee on Appropriations, as the gentleman from Dakota [Mr. BURLEIGH] well knows, is not in charge of the expenditures of the Indian department. It has been thought proper to place this item in the Indian appropriation bill, leaving it to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to insure such goods as he may deem it proper to insure. The goods that are sent across the plains in wagons are not generally insured, I believe. Those that go up the Missouri river, I think, are probably insured; if not, perhaps they ought to be. But that is a matter of discretion on the part of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I know that those goods were destroyed; and I know that no insurance was effected upon them; and I ask, what is the use of appropriating this money for the purpose of insuring these Indians' goods when it is not used for that purpose, but most probably divided up among the officers of the Indian Bureau? I move to strike out this clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee having passed that point in the consideration of this bill, the motion of the gentleman from Dakota [Mr. BURLEIGH] can be entertained only by unanimous consent.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to going back for any such purpose.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend the clause under the head of "Indian service in Colorado Territory," which now reads, "for payment of interest on $68,000 abstracted bonds, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, $4,080," by inserting after "1866" the words "of the Cherokee national fund."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I move to strike out the clause which reads as follows:

For subsistence, clothing, and general incidental expenses of the Sisseton, Wahpaton, Medawakanton, and Wahpakoota bands of Sioux or Dakota Indians, at their new homes, $100,000.

My reason for that motion is this: these Indians were removed from Minnesota to Dakota Territory in 1863, in pursuance of an act of Congress. Within the last few months these Indians have been removed from their former location in the Territory down into our settlement. I believe that this whole thing has been done in violation of law, and not in pursuance of the act of Congress which gave the authority for their removal from the State of Minnesota and their location in the Territory of Dakota. Now, it appears to me to be high time for Congress to understand the action of our Indian agents before they appropriate any more money for this purpose. These Indians have been located in our midst, and we have been told by the officers having this matter in charge that they have been located there in pursuance of the authority given by the act of Congress of 1863. Now, I am perfectly satisfied, and so are others better qualified to judge of these matters, that the power conferred by that act was exhausted by the first removal and location of these Indians. I would like to have the sense of the House upon that question, and therefore I move to strike out this clause.

The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

Indian service in Dakota Territory:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Dakota Territory, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I do not know that that appropriation is needed for Dakota Territory. [Laughter.] I therefore move to strike it out.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That motion comes from the Committee on Indian Affairs, I believe. [Laughter.] I hope it will be agreed to.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend line twelve hundred and forty-three by inserting after the word "superintendency" the words "for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move to strike out the clause which reads as follows:

For salary of a special agent to take charge of Winnebago and Pottawatomie Indians now in the State of Wisconsin, $1,500.

Mr. COBB. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment will not prevail. We have already appropriated $5,000 for the benefit of these Indians. It is necessary that this agent should be continued in order that this appropriation shall be of any use.

Mr. KASSON. There are agents now connected with the department who can take charge of the administration of this fund. I understand that there is an excellent agent who has attended to this business heretofore and can do so again. It certainly is not proper to create a permanent agency with a salary of $1,500 per annum for the disbursement of a single fund of $5,000.

Mr. COBB. I beg leave to inform the gentleman from Iowa that the very competent agent as well as honest man to whom he refers has been removed from office; and whether as good a one has been appointed in his place remains to be seen; I very much doubt it. But that agent, however competent, however honest, never did perform these duties. All the appropriations for this purpose have been expended through the agency of Mr. Lemereaux, a special agent appointed some two years ago. I have no doubt that there are a great many agents belonging to the Indian department, and I do not doubt that there is a great deal of material out of which new agents may be made if there be not already a sufficient number. But this gentleman resides in the immediate locality; he has taken care of these Indians for the last two years, expending all the appropriations that have been made for them. I think it would be poor economy at this time to abolish this office. I trust that the gentleman will not press his amendment.

Mr. KASSON. This is not a matter of very great consequence, and I certainly am not disposed to make a strong point upon a small matter. But it certainly appears to me improper to appoint an agent at an annual salary of $1,500 to expend an appropriation of $5,000. He would probably be able to disburse the money in thirty days.

Mr. COBB. If the expenses of disbursing this appropriation of $5,000 are to be deducted from the appropriation itself the amount remaining will be sufficient to accomplish the object contemplated.

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman says that there is now no agent connected with the department who can properly disburse this sum of $5,000 and take charge of these Indians, I certainly will not insist on my amendment.

Mr. COBB. I certainly do say so.

Mr. KASSON. Then I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer as new sections, to come in at the end of the bill, the paragraphs which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 1. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 31st day of December, 1863, the Secretary of War shall exercise the supervisory and appellate powers, and possess the jurisdiction now exercised and possessed by the Secretary of the Interior in relation to all the acts of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and shall sign all requisitions for the advance or payment of money out of the Treasury on estimates or accounts, subject to the same adjustment or control now exercised on similar estimates or accounts by the Auditors and Comptrollers of the Treasury, or either of them.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That—

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order that this amendment is out of order, for the reason that it is not to carry out any treaty stipulation or any provision of existing law. Hence it is not in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. KASSON. If I understand the objection, it does not apply, as the amendment is germane to the objects of the bill, being designed to direct the manner in which the appropriations shall hereafter be disbursed. I submit, therefore, that the point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the amendment is not in order, as it changes existing law.

Mr. KASSON. Let the whole amendment be read before the Chair gives his decision.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the amendment, as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War shall be authorized, whenever in his opinion it shall promote the economy and efficiency of the Indian service, to establish convenient departments and districts for the proper administration of the duties now imposed by law on the superintendents of Indian affairs and upon agents and sub-agents, and to substitute for such superintendents and agents officers of the Army of the United States, who shall be designated for that purpose, and who shall then become charged with all the duties now imposed by law upon the superintendents and agents thus superseded, and without additional compensation therefor. Officers of the Army so designated, shall not be required to give the bonds now required of civil appointees, but shall be responsible for any neglect or maladministration, according to the Rules and Articles of War.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all contracts for transportation connected with the Indian service shall hereafter be made in the same manner and at the same time provided for transportation for the use of the Army.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War shall be authorized to withhold all special licenses from traders, and, under regulations to be by him prescribed, to provide the times and places at which all traders complying therewith may present themselves for bargain, barter, and exchange with the several Indian tribes, according to the laws of the United States regulating the same.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read for the information of the committee the rule on which the decision of the Chair is based.

The Clerk read as follows:

"No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government."

The CHAIRMAN. It has been decided that under this rule it is not in order to propose an amendment to a general appropriation bill which changes an existing law.

Mr. KASSON. I believe the Chair is right. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 337, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1867, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. KASSON. I move that the vote be taken on all the amendments of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, reserving for a separate vote the amendment adopted on motion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. HUBBARD.]

There was no objection, and the amendments were concurred in.

The question then recurred on striking out the following words:

Indian service in Dakota Territory:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Dakota Territory, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, and to assist them to locate in permanent abodes and sustain themselves by the pursuits of civilized life, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I do not insist on that amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. SMITH, one of its Clerks, notifying the House that that body had passed a bill (S. No. 369) to establish certain post roads, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

KOONTZ VERSUS COFFROTH.

Mr. DAWES presented papers in the case of Koontz vs. Coffroth; which were referred to the Committee of Elections.

REVISION OF UNITED STATES STATUTES.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back Senate bill No. 59, to provide for the revision and consolidation of the statutes of the United States, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint three persons, learned in the law, as commissioners, to revise, simplify, arrange, and consolidate all statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, which shall be in force at the time such commissioners may make the final report of their doings.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That, in performing this duty, the commissioners shall bring together all statutes and parts of statutes which, from similarity of subject, ought to be brought together, omitting redundant or obsolete enactments, and making such alterations as may be necessary to reconcile the contradictions, supply the omissions, and amend the imperfections of the original text; and they shall arrange the same under titles, chapters, and sections, or other suitable divisions and subdivisions, with head-notes briefly expressive of the matter contained in such divisions; also with side-notes, so drawn as to point to the contents of the text, and with references to the original text from which each section is compiled, and to the decisions of the Federal courts, explaining or expounding the same, and also to such decisions of the State courts as they may deem expedient; and they shall provide by a temporary index, or other expedient means, for an easy reference to every portion of their report.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That when the commissioners have completed the revision and consolidation of the statutes, as aforesaid, they shall cause a copy of the same, in print, to be submitted to Congress, that the statutes so revised and consolidated may be re-enacted, if Congress shall so determine; and at the same time they shall also suggest to Congress such contradictions, omissions, and imperfections as may appear in the original text, with the mode in which they have reconciled, supplied, and amended the same; and they may also designate such statutes or parts of statutes as, in their judgment, ought to be repealed, with their reasons for such repeal.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the commissioners shall be authorized to cause their work to be printed in parts, so fast as it may be ready for the press, and to distribute copies of the same to members of Congress, and to such other persons, in limited numbers, as they may see fit, for the purpose of obtaining their suggestions; and they shall, from time to time, report to Congress their progress and doings.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the statutes so revised and consolidated shall be reported to Congress as soon as practicable, and the whole work closed without unnecessary delay.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the commissioners shall each receive as compensation for his services at the rate of $5,000 a year for three years, with the reasonable expenses of clerical service and other incidental matters, not to exceed $2,000 annually for such expenses.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence for Mr. KETCHAM and Mr. J. L. THOMAS.

ELLEN SANDERSON.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I ask unanimous consent to report, from the Committee on Military Affairs, House bill No. 275, for the relief of Ellen Sanderson.

The bill was read. It authorizes the payment of $10,000 to Ellen Sanderson, widow of Colonel John P. Sanderson, provost marshal general of Missouri, for services in detecting and exposing an organized conspiracy in the loyal States against the Government of the United States.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That report is not very satisfactory.

Mr. BOUTWELL, and Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, objected to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I am sorry there is any objection raised.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will withdraw my objection for the purpose of hearing a statement of the facts, reserving the right to renew it.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I can state the case in a few words. I suppose every member is aware of the fact that this man was provost marshal in General Rosecrans's district. He spent some three months of the latter part of his life in detecting and exposing a conspiracy gotten up in the Northwest to overthrow the Government, in which Bowles and Horsey were implicated and convicted. Everybody is familiar with it. There was but one such conspiracy against the Government that I know of, except the great rebellion. In detecting and exposing this conspiracy, Colonel Sanderson devoted the last three months of his life, and in fact died in his efforts just before the work was completed.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. If there is to be any report made in this case I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I have only to say that he gave up his life in the discovery of this conspiracy, and I know of no more important work done during the rebellion than that which he did, nothing more beneficial to the country. I think if there is a just claim against the Government that has been presented during this session it is this one on behalf of his widow.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I would inquire if Colonel Sanderson was not an officer of the Army, drawing his pay like other officers.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. Yes, sir.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Did he discharge any other duty than what was incumbent upon him as an officer of the Government?

Mr. ROUSSEAU. Perhaps he discharged nothing but what he ought to have done, but his services were very extraordinary, such as were never rendered before, I believe, in the history of this country by anybody—extraordinary not only in character as regards labor and difficulty, but in their results. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER.]

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I ask the indulgence of the House to make a brief statement. The matter of the services of Colonel Sanderson came to my personal knowledge especially and peculiarly on account of the fact that his widow was a resident of my district. The general character of those services is known to the entire country. Their inestimable value has been fully recognized and appreciated by the country. Every loyal citizen who has read the report of Judge Holt, which is founded mainly upon that singularly exhaustive and laborious report of Colonel Sanderson, knows the national value and character of those services.

Now, the statement that I desire to make of what has especially come to my own knowledge is this, that the services, in their nature, were: in the first place, of a kind that did not in the main appertain to the duties of the office that he held. Although they were akin to those duties, yet the greatest part of them were not such as came within the official purview of his office. His services were of a character that could not be delegated to others, being strictly secret and confidential; and the slightest whisper in regard to them to another would have been utterly fatal to the cause of the Government. Hence they had to be discharged by this singularly faithful officer or not discharged at all. While he was alive and in the discharge of these duties he was admonished again and again that he was discharging them at the hazard of his life. His reply was, "My life shall be sacrificed if the interests of my Government demand it. These duties cannot be delegated, they must be gone forward with." And he went forward with them and let me say here in the face of the House, that his services were eminently valuable in saving the Government. They were of national importance. They resulted in the exposure of a wide-spread and universal conspiracy. He left a widow and children in indigent circumstances; and now we ask that this widow and children of one who deliberately laid down his life that the Government might live shall have the small allowance proposed by this measure. I do hope the House will permit the bill to pass.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio when this officer laid down his life for the Government, and in what manner he did it. He died a natural death, did he not?

Mr. SHELLABARGER. It was the hard work he performed in his infirm state of health that killed him. The amount of work he did can be shown by the manuscript he produced, which is, I believe, in the hands of the Military Committee of this House. It includes several thousand pages of report.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I object to the consideration of the bill.

HOMESTEAD SELECTION.

Mr. DONNELLY, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution to enable discharged soldiers to change the location of homestead selections in certain cases; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

And then, on motion of Mr. SPALDING, (at ten minutes past four o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. BANKS: The memorial of General M. C. Meigs, and several hundred residents and citizens of Washington, praying that Congress will appropriate suitable grounds, within a convenient distance of the city, for a public park.

Also, the memorial of General O. O. Howard, and many others, citizens and residents of Washington, praying that Congress will set apart suitable grounds for a public park of not less than one thousand acres, within a convenient distance of the city.

By Mr. GRISWOLD: Remonstrances of a large number of citizens of northern New York against making Rouse's Point bridge a post road.

By Mr. HALE: Twelve petitions of citizens of Clinton and Essex counties, New York, praying the repeal of an act to establish a post route from West Alburg, Vermont, to Champlain, New York, and for other purposes, approved May 21, 1866.

By Mr. HOTCHKISS: The petition of citizens of Broome county, New York, for the relief of State banks.

By Mr. PERHAM: The petition of Emerance Berube, for pension to her minor children.

By Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts: The remonstrance of the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company against granting permission to the Kansas branch of the Union Pacific railroad to refile their map, &c.

By Mr. WOODBRIDGE: The petition of H. H. Lovy-eridge, and 30 others, citizens of Meadville, Pennsylvania, for the relief of Edwin L. Drake; also of John Miller, president of Cherry Run and Chenango Oil Company, and others, for the same purpose.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 23, 1866.

Prayer by Rev. Dr. McCosh, of Queen's College, Belfast, Ireland.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Lieutenant Colonel Floyd Jones, of the nineteenth infantry, and other officers of the Army, praying for an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of Peter V. King & Co., and other importers and dealers in coffee, tea, sugar, and other foreign merchandise, praying that the tax on sales made by commercial brokers may be repealed; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HARRIS presented four petitions of citizens of New York, praying for the repeal or modification of the law imposing a tax of ten per cent. on the circulation of State banks after the 1st of July next; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of the North American Kessel Committee, praying Congress to make a donation to assist in erecting a national monument at the seat of Government to the memory of Joseph Kessel, the author of the invention and of the first application of the screw in steam navigation; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COWAN, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 591) for the relief of Thomas D. Burrall, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Hayward A. Harvey, praying for a further extension of the patents granted to the late Thomas W. Harvey, for the manufacture of wood screws, reported a bill (S. No. 388) for the relief of Hayward A. Harvey; which was read and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Stephen K. Parkhurst, praying for an extension of his patent for ginning cotton and burring wool, reported a bill (S. No. 389) for the relief of Stephen K. Parkhurst; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a petition of citizens of Union county, Indiana, praying that a pension may be granted to John Pyle, who lost his left leg while in the discharge of his duty as a soldier, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 390) granting a pension to John Pyle. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

PATENT FEES.

Mr. COWAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 342) in amendment of an act to promote the progress of the useful arts, and the acts in amendment of and in addition thereto, to report it back without amendment and with the recommendation that it pass. As I presume there will be no objection to the bill, I ask unanimous consent to have it considered this morning.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that upon appealing for the first time from the decision of the primary examiner to the examiners-in-chief in the Patent Office, the appellant shall pay a fee of ten dollars into the Patent Office to the credit of the patent fund; and that no appeal from the primary examiner to the examiners-in-chief shall hereafter be allowed until the appellant shall pay this fee.

Mr. COWAN. I will merely state that an application for a patent is first referred to the primary examiner, and if the decision is adverse there is an appeal to the board of examiners, but on that appeal there is no fee now paid. It is complained in the office that parties do not appear before the primary examiners, because they can appeal without any additional cost; and it is therefore thought to be advisable, for the purpose of compelling them to attend to the case before the primary examiners, that there should be an appeal fee, to be paid before going to the examiners-in-chief. The committee think this is proper, and have therefore recommended the passage of the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. Is that all there is in the bill?

Mr. COWAN. That is all.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 387) to secure the speedy construction of the Northern Pacific railroad and telegraph line, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

RICHARD W. MEADE.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. No. 39) to refer the claim of the administrator of Richard W. Meade, deceased, to the Court of Claims.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know what the meaning of that is. I am utterly opposed to these resolutions referring particular cases to the Court of Claims, over which that court now have no jurisdiction. If we want to increase their jurisdiction we should do it by an amendment to the statute, without taking up these cases, of which they have no jurisdiction now, and referring them there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to have the resolution read before it is condemned, so that the Senate may see what it contains.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the resolution at length is asked for, and it will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas doubts are entertained whether the claim of the estate of Richard W. Meade, deceased, upon the Government of the United States is covered and embraced by the ninth section of the act of 3d March, 1863, entitled "An act to amend an act to establish a court for the investigation of claims against the United States," approved February 24, 1855, which case was referred to the said court by resolution of the Senate, passed 27th February, 1861: Now, in order to remove all doubts on that subject,
Resolved, &c. That the said claim of Richard W. Meade, administrator of Richard W. Meade, deceased, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication thereof, pursuant to authority conferred upon said court by an existing law to examine and decide claims against the United States referred to it by Congress.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not see that that meets the objection at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution which has just been read.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope it will not be taken up. I am opposed to all of these resolutions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This resolution is simply intended to remove doubts as to the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims over a case now pending in that court referred by a resolution of the Senate to the Court of Claims. I do not know that it is advisable to proceed with a statement of the merits of the claim now. It is an old claim. The heirs of Richard W. Meade—Captain Meade, General Meade, and others—simply desire to have the question settled as to whether the Government is responsible for this claim or not by an adjudication of the Court of Claims; and then by an adjudication of the Supreme Court; and if it is eventually decided that the Government is not responsible for this claim they desire, under such circumstances, to make application to the the Government of Spain, as this is a claim which originated against the Government of Spain; and when the treaty was made between Spain and the United States, contrary to the protest of Commodore Meade, the Government undertook to discharge Spain from the payment of this claim and assumed its payment. Since that time it has been litigated in various ways and forms, and there have been reports for and against it; but there has never been any final determination of the matter. The parties interested simply desire to have the question submitted finally to the Supreme Court of the United States.

There is nothing in this resolution indorsing the correctness of the claim. I have examined the claim thoroughly. I do not care to express my opinion upon it; but I am satisfied that if the claim is not paid the Government will do an act of great injustice to the parties concerned. The merits of the claim, however, are not now particularly involved. This is simply a resolution to enable these parties to have the question finally adjudicated by the courts of this country. They hold from the Government of Spain an absolute acknowledgment of this indebtedness; and if the Government of the United States had not interfered, contrary to their wishes and contrary to the protest of the holders of the claim, they would have been paid long ago by the Government of Spain; but this Government having interfered the payment was prevented, and the Government, upon one quibble and another, since that time has refused to make payment. I do not see any particular injustice in allowing these heirs who are interested in this claim to have it litigated before the courts of the country and finally determined. That is all this resolution proposes to do. If the Senate is disposed to vote it down, of course I have nothing to say; but according to the examination I have made of the matter, I believe it is no more than right and just that this resolution should pass.

Mr. CLARK. I have had no opportunity of examining this claim at length, though I desire to do so, and I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that he let it lie until the first of next week.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no desire to press the matter unduly; but the case is now pending in court, and when it is reached upon the docket it will be dismissed, I suppose, unless there is some resolution passed by Congress recognizing or confirming the jurisdiction of the court.

Mr. CLARK. I presume that will not be done during next week. I move that the resolution be postponed until next week.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I believe it has not yet been taken up.

Mr. CLARK. Then no action is necessary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will let it go by.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the motion to take up the joint resolution withdrawn?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir, it is.

ACCOMMODATION OF STATE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to take up for consideration Senate joint resolution No. 110, which I reported two or three days ago.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 110) to authorize the hiring of a building or buildings for the temporary accommodation of the Department of State was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. Its purpose is to authorize the Secretary of State to hire a suitable building or buildings for the temporary accommodation of the Department of State. It makes an appropriation of such sum, not exceeding $50,000, as may be necessary toward defraying the expense of such hiring, the transfer of the public archives, and the fitting up of the building or buildings.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HISTORY OF THE REBELLION.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the joint resolution No. 86.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 86) to provide for the publication of the official history of the rebellion.

Mr. WILSON. When this joint resolution was last before the Senate it was recommended to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and that committee have since reported a substitute for it. I presume that it is only necessary to read the substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia is to strike out all of the resolution after the resolving clause, and to insert in lieu of the words stricken out a substitute, which will be read.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

That the joint resolution entitled "A resolution to provide for the printing of official reports of the armies of the United States," approved May 19, 1864, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to appoint a competent person to revise, arrange, and prepare for publication the official documents relating to the rebellion and the operations of the Army of the United States, who shall prepare a plan for said publication and estimates of the cost thereof, to be submitted to Congress at its next session.

SEC. 3. And be it further resolved, That the person whose appointment is hereby authorized shall receive a compensation for his services not to exceed $2,500 per annum, to be paid monthly by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That said compensation shall not be paid for a longer period than two years from and after the passage of this resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time and passed.

A. M. JESS.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 145.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 145) granting land to A. M. Jess, of Josephine county, Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill has been read and amended.

Mr. GRIMES. I should like to know what it is about.

Mr. HARRIS. It is a bill for the relief of a man who had taken up land under the homestead law, and by a change in the channel of a river the land was destroyed, and this is simply to allow him to relocate it. I move to amend the bill in line four by striking out the words "three hundred and twenty," and inserting "one hundred and sixty" before the word "acres."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time and passed.

LAND OFFICE IN IDAHO.

Mr. STEWART. I move to take up House bill No. 249.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 249) to establish a land office in the Territory of Idaho. It provides that the public lands within the Territory of Idaho to which the Indian title is or shall be extinguished shall constitute a new land district, to be called the Idaho district, to be located at Boise City, Ada county; and the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register and receiver of public moneys for the district, who is to be required to reside at the place at which the office shall be located, and they are to have the same powers, perform the same duties, and be entitled to the same compensation as are or may be prescribed by law in relation to land offices of the United States in other Territories.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to inquire if this is recommended by the Interior Department or the General Land Office.

Mr. POMEROY. This bill came to us from the House of Representatives, and received the sanction of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, and was reported without amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Has the Land Office requested it?

Mr. STEWART. In the general report they recommended it.

Mr. POMEROY. There has been no special report on the subject.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It was recommended?

Mr. STEWART. It was recommended. It is supposed they have about thirty thousand inhabitants in that Territory now, and it is highly important that there should be a land office there.

Mr. GRIMES. Is there no land office in that Territory?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Mr. POMEROY. There is not now a land office in the Territory, and it was thought that there ought to be one established there.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I simply made the inquiry for information. I know that in many instances land offices have been established where there was no sort of occasion for them, and we have several that ought to be abolished; and hence I made the inquiry to know whether the Department recommended the establishment of this one. I have no objection to the bill. I think it very proper under the circumstances.

Mr. POMEROY. We have been opposed to the establishment of new land offices, and propose only to have one in each Territory. That has been the policy that experience has taught us.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, a bill (S. No. 59) to provide for the revision and consolidation of the statutes of the United States.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (H. R. No. 491) to remove the office of surveyor general of the States of Iowa and Wisconsin to Plattsmouth, Nebraska, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

MASSACHUSETTS MILITARY CLAIMS.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 106; and I should like to have the report accompanying it read.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 106) to reimburse the State of Massachusetts for money expended in the purchase of guns and ammunition, for procuring plans for coast defense and harbor obstructions, and for the erection of works of coast defense, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of War to forthwith receive from the State of Massachusetts guns, ammunition, and plans for harbor obstructions and coast defense, as set forth in a memorial and accompanying papers of the Legislature of Massachusetts to Congress, dated April 27 and 28, 1866, and to pay the State therefor, and also for actual expenditures of money in work or materials furnished upon fortifications or coast defense, as stated in the memorial and papers, the payments to be made to the State upon vouchers furnished to the United States of actual payments made by the State; and $475,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated to carry into effect the provisions of this joint resolution.

Mr. GRIMES. I understood the Senator from Rhode Island to ask for the reading of the report accompanying this joint resolution. I should like to hear it, too.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask for the reading of that report?

Mr. SPRAGUE. Yes, sir. I desire to have it read.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. SPRAGUE on the 11th instant from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia:

The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, having had under consideration the memorial of the Legislature of Massachusetts, praying Congress for reimbursement of money expended upon fortifications and in the purchase of guns and ammunition, and for procuring plans for coast defense and harbor obstructions for the common defense, beg leave to submit the following report:

The papers submitted to the committee consist of—
1. A joint memorial of the Senate and House of Representatives of Massachusetts, attested by their respective clerks, in which are considered the efforts, at the outset of the rebellion of rebel agents to engage this country in a foreign war; the bearing of such a war upon the contest; where its effects would be most seriously felt; whose duty it was to create means for defense; referring to the Secretary of State's opinion in his letter of October 14, 1861, (which is made a part of this report,) stating the possibility of a war, and his recommendations thereupon; the action of the State in view of this condition of affairs; and the reasons why Congress should act favorably in the matter of reimbursements for expenditures made in the common defense.

2. A message from Governor Alexander H. Bullock to the House of Representatives of Massachusetts, in response to a call therefor, accounting for the expenditure of $418,840 28 for coast defenses, and of $95,000 subject to warrant for fortifying Provincetown harbor, of $20,000 to $25,000 required to complete the purchases in Europe, $9,700 for a telegraph from the forts in Boston harbor to the State House; giving reasons for the urgency of the expenditure, and recommending a memorial to Congress for reimbursement.

3. Colonel Harrison Reiche, appendix marked A, accounting in detail for $554,346 11 expended under his direction in Europe and elsewhere.

4. John H. Read, quartermaster general of Massachusetts, report marked B, of ordnance and ordnance supplies on hand purchased for coast defense.

5. A letter from the Secretary of State, dated October 14, 1861, calling Governor Andrew's attention to the threatened state of our foreign relations.

6. Governor Andrew's address to the Legislature of Massachusetts, marked D, upon the defense of the coast, and the money expended to January, 1865, under the appropriations of $1,000,000, made by the Legislature of Massachusetts for coast defense, amounting to $354,346 11.

Some of the considerations favoring the views of the memorialist, and some that are adverse, appear to be as follows: In the outset of the rebellion rebel emissaries and rebel sympathizers did nearly succeed in provoking war between this country and Great Britain and France. A large number of their inhabitants, principally operatives, and others in and connected with their manufactories, were out of employment and destitute of the necessities of life. A severance from the Union of the cotton States would furnish cotton to Europe at lower prices than otherwise, and procure an exclusive market for the product of European manufacturers. A favorable opportunity was presented to check the growing power of the United States, and stop the further spread of liberal opinions and republican Governments; the future prosperity of France demanding an outlet for her poor and miserable rural population into the salubrious climate and among the effeminate populations of Mexico, added to which the frequent defeat of our arms invited interference, the consequence of which was war. The press throughout the country corroborated these views, and the Secretary of State confirmed them by the following letter that he addressed to the Governors of States nearest to and most exposed to attack:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.
WASHINGTON, October 14, 1861.

Sir: The present insurrection had not even revealed itself in arms when disloyal citizens hastened to foreign countries to invoke their intervention for the overthrow of the Government and the destruction of the Federal Union. These agents are known to have made their appeals to some of the more important States without success. It is not likely, however, that they will remain content with such refusals. Indeed, it is understood that they are industriously endeavoring to accomplish their disloyal purposes by degrees and by indirection. Taking advantage of the embarrassments of agriculture, manufactures, and commerce in foreign countries, resulting from the insurrection they have inaugurated at home, they seek to involve our common country in controversies with States with which every public interest and every interest of mankind require that it shall remain in relations of peace, amity, and friendship.

I am able to state, for your satisfaction, that the prospect of any such disturbance is now less serious than it has been at any previous period during the course of the insurrection. It is, nevertheless, necessary now, as it has hitherto been, to take every precaution that is possible to avert the evils of foreign war, to be superinduced upon those of civil commotion which we are endeavoring to cure. One of the most obvious of such precautions is that our ports and harbors on the seas and lakes should be in a condition of complete defense; for any nation may be said to voluntarily incur danger in tempestuous seasons when it fails to show that it has sheltered itself on every side from which the storm might possibly come.

The measures which the Executive can adopt in this emergency are such only as Congress has sanctioned, and for which it has provided. The President is putting forth the most diligent efforts to execute these measures, and we have the great satisfaction of seeing that these efforts, seconded by the favor, aid, and support of a loyal, patriotic, and self-sacrificing people, are rapidly bringing the military and naval forces of the United States into the highest state of efficiency. But Congress was chiefly absorbed, during its recent extra session, with those measures, and did not provide as amply as could be wished for the fortification of our sea and lake coasts. In previous years loyal States have applied themselves by independent and separate activity to support and aid the Federal Government in its arduous responsibilities. The same disposition has been manifested in a degree eminently honorable by all the loyal States during the present insurrection. In view of this fact, and relying upon the increase and continuance of the same disposition on the part of the loyal States, the President has directed me to invite your consideration to the subject of the importance of perfecting the defenses of the State over which you preside, and to ask you to submit the subject to the consideration of the Legislature when it shall have assembled. Such proceedings by the State would require only a temporary use of its means. The expenditures ought to be made the subject of conference with the Federal Government. Being thus made, with the concurrence of the Government, for general defense, there is every reason to believe that Congress would sanction what the State should do, and would provide for its reimbursement. Should those suggestions be accepted, the President will direct proper agents of the Federal Government to confer with you, and to superintend, direct, and conduct the prosecution of the system of defense of your State.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

His Excellency JOHN A. ANDREW,
Governor of the State of Massachusetts.

The executive department of our Government availed itself of every occasion to excite the people and the States' officials to renewed efforts to recruit the Army and the Navy and to fill up their respective quotas. The movement of the enemy upon the capital, the defeat of our arms or threatened foreign complication, was made the occasion for more than ordinary appeals to greater efforts and sacrifices. During this condition of the public mind, a new enemy was announced by Mr. Seward's letter; the States that were most exposed were first called upon. The General Government, in exercising its whole power and every means that the country possessed to create a navy and to supply field and siege guns for army operations, had no means at its disposal, nor were there any in the country unemployed, that the States could avail themselves of to devote to defenses against a threatened or real attack from European Powers, or piratical vessels that had been put afloat and manned and were being put afloat and manned ostensibly as confederate cruisers, but really as a part of the aggressive machinery that rebel emissaries and their collaborators—the aristocratic and trading classes and their Governments in Europe—had set on foot. In the outset these States had responded to all calls made upon them without an inquiry as to how the expenses were to be met. In the present call, Governor Andrew, of Massachusetts, under date January, 1862, called the attention of the Legislature of that State to the real condition of affairs, and obtained then, and subsequently, an appropriation of $1,000,000 for purposes of preparation, after consulting with different officers of the General Government; and so far as their sanction could operate upon the disbursements of money appropriated by a State, they gave it to the course firmly adopted by the authorities of Massachusetts, who elected to procure heavy guns and ammunition from Europe, to provide plans for coast defense and harbor obstruction, and to erect defenses at exposed points. This duty was committed to two commissions—three of the most distinguished citizens upon each. The duties of one of these was to obtain supplies from Europe; the other to administer upon home defenses. Thus guns and plans were obtained and are now in the custody of Massachusetts. The material that was purchased in Europe by the agents of the State was as well purchased as if the duty had been performed by agents of the General Government, and though not of the pattern used in our service, was the best that could be obtained in Europe. These the memorialist desires the Government to receive, and to pay the sum of their purchase.

Massachusetts, at the time of the purchase of this material, was contributing to the Government large supplies of war material. If her harbors or coast had been successfully attacked these supplies would have ceased, as well, also, as supplies from the other New England States, in many of which large manufactories were established, or were being established, for obtaining supplies of guns, ammunition, clothing, &c. Deprived of these supplies, the contest would probably have been prolonged, if productive of no other result; and no one doubts that in that event the materials in question would have been gladly received by the General Government, and would have been paid for as other material was paid for at the time.

Time and the absence of open foreign aggressions enabled the General Government to procure all necessary war material from establishments that had been created (during the progress of the war) in our own country. This also influenced the State's expenditures; instead of expending the million appropriated, but little more than one third was called for.

In this must be recognized a prompt compliance with the altered state of affairs, as the State ceased further action when the United States had means and leisure to meet its new obligation.

How far the alarm that had been sounded by the Secretary of State and otherwise, and the prompt response of the States, had influence in producing wiser reflections and conclusions from the Governments heretofore referred to, can never be known. Undoubtedly to the extent of that influence the States whose prompt action in assuming liabilities and in making expenditures to meet the threatened danger, should be doubly honored and reimbursed. If it is considered, as it is contended, that the country escaped a foreign war by the merest accident, it is clear that it would have been a neglect of the plainest duty, as well as criminal and treasonable, had the States that were appealed to neglected or refused to have responded to the call of the Secretary and the general opinion of the people.

That Massachusetts is contributing more to the income of the nation than any other State in proportion to her population is not, perhaps, a consideration that bears upon this question; but that the proportion of such contributions should be greatly augmented by requiring her to retain war material that was purchased for the common defense is a consideration, more especially as the General Government has an indirect control over such material, and can alone decide as to the uses that it may be put to, or how it may be disposed of.

The General Government, have now, of course, no use for this material. Its officials exercised no direct authority in its purchase. But it may be reasonable to contend that reimbursement should be made to the State therefor, as the exigencies of the case called for similar action from the General Government that was taken by the State.

In the absence also of written instructions or directions from the General Government touching the expenditure, questions might arise adverse to the positions assumed by the memorialist. In this respect it is similarly situated to those claims that have received favorable legislative action, and some that are, perhaps, less favorably situated.

The committee have obtained information from heads of Departments and other officers of the Government, and have, after careful consideration, arrived at the following conclusions:

In the beginning of the war the new States could not obtain the necessary funds from their own resources, or dispose of their securities based thereon; hence their acts were subject to the General Government. Massachusetts, on the other hand, could readily turn her securities into money; hence her readiness and promptness at all times to respond to the reasonable calls of the Government, and the present case is an illustration of that condition of facts. Had the State not taken the initiative, the General Government would or should have done so.

The Secretary of State was justified in warning the States of the impending danger of foreign aggressions.

Massachusetts, her legislative and executive officers, for their prompt response to the warning, is deserving the thanks of the nation.

The materials purchased are in some respects out of the control of the State and in that of the General Government, inasmuch as our Constitution and laws restrain its uses and sale. We think the Government should have exclusive title thereto. Some of the disbursements were made upon the solicitation of the officers of the Government, and others with their cooperation.

All the expenditures as set forth in the memorial were made in the interest, on behalf of, and to the advantage of the whole nation. They were available during the war, are now, and will be hereafter, and they were properly and honorably made, and should be promptly reimbursed. Therefore the committee recommend the passage of the accompanying joint resolution.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that this joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONNESS. Why do that?

Mr. GRIMES. Simply because there is not information enough before us, and there cannot be until there is a thorough examination of the claim, to justify us either in voting for it or in voting against it. It seems to me there ought to be an account stated. Besides, as I understand the report, and as I read the resolution, this is only the initiation to another appropriation that is to be made in the future.

Mr. SPRAGUE. No, sir.

Mr. GRIMES. We appropriate $470,000 at this time, and I apprehend that is not to be taken in full discharge of the debt which the State of Massachusetts claims against the Federal Government for what they allege they have paid out in perfecting their coast defenses.

It seems to me that the Committee on Claims is the committee to which the case ought to have been referred. It should not have gone to the Committee on Military Affairs. It is a matter of claim. So far as such cases have been connected with nautical expenses, and have come to the Senate, we have referred them, in the first instance, to the Committee on Claims; or if by accident, on the motion of some member, they got to the Committee on Naval Af-fares, that committee has invariably reported them back and had them sent to the Committee on Claims. This is the claim of a State for money which she says she expended in behalf of the Government and which ought to be reimbursed. The Committee on Military Affairs, it seems to me, have no more to do with it than any other committee.

Mr. POMEROY. The bills for paying claims of the State of Missouri, and the other States, were reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GRIMES. Because we have sent one or two claims to the Committee on Military Affairs is no reason why we should send this. Besides, Mr. President, I am frank to say that I want the State of Massachusetts to stand like all the rest of the States of this Union; let her wait until we are all ready to settle with the General Government, and then let us all come in and stand on the same platform.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I trust this resolution will not take the course suggested by the Senator from Iowa. It is a matter which seems to me to be exclusively within the province of the Committee on Military Affairs to investigate. The items are all set out in dollars and cents. This is a special expenditure brought about at the time that it originated by the urgent need of the national Government and of the whole country when we were trembling for fear of a foreign war. As is said by the committee in the report, it would have been criminal and treasonable if Massachusetts and her citizens had not responded with their money. The expenditures were purely military, and the whole amount now called for is to pay for material which the General Government is to receive to a very large extent. Massachusetts has now in her possession the guns that she purchased and the materials that she purchased for this purpose. Of course she cannot sell them to Mexico or to Chili or to Peru, as we all know. She must retain them. These materials were bought at the solicitation of the Government, and it is only asked that the Government shall receive them and pay for them and make such other reimbursements as will compensate the State for disbursements that were specially called for by the different heads of Departments of this Government. The whole subject was investigated by members of the Committee on Military Affairs, and the Departments informed those who investigated it that they had solicited very many of the expenditures that were made—plans for harbor and coast defense, telegraphs, and embankments at different places where it was impossible for the Government of the United States to do the work promptly.

I do not know what other claims Massachusetts may have, but I am informed that this is the only claim which Massachusetts makes for the expenses of coast defense, that were especially required at this particular, this distressing time to the Government. Whatever claims for money she may make on grounds common to the other States may very well be put off until the time arrives for the other States to be reimbursed; but here is a special appropriation for a particular purpose, and if Massachusetts had not expended this money the General Government would have paid it. It was simply a question of time. Immediately after certain expenditures had been made, and the General Government had opportunity and ability to resume its control over the matter, Massachusetts relinquished that control, and the General Government took it up where Massachusetts had left it and made the expenditures according to the circumstances and the necessities of the case. If Massachusetts had not been prompt, if she had been dilatory and neglectful, the Government of the United States would have paid every cent of this money; but the fact that she was prompt, energetic, and patriotic should not be a reason to deprive her of fair consideration. Her claim should go through regularly and promptly, as many claims that have not near the warrant that this has.

Mr. GRIMES. I am pronouncing no opinion as to the validity of the claim of Massachusetts. I only say that so far as appears upon the record here, it has not been investigated in such a manner as it ought to have been before we are called upon to decide as to its validity. It is said that we are to pay for a certain number of guns. How many?

Mr. SPRAGUE. It is specified in the memorandum.

Mr. GRIMES. In what memorandum?

Mr. SPRAGUE. In the memorandum. The resolution refers to the memorial.

Mr. GRIMES. The resolution refers to the memorial; but how is the fact proved and where is the record before the Committee on Military Affairs that that memorial corresponds with the facts? Nowhere. It is said we are to pay for a certain amount of masonry done upon certain work. Where is the evidence that the masonry has ever been done?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is House bill No. 513.

GOODRICH AND CORNISH.

Mr. CONNESS. I submit the following report from a committee of conference; and as it will take but an instant, and the parties are here awaiting action upon it, I hope it will be acted upon now:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to House resolution 77, entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of Ambrose L. Goodrich and Nathan Cornish, for carrying the United States mail from Boise City to Idaho City, in the Territory of Idaho," having met, and after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from that part of their first amendment which provides "that the amount to be allowed shall not exceed $20,000," and that said amendment be so modified as to read "Provided, That the amount to be allowed shall not exceed $10,000."

That the House concur in the Senate amendments as modified.

JOHN CONNESS,
L. M. MORRILL,
C. R. BUCKALEW,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN H. FARQUHAR,
D. C. McRUER,
W. E. FINCK,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

INTERNAL TAXATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 513) to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, commencing with section sixty-four of the House bill, which, according to the amendments heretofore made, becomes section sixty-five:

SEC. [64] 65. And be it further enacted, That the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be reorganized so as to include one Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with a salary of $5,000; one deputy commissioner, with a salary of $3,500; one cashier, with a salary of $3,000, who shall also act as disbursing officer for said office; and which offices are now created, and the duties thereof defined by law; and to authorize, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, the employment of the following additional officers and clerks, and with the salaries hereinafter specified, namely, two deputy commissioners, each with a salary of $3,000; one solicitor, with a salary of $4,000; seven heads of divisions, each with a salary of $2,500; thirty-four clerks of class four; forty-five clerks of class three; fifty clerks of class two; and thirty-seven clerks of class one; fifty-five copyists, each with a salary of $720; three messengers, each with a salary of $1,000; five assistant messengers, each with a salary of $850; and fifteen laborers, each with a salary of $720; and a sum sufficient to pay the officers, clerks, and employes herein authorized is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The Committee on Finance proposed several amendments to this section. The first was in line five to strike out "five" and insert "six," so as to make the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line five, after "dollars," to insert "and."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change will be made.

The next amendment was in lines eight and nine to strike out the words "one cashier, with a salary of $3,000, who shall also act as disbursing officer for said office; and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line ten to insert the word "already" before the word "created."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The word "now" before the word "already" should be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be stricken out, no objection being made.

The next amendment was in lines twenty-three and twenty-four to strike out the words "copyists, each with a salary of $720," and insert "female clerks," so as to make the item read, "fifty-five female clerks."

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance whether a provision of that kind has ever been made in any law that we have enacted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We provided for female clerks, copyists, counters, &c., in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and in some statutes express authority has been given to employ female clerks.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I thought they were employed under a usage of the Department as the interests of the public service seemed to justify it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They are employed as clerks in different capacities. Some of them keep accounts.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I never was disposed to make an objection to the system while it was under the discretion of the Secretary. I doubt the propriety of providing that the Secretary shall appoint that class of clerical force.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The number mentioned here is the number that he employs and the number he wishes.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have no objection to his doing it under the exercise of his discretionary power, but I do not think Congress ought to provide that there shall be such a class of clerks.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He is not obliged to employ the whole of them if he does not want them any more than of the others. It is a matter of discretion with him. He cannot employ any more than this number. It is fixed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-five, to strike out "one thousand," and insert "seven hundred and twenty;" so as to make the item read, "three messengers, each with a salary of $720."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend that clause by striking out "three" and inserting "five," and also striking out the words "each with a salary of $720;" so as to read, "five messengers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines twenty-seven and twenty-eight, to strike out "eight hundred and fifty" and insert "seven hundred and twenty;" so as to read, "five assistant messengers with a salary of $720."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move to strike out "five" and insert "three," and also to strike out the words "each with a salary of $720;" so as to read, "three assistant messengers."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-nine, to strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and insert "six hundred;" so as to read, "fifteen laborers, each with a salary of $600."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend that clause by striking out the words "each with a salary of $600."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert "additional salaries of" before "officers," in line thirty-one.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. As the section has now been amended I do not see that any salary is fixed for these officers.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The salaries of the officers of these several grades are now fixed by law.

Mr. POMEROY. Then it is all right.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to add at the end of this section the following:

And this section shall take effect from and after the 30th day of June, 1866.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next two sections, to which the Committee on Finance reported no amendment, as follows:

Sec. [65] 66. And be it further enacted, That all official communications made by assessors to collectors, assessors to assessors, or by collectors to collectors, or by collectors to assessors, or by assessors to assessors, or by collectors to their deputies, or by deputy collectors to collectors, may be officially franked by the writers thereof, and shall, when so franked, be transmitted by mail free of postage.

Sec. [66] 67. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to appoint an officer in his Department who shall be styled "special commissioner of the revenue," whose office shall terminate in four years from the passage of this act. It shall be the duty of the special commissioner of the revenue to inquire into all the sources of national revenue, and the best methods of collecting the revenue; the relations of foreign trade to domestic industry; the mutual adjustment of the systems of taxation by customs and excise, with the view of insuring the requisite revenue with the least disturbance or inconvenience to the progress of industry and the development of the resources of the country; and to inquire from time to time, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, into the manner in which officers charged with the administration and collection of the revenues perform their duties. And the said special commissioner of the revenue shall from time to time report, through the Secretary of the Treasury, to Congress, either in the form of a bill or otherwise, such modifications of the rates of taxation or of the methods of collecting the revenues, and such other facts pertaining to the trade, industry, commerce, or taxation of the country, as he may find, by actual observation of the operation of the law, to be conducive to the public interest; and, in order to enable the special commissioner of the revenue to properly conduct his investigations, he is hereby empowered to examine the books, papers, and accounts of any officer of the revenue, to administer oaths, examine and summon witnesses, and take testimony; and each and every such person falsely swearing or affirming shall be subject to the penalties and disabilities prescribed by law for the punishment of corrupt and wilful perjury; and all officers of the Government are hereby required to extend to the said commissioner all reasonable facilities for the collection of information pertinent to the duties of his office. And the said special commissioner shall be paid an annual salary of $4,000, and the traveling expenses necessarily incurred while in the discharge of his duty; and all letters and documents to and from the special commissioner relating to the duties and business of his office shall be transmitted by mail free of postage. And section nineteen of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' passed June 30, 1864," approved March 3, 1865, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out sections sixty-seven, sixty-eight, and sixty-nine of the House bill, in these words:

Sec. 67. And be it further enacted, That in any case, civil or criminal, where suit or prosecution shall be commenced in any court of any State against any officer of the United States, appointed under or acting by authority of the act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," passed June 30, 1864, or of any act in addition thereto, or against any person acting under or by authority of any such officer on account of any act done under color of his office, or against any person holding property or estate by title derived from any such officer, concerning such property or estate and affecting the validity of this act, it shall be lawful for the defendant in such suit or prosecution at any time before trial, upon a petition to the circuit court of the United States in and for the district in which the defendant shall have been served with process, setting forth the nature of said suit or prosecution, and verifying the said petition by affidavit, together with a certificate, signed by an attorney or counselor at law of some court of record of the State in which such suit shall have been commenced, or of the United States, setting forth that, as counsel for the petitioner, he has examined the proceedings against him, and carefully inquired into all the matters set forth in the petition, and that he believes the same to be true; which petition, affidavit, and certificate shall be presented to the said circuit court if in session, and if not, to the clerk thereof, at his office, and shall be filed in said office, and the cause shall thereupon be entered on the docket of said court, and shall be thereafter proceeded in as a cause originally commenced in that court; and it shall be the duty of the clerk of said court, if the suit were commenced in the court below by summons, to issue a writ of certiorari to the State court, requiring said court to send to the said circuit court the record and proceedings in said cause; or if it were commenced by capias, he shall issue a writ of habeas corpus cum causa, a duplicate of which said writ shall be delivered to the clerk of the State court, or left at his office, by the marshal of the district, or his deputy, or some person duly authorized thereto; and thereupon it shall be the duty of the said State court to stay all further proceedings in such cause, and the said suit or prosecution, upon delivery of such process, or leaving the same as aforesaid, shall be docketed and taken to be moved to the said circuit court, and any further proceedings, trial, or judgment therein in the State court shall be wholly null and void. And if the defendant in any such suit be in actual custody on mesne process therein, it shall be the duty of the marshal, by virtue of the writ of habeas corpus cum causa, to take the body of the defendant into his custody, to be dealt with in the said cause according to the rules of law and the order of the circuit court, or of any judge thereof in vacation. All attachments made, and all bail and other security given upon such suit or prosecution shall be and continue in like force and effect as if the same suit or prosecution had proceeded to final judgment and execution in the State court; and if, upon the removal of any such suit or prosecution, it shall be made to appear to the said circuit court that no copy of the record and proceedings therein in the State court can be obtained, it shall be lawful for said circuit court to allow and require the plaintiff to proceed de novo, and to file a declaration of his cause of action, and the parties may thereupon proceed as in action originally brought in said circuit court; and, on failure of so proceeding, judgment of nolle prosequi may be rendered against the plaintiff, with costs for the defendant. Provided, That an act entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports," passed March 2, 1833, shall not be so construed as to apply to cases arising under an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," passed June 30, 1864, or any act in addition thereto or in amendment thereof, nor to any case in which the validity or interpretation of said act or acts shall be in issue.

Sec. 68. And be it further enacted, That the fifth section of an act passed June 30, 1864, entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," is hereby repealed: Provided, That any case which may have been removed from the courts of any State under said fifth section to the courts of the United States shall be remanded to the State court from which it was so removed, with all the records relating to such cases, unless the justice of the circuit court of the United States in which such suit or prosecution is pending shall be of opinion that said case would be removable from the court of the State to the circuit court under and by virtue of the sixty-sixth section of this act. And in all cases which may have been removed from any court of any State under and by virtue of said fifth section of said act of June 30, 1864, all attachments made, and all bail or other security given upon such suit or prosecution, shall be and continue in full force and effect until final judgment and execution, whether such suit shall be prosecuted to final judgment in the circuit court of the United States or remanded to the State court from which it was removed.

Sec. 69. And be it further enacted, That whenever a writ of error shall be issued for the revision of any judgment or decree in any criminal proceeding where is drawn in question the construction of any statute of the United States, in a court of any State, as is provided in the twenty-fifth section of an act entitled "An act to establish the judicial courts of the United States," passed September 24, 1789, the defendant, if charged with an offense bailable by the laws of such State, shall not be released from custody until a final judgment upon such writ, or until a bond, with sufficient sureties, in a reasonable sum, as ordered and approved by the State court, shall be given; and if the offense is not so bailable, until a final judgment upon the writ of error. Writs of error in criminal cases shall have precedence upon the docket of the Supreme Court of all cases to which the Government of the United States is not a party, excepting only such cases as the court, at their discretion, may decide to be of public importance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next section, as follows:

Sec. [70] 68. And be it further enacted, That this act shall take effect, where not otherwise provided, on the 1st day of July, 1866, and all provisions of any former act inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed: Provided, however, That no duty imposed by any previous act, which has become due or of which return has been or ought to be made, shall be remitted or released by this act, but the same shall be assessed, collected, and paid, and all fines and penalties heretofore incurred shall be enforced and collected, and all offenses heretofore committed shall be punished, as if this act had not been passed; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to make all necessary regulations and prescribe all necessary forms and proceedings for the collection of such taxes and the enforcement of such fines and penalties for the execution of the provisions of this act.

The Committee on Finance proposed to strike out the proviso to this section, and in lieu of it to insert:

Provided, however, That all the provisions of said acts shall be in force for collecting all taxes, duties, and licenses properly assessed or liable to be assessed, or accruing under the provisions of acts, the right to which has already accrued, or which may hereafter accrue under said acts, and for maintaining and continuing liens, fines, penalties, and forfeitures incurred under and by virtue thereof, and for carrying out and completing all proceedings which have been already commenced or that may be commenced, to enforce such fines, penalties, and forfeitures, or criminal proceedings under said acts, and for the punishment of crimes of which any party shall be or has been found guilty: And provided further, That whenever the duty imposed by any existing law shall cease in consequence of any limitation therein contained before the respective provisions of this act shall take effect, the same duty shall be and is hereby continued until such provisions of this act shall take effect; and where any act is hereby repealed no duty imposed thereby shall be held to cease, in consequence of such repeal, until the respective corresponding provisions of this act shall take effect: And provided further, That all manufactures and productions on which a duty was imposed by either of the acts repealed by this act, which shall be in the possession of the manufacturer or producer or of his agent or agents on the day when this act takes effect, the duty imposed by any such former act not having been paid, shall be held and deemed to have been manufactured or produced after such date; and whenever by the terms of this act a duty is imposed upon any articles, goods, wares, or merchandise manufactured or produced, upon which no duty was imposed by either of said former acts, it shall apply to such as were manufactured or produced, and not removed from the place of manufacture or production, on the day when this act takes effect; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to make all necessary regulations and prescribe all necessary forms and proceedings for the collection of such taxes and the enforcement of such fines and penalties for the execution of the provisions of this act.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In the third line of the section I move to strike out the word "July" and to insert "August."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next and last section of the bill, as follows:

Sec. [71] 69. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to have this act, and the acts to which it is amendatory, published in at least one German newspaper in each of the States of the Union where such paper may be published.

The Committee on Finance reported no amendment to this section.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There are some amendments that I wish to suggest. One of them is on page 103, in line twenty-three hundred and thirty-four of section nine, to strike out the proviso, which extends to line twenty-three hundred and forty on the next page. It is found that although the rule is well in one part of the country it does not work in another.

The words proposed to be stricken out were read, as follows:

Provided, That in all cases in which such ware shall be delivered to agents or peddlers employed by the manufacturer for the disposal of the same, such ware so delivered shall be deemed to have been sold at the time of delivery, and the tax to be paid thereon shall be computed upon the value known to the trade as the five-pound rate or price for tin-ware.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 108, in line twenty-four hundred and fifty of section nine, I move to strike out "ready-made" before "clothing," so that the clause will read:

On clothing, gloves, mittens, moccasins, caps, felt hats, and other articles of dress for the wear of men, women, and children, not otherwise assessed and taxed, a tax of two per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I propose on the same page, after line twenty-four hundred and thirty-nine, in relation to the tax on furs, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That on all articles made of fur, the retail price of which shall not exceed twenty dollars, a tax of two per cent. only shall be paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 118, in line twenty-six hundred and ninety-five of section nine, the amendment there by the committee inserting "this act" in place of the words "the act to which this is an amendment," was not concurred in. On examining the matter I think it must be considered as the previous act, inasmuch as it is simply amending that act. I move, therefore, to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was rejected, so that it may be agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend by striking out on pages 135 and 136, from line thirty-one hundred and twenty-seven of section nine down to and including line thirty-one hundred and thirty-five, and inserting instead of those words what I send to the Chair.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

That section one hundred and twenty be amended by striking out the proviso to said section and inserting in lieu thereof the following: Provided, That the tax upon the dividends of life insurance companies shall not be deemed due until such dividends are payable; nor shall the portion of premiums returned by mutual life insurance companies to their policy-holders, nor the annual or semi-annual interest allowed or paid to the depositors in savings banks or savings institutions, be considered as dividends.

The words proposed to be inserted were read, as follows:

That section one hundred and twenty be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that there shall be levied and collected a duty of five per cent. on all dividends in scrip or money thereafter declared due; and whenever the same shall be payable to stockholders, policy-holders, or depositors as a part of the earnings, income, or gains of any bank, trust company, savings institution, and of any fire, marine, life, inland insurance company, either stock or mutual, under whatever name or style known or called, in the United States or Territories, whether specially incorporated or existing under general laws, and on all undistributed sums, or sums made or added during the year to their surplus or contingent funds; and said banks, trust companies, savings institutions, and insurance companies shall pay the said tax, and are hereby authorized to deduct and withhold from all payments made on account of any dividends or sums of money that may be due and payable as aforesaid, the said tax of five per cent. And a list or return shall be made and rendered to the assessor, or assistant assessor, on or before the 10th day of the month following that in which any dividends or sums of money become due or payable as aforesaid; and said list or return shall contain a true and faithful account of the amount of the taxes as aforesaid, and there shall be annexed thereto a declaration of the president, cashier, or treasurer of the bank, trust company, savings institution, or insurance company, under oath or affirmation, in form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that the same contains a true and faithful account of the taxes as aforesaid. And for any default in the making or altering of such list or return, with such declaration annexed, the bank, trust company, savings institution, or insurance company making such default shall forfeit, as a penalty, the sum of $1,000, and in case of any default in making or rendering said list or return, or of any default in the payment of the tax as required, or any part thereof, the assessment and collection of the tax and penalty shall be in accordance with the general provisions of law in other cases of neglect and refusal: Provided, That the tax upon the dividends of life insurance companies shall not be deemed due until such dividends are payable, nor shall the portion of premiums returned by mutual life insurance companies to their policy-holders, nor the annual or semi-annual interest allowed and paid to the depositors in savings banks or savings institutions be considered as dividends.

Mr. SPRAGUE. In what part of the bill is that?

Mr. FESSENDEN. This is a change made necessary by changing the mode of payment. It is on pages 135 and 136 with reference to the payment of dividends of life insurance companies, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I offer the following to come in immediately after the amendment:

That section one hundred and twenty-two be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any railroad, canal, turnpike, canal navigation, or slack-water company, indebted for any money for which bonds or other evidences of indebtedness have been issued, payable in one or more years after date, upon which interest is stipulated to be paid, or coupons representing the interest, or any such company that may have declared any dividend in scrip or money due or payable to its stockholders, as part of the earnings, profit, income, or gains of such company, and all profits of such company carried to the account of any fund, or used for construction, shall be subject to and pay a tax of five per cent. on the amount of all such interest, or coupons, dividends, or profits, whenever the same shall be payable: and said companies are hereby authorized to deduct and withhold from all payments on account of any interest or coupons and dividends due and payable as aforesaid the tax of five per cent.; and the payment of the amount of said tax so deducted from the interest or coupons or dividends, and certified by the president or treasurer of said company, shall discharge said company from that amount of the dividend or interest or coupon on the bonds or other evidences of their indebtedness so held by any person or party whatever, except where said companies may have contracted otherwise. And a list or return shall be made and rendered to the assessor or assistant assessor on or before the 10th day of the month following that in which said interest, coupons, or dividends become due and payable, and as often as every six months; and said list or return shall contain a true and faithful account of the amount of the tax; and there shall be annexed thereto a declaration of the president or treasurer of the company, under oath or affirmation, in form and manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that the same contains a true and faithful account of said tax. And for any default in making or rendering such list or return, with the declaration annexed, or in the payment of the tax as aforesaid, the company making such default shall forfeit as a penalty the sum of $1,000; and in case of any default in making or rendering said list or return, or in the payment of the tax or any part thereof as aforesaid, the assessment and the collection of the tax and the penalty shall be made according to the provisions of law in other cases of neglect or refusal.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 148 I move the following amendment, to come in after line twenty-four hundred and forty-one of section nine:

And provided further, That in all cases where the party has not affixed the stamp required by law upon any instrument made, signed, or issued at a time when and at a place where no collection district was established, it shall be lawful for him or them or any party having an interest therein, to affix the proper stamp thereto, or, if the original be lost, to a copy thereof; and the instrument or copy to which the proper stamp has been thus affixed before the 1st day of January, 1867, and the record thereof shall be as valid to all intents and purposes as if stamped by the collector in the manner hereinbefore provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to insert the following proviso at the end of line thirty-four hundred and ninety-five of section nine, on page 150:

Provided, That when such imported articles (except lucifer or friction matches, cigar-lights, and wax-tapers,) shall be sold in the original and unbroken package in which the bottles or other inclosures were packed by the manufacturer, the person so selling said articles shall not be subject to any penalty on account of the want of the proper stamp.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. An amendment was made on page 64, striking out in lines thirteen hundred and fifty-six, thirteen hundred and fifty-seven, thirteen hundred and fifty-eight, and thirteen hundred and fifty-nine these words:

All steamers and vessels upon waters of the United States on board of which passengers or travelers are provided with food or lodgings shall be subject to and required to pay twenty-five dollars.

And inserting in lieu of them:

All steamers and other vessels engaged in the business of carrying passengers and providing them with food or lodging, and the gross receipts of which are taxable under section one hundred and three of this act, shall pay twenty-five dollars.

I move to reconsider the vote adopting that amendment. The committee think it proper that the clause should remain as it was originally.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; and the question recurring on the amendment, it was rejected.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 104 I move to insert a paragraph between lines twenty-three hundred and sixty and twenty-three hundred and sixty-one of section nine to conform to an amendment made to the free list:

On steel made directly from muck-bar, blooms, slabs, or loops, a tax of three dollars per ton.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 126 I move to strike out the word "such" before "return," at the beginning of line twenty-eight hundred and eighty-five of section nine, and also to strike out the words "as aforesaid" in the same line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) These corrections will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 141, in lines thirty-two hundred and sixty-nine and thirty-two hundred and seventy of section nine, I move to strike out the words "under this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made, no objection being interposed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 147, in lines thirty-four hundred and eighteen and thirty-four hundred and nineteen of section nine, I move to strike out the words "real estate records in the proper town or county," and to insert in lieu of them "any records in which such original is required to be recorded."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 151, in line thirty-five hundred and twenty-nine of section nine, the word "such" should be "each."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 159, in lines twenty-eight and twenty-nine of section ten, the words "for all the purposes of the act of which this is an amendment" should be stricken out. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 215, in line twenty-five of section forty-six, the words "or any other" should be "and any."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 216, in line twelve of section [forty-eight] forty-seven, the word "at" should be stricken out and the words "or removed from" inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That alteration will be made, there being no objection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 220, I move to strike out all after the word "year" in line sixteen of section [fifty-three] fifty-two, down to and including the word "jurisdiction," in line twenty-eight, on page 221. The matter is provided for in another place.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

And said liquors, utensils, and apparatus may be seized by the collector or deputy collector of the proper district, or by such other collector or deputy collector as may be specially authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for that purpose, and held by any collector or deputy collector until a decision shall be had thereon according to law: Provided, That proceedings to enforce said forfeiture shall be commenced by such collector within twenty days after the seizure thereof. And such proceedings shall be in the nature of a proceeding in rem, or in any proper form of action, in the circuit or district court of the United States for the district where such seizure is made, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 224, in line twenty-four of section [fifty-six] fifty-five, I move to strike out the words "the term of" and to insert "not less than one nor more than," so as to read, "be imprisoned not less than one nor more than five years."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 34, in line five hundred and ninety-five of section nine, I move to strike out the words "or otherwise."

The PRESIDING OFFICER pro tempore. That correction will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 235, in line five of section [sixty-six] sixty-seven, I move to strike out the words "passage of this act" and insert "30th day of June, 1866."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There are some other verbal amendments that I may wish to make to the bill, but as I desire to look over them I will suspend here and let other gentlemen who have amendments to propose offer them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. At the end of line twenty-nine hundred and thirty-nine, on page 128, I move to insert the following amendment:

But this tax shall not be assessed upon, or collected from, any such converted bank or converted banking association whose total average circulation, including State bank notes as well as national currency, shall not exceed the amount of circulation allowed by the act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I believe that is right. I have looked at it.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not understand it, and I should like to have an explanation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have shown it to all the gentlemen of the committee, and it was satisfactory to them.

Mr. GRIMES. It may be satisfactory to some gentlemen; but I have got to vote on it one way or the other, and I do not understand it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is simply this, that the additional tax of three per cent. upon the outstanding circulation of converted banks shall not apply to banks which have been unable to get in their notes, and in consequence have not received the amount of circulation to which they are entitled under their organization from the Government. For instance, take a bank with a capital of $100,000. It is entitled to receive $90,000 in circulation. If they have $30,000 of circulation outstanding, the Comptroller does not allow them to receive that amount of their $90,000 of circulation; and this amendment provides that they shall not be taxed for the excess of that money out, so long as they keep within the limit of $90,000 circulation to which they are entitled. That is the effect of it, and I think it is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend the bill, on page 106, line twenty-three hundred and ninety-eight, by striking out the word "five" and inserting "three." The clause now reads:

On leather of all descriptions, tanned or partially tanned in the rough, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment simply proposes a reduction of the tax from five to three per cent. on leather tanned in the rough. This will still leave an additional tax of five per cent. ad valorem on the same leather when curried or finished, which I do not propose to interfere with. There is a tax of five per cent. ad valorem on the additional value given the article by being curried or finished. It will also leave the tax of five per cent. on the higher class of leather that enters into articles of greater value, and that are more commonly used by persons who are able to pay. This class of leather, the tax on which I propose to reduce to three per cent., enters into the manufacture of common boots and shoes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator will look at the proviso to the succeeding clause he will see that his object is already accomplished by that proviso.

Mr. CONNESS. No, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It reads:

Provided, That all leather in the rough upon which duties or taxes have been actually paid shall be assessed on the increased value only when curried or finished.

Mr. CONNESS. I propose to leave that in. I desire to make a change in the paragraph before that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What change?

Mr. CONNESS. From five to three per cent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. CONNESS. I had intended presenting the letter that I hold in my hand to the Committee on Finance, and handed it to the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. WILLIAMS,] but through inadvertence it was not presented to the committee. I think it is a case in which the relief asked for ought to be granted. It is the only amendment that I have undertaken to offer, although I suppose it is not entitled to any consideration on that account. A very reputable and substantial citizen, engaged in this business for many years in my State, writes me thus—I will read but one paragraph of his letter:

"And although we have from $50,000 to $60,000 employed in our business for the past two years, in consequence of the frauds committed by a good many in our trade against the revenue, neither Mr. Dean nor his partners have been able to make a living; and he has determined, that unless modification of the present tax is made, and more stringency in compelling delinquent tanners to make just returns to the Government, to leave the business and try some other employment whereby a subsistence can be obtained."

He complains of the administration of the law as well as of the provision itself. The tax, I learn, is reduced one per cent. in this bill; it was six per cent., but is now reduced to five per cent.; and I propose to reduce it two per cent. more, making it three per cent. I think that the committee, considering the fact that they have not had this particular question before them, and that I intended to place it before them, ought not to resist this amendment. It will, perhaps, not make so much difference to the revenue as to the parties engaged in this useful branch of industry. I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This tax has been fixed after very great consideration by both committees, and I do not see any occasion to change it, neither from the individual case nor the views submitted.

Mr. CONNESS. I think the Senator is right about that, that we should make no change upon the views of an individual; but the honorable Senator will remember that an individual may be a very good representative of a class.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I believe the trade generally is content with this tax as it stands.

Mr. CONNESS. I differ with the Senator upon that point.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONNESS. I give notice that I shall renew the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have received a letter from a manufacturer of farming implements in the State of Indiana, calling my attention to the one hundred and seventh line on page 165, and I wish to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Finance Committee in regard to it. That clause, which is part of the free list, now reads:

Plows, cultivators, harrows, straw and hay cutters, planters and seed-drills, horse-rakes, hand-rakes, cotton-gins, grain-cradles, and winnowing-mills."

This writer says:

"If the last-named article—

That is, the winnowing-mills—

"is to have any force or in any way benefit the West or the Northwest, it should read 'threshing or winnowing mills or machines.'"

I do not know for certain whether that is provided for in the one hundred and twenty-third line, "reapers, mowers, threshing-machines, and separators." Will that answer the purpose?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly. A winnowing-mill is a part of a threshing-machine.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from Ohio is more familiar with that class of articles than I am; and if that is so, I shall not offer an amendment. I understand that the clause which I have just read in the one hundred and twenty-third line stands in the bill, as the proposition of the committee to strike it out was disagreed to.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish to amend the bill on page 163, between lines fifty-four and fifty-five, by inserting, "iron roofs for railroad depots, and the iron therefor," so as to make iron roofs for railroad depots and the iron of which they are composed free from taxation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why should they be free from tax any more than iron for other things?

Mr. HOWARD. The reason is that, like railroad bridges, they are very essential to the safety of property and persons passing over a railroad and in store awaiting transit. I think we ought to encourage this species of manufacture. I will simply relate what has happened in my own city, and that, perhaps, will be the best argument that I can present to the Senate on the subject.

We had two large and spacious depots at Detroit, the roofs of which were made of wood. During the last fall one of them, that of the Michigan Central depot, a very spacious and ample building, filled with property belonging to the company and to shippers and owners, took fire in consequence of the bursting of a cask of varnish, which is very inflammable and which it is impossible to prevent being carried on railroads. Such was the inflammable character of the material that it set the depot on fire almost instantaneously, and the whole building was destroyed. The roof being made of wood took fire almost instantly, and the whole building was consumed, notwithstanding the efforts of a most efficient fire department, using steam engines. The loss to the company could not have been much less than a million dollars. During the last spring the other depot, known as the Detroit and Milwaukee depot, was destroyed by means of a similar accident; the roof and the walls also of the latter depot being made of wood. If these two buildings had been roofed with iron I suppose there is no doubt that they would have been saved.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask my friend from Michigan whether these roofs were not built before the tax law went into operation, and whether he thinks the railroad companies were prevented from putting on iron roofs by the tax law.

Mr. HOWARD. Undoubtedly the roofs were built before the tax law came into operation; but they have to be built again.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask my friend from Michigan if he does not think that the Michigan Central railroad and other railroads are just as able to build iron roofs as citizens are to protect their own buildings.

Mr. HOWARD. They are able to build iron roofs probably, and so is the Senator from Ohio, if he is worth the money to procure the materials and manufacture the article; but there lies the difficulty. The iron is so expensive, according to the present prices and the present taxation, as to make it almost impossible, at least very onerous, for railroad companies to construct the roofs of their depots of iron. I might allude to other cases where similar accidents have occurred. I submit that it is nothing more than just, both to the companies and to the public, who travel and whose property is in transit upon these roads, that this simple favor should be extended both to the company and to the public. It is for the safety and security of the public more particularly that I ask that these roofs shall be placed upon the free list.

Mr. SHERMAN. The railroad interest has probably been more relieved by this bill than any other single interest in the country. There has been thrown off the tax on freights, amounting to $4,800,000. The tax on iron, which enters largely into the cost of every railroad, is very much reduced. The tax has been thrown off railroad iron and iron bridges and also pig iron; and on the great body of articles that are consumed by railroads the duty is now thrown off. There is probably no domestic interest in the United States that is so much relieved by this amended tax bill as the railroad interest. The tax on rubber springs and on nearly everything that enters into the manufacture of machinery, locomotives, and all repairs on locomotives has been stricken off. The double tax that has heretofore been complained of by railroad builders is removed. Certainly we ought not to carry the discrimination in their favor any further. As a matter of course it would be a very convenient thing to have an iron roof on a railroad depot; when it catches fire, it would not be so likely to burn. The same argument would apply to any private house, or to the building of the Capitol or to the building of a State House or to any other public building; it would be cheaper to have a stone or iron roof than a wooden roof; but we do not therefore propose to make exceptions in their favor. It seems to me the exception in this case is totally indefensible on principle.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes two, noes not counted.

Mr. HOWARD. I now move to amend the bill on page 163, line fifty-four, by striking out the words "and castings for iron bridges" and inserting the words "and their several parts;" so that the clause will read, "iron bridges and their several parts."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I can only state that the exemption is confined to castings all through the bill. This is an effort to extend it to wrought iron, which is not done in any case. We have relieved them so far as iron bridges and castings for iron bridges are concerned; and if wrought iron goes into their construction in a greater or less degree, it should take the same course as all other wrought iron that goes into other machinery. There is no reason for extending the exemption any further, in my judgment. I do not think these railroad institutions—a mere favored interest, and most of them very large and rich corporations—exhibit a very proper spirit in attempting to get rid of all taxation. This amendment would be introducing something entirely new into the bill which is not in any part of it.

Mr. HOWARD. The honorable member from Maine seems to have the impression that iron bridges are made almost entirely of cast iron. At least one half of the iron material entering into a bridge is wrought iron, not cast iron.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The exemption does not go any further in any part of the bill than simply to the castings, with the exception of bar and railroad iron.

Mr. HOWARD. Far the most costly portion of an iron bridge is made of wrought iron; and it is required to be manufactured with reference to being put into a particular bridge before it can be used. It is just as necessary that the wrought iron of a bridge should be prepared beforehand with reference to the particular position which it is to occupy in the bridge as that the various parts of a watch should be thus prepared. There can be no difficulty at all in guarding the revenues against any fraud that may be suspected.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not the slightest. If we give up collecting the revenue, of course there will be no trouble about frauds.

Mr. HOWARD. The difficulty is the high price of iron, and the next to impossibility of the manufacturer's proceeding with this enterprise if the wrought iron which enters into the fabric is to be taxed after it has been procured by the manufacturer for the purpose of going into the bridge. There is the great difficulty. I hope that this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. GRIMES. All the iron that goes into a bridge, as I understand, is rolled iron. It is what may perhaps be called dimension iron. It is rolled in the particular form in which it is to be used in the bridge. It is not wrought iron in the sense in which wrought iron is usually understood. It is not iron which can be made into the various forms into which blacksmiths convert wrought iron. Now, where is the principle in exempting railroad iron, as the committees of both Houses have reported that we should do, and as we have agreed to do, and not exempting also the rolled iron that goes to make the bridge structure upon which the road is to pass when it crosses a stream? Does not the same principle apply in this case as in the other? Perhaps the amendment of the Senator from Michigan would be more appropriate if it spoke of the rolled parts of the bridge. We have exempted the structure as an entirety from duty. We have exempted the rolled rails on which the track runs until it comes to the bridge. Now, is there any reason that can be assigned why we shall not also exempt the parts of the bridge that support the superstructure upon which the train passes when it goes over this cavity in the earth?

Mr. SHERMAN. The objection to the amendment is the uncertainty and ambiguity that will be created by its adoption. The bill now exempts nearly all kinds of cast iron from taxes, especially all cast iron used by railroads. The only rolled iron that I believe is exempted from the tax is railroad iron. This is a special exemption in favor of the railroad interest, not probably defensible. If you were called upon to defend the exemption of railroad iron it would be very difficult to defend it upon the ground that it is an exception in favor of the railroad interest; and yet this exception is made in their favor. They want the exemption to extend to the whole list. They might as well say that all the rails used in a freight depot should be exempted from taxation because you exempt cast iron, the nails, and the repairs of machinery. We have exempted locomotives and a certain class of repairs.

It seems to me, the difficulty will be this: it is true that in the city of Detroit, where there is a very large establishment for constructing railroad bridges, they may at that shop construct all the parts of a railroad bridge, and if they do, they are exempt under the general exemption made of railroad bridges; but in every railroad bridge there are component parts made at other rolling-mills. Now, if you exempt all the parts of a railroad bridge, when a part is rolled out in Pennsylvania, how can it be determined whether that will be used as a part of a railroad bridge or not? It may not be. Very much of the iron used in a railroad bridge may be used also for building purposes. It is therefore impossible for us to go any further than we have already done. You have exempted the iron railroad bridge; and that will include all the work done by the man who builds the bridges; but when you extend the exemption to the parts of a railroad bridge, you go back to the foundry; you go back to the Pennsylvania roller; you go back to the man who manufactures the rails, or contributes by his work to any portion of this railroad bridge; and you make uncertainty and ambiguity. It seems to me, therefore, that this interest is sufficiently protected when you exempt the railroad bridge and the castings, the materials that go into it.

In the case that I know the Senator wishes to provide for—the case in Detroit—a very intelligent gentleman came to me and spoke to me about this clause, and there is no doubt that as it now stands it will embrace all that he desires, because by the exemption of the railroad bridge you exempt all the work done by a man in constructing that bridge; but it ought not to go back and exempt all the work that has been done on the various parts by some one else.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the Senator understand from this language, "iron bridges," that all the materials that enter into an iron bridge when it is a completed structure are to be, before they enter into the structure, exempted from tax?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; but the Senator wishes to make it so.

Mr. HOWARD. That is the very point on which he and I differ.

Mr. SHERMAN. He wishes to make it so, and I say it is impossible, because the assessor cannot tell, when the iron is rolled out, whether it is to be used for a bridge or a house.

Mr. HOWARD. Very well; then all I ask is that when it is procured by the manufacturer as a bridge, and formed into some part of a bridge, so molded, hammered, bent, or formed, as to be made suitable to enter into a bridge and form a part of it as such, it shall be exempted from that time forth from taxes. I do not ask that the raw material, the commercial article, the iron found at the ironmonger's shop shall be exempted from taxation.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is precisely what the Senator's amendment will do.

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. All the parts that enter into a bridge are to be exempt. You exempt the railroad bridge, which is made by the contractor or constructor, and then propose to exempt all the parts that enter into and form part of that bridge.

Mr. HOWARD. When they are formed and fashioned to become parts of the bridge.

Mr. SHERMAN. Those parts are made in a remote region; and how can you distinguish them? It seems to me we have gone far enough.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand the Senator from Ohio to admit that the only objection there is to this proposition is that it may lead to fraud, inasmuch as it will be impossible to distinguish between the iron that may be rolled and used for bridges and that which may be rolled for other purposes. I think he is entirely in error in that. I do not suppose that any iron company ever rolled a bit of iron that could be used for bridge purposes without first having a contract with some company by which the iron was to be used in a specific way, and having the exact dimensions of the bridge; but in order to obviate all difficulty on that subject, I suggest to the Senator from Michigan that he adopt this phraseology, "and all iron rolled specially for and used in the structure of bridges."

Mr. HOWARD. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. That will not apply to spikes; it will not apply to wrought iron; it will not apply to the various forms in which iron can be used, and which the Senator from Ohio supposes may be objectionable, but only to the large dimension iron, which can only be used in the structure of a bridge, and after a contract is made. There will be no difficulty in following it from the place where it is rolled to the place where it is used.

Mr. CLARK. It seems to me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa is worse than the other. I fear very much that if the amendment were adopted all the iron rolled in the country would be rolled for bridges, and I do not believe we would get any duty. Everybody would say, this is intended for such and such a bridge; and we should never get any duty. We would have to rely entirely on their statement.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not know what kind of bridges the Senator from New Hampshire has been in the habit of seeing; but the iron in the bridges that I have seen could not be used by blacksmiths, if they were torn to pieces, for making horseshoes or anything of that sort.

Mr. SHERMAN. The kind of iron that is used for a certain class of bridges that I know something about is one and one and a half inch pound iron, which has a screw at the end, and is used as a part of a trestle bridge; and that can be used for almost all the purposes for which iron can be used.

Mr. GRIMES. That is the kind of iron that they use in wooden bridges.

Mr. SHERMAN. Trestle bridges.

Mr. GRIMES. We are speaking about iron bridges, and this amendment applies to iron bridges, and not to wooden bridges. The whole subject under consideration is iron bridges; and if the Senator ever saw any of that kind of iron in an iron bridge he has seen something that I have never seen.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The difficulty of adopting such an amendment would be the great liability to fraud under it, as the Senator from Ohio has stated. All of this work might be done at one establishment; but this bar iron, rolled iron, &c., can be used for any purpose, and they could pass it off and escape taxation by saying that it was for the making of bridges. What proof can we have that it ever goes into the construction of a bridge? It is not taxed; it is free; and whether it will be absolutely used in the construction of a bridge we can never know. It can be used just as well for anything else, or sold and used for anything else, precisely. The reason why there is no chance for fraud in the case of castings is, that when it is once cast for a particular purpose it is good for nothing else, and if broken up, it is ruined. There is no danger, therefore, to the revenue with reference to castings once made. But if you apply the principle to wrought iron, and let it escape from taxation in a large establishment, how are you going to follow it to know whether it is to be used in the construction of a bridge? The bridge is not made at one factory. The result will be that it will open the door to fraud, and there is no knowing how much of this iron may escape taxation under this provision. I hope the Senate will not think of adopting such an amendment, simply for the purpose of giving additional aid to these very large and rich corporations and railroad companies.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Maine entirely misapprehends this question. These bridges are absolutely made and put up at the factories, be they longer or shorter, and every particle of the iron composing each part of the bridge is rolled or cut for that specific purpose.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They are not taken in that way to the places where they are to be put up, I suppose. They must be taken to pieces again.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly, and they are put up at the place where the bridge is to be. I have seen a bridge a thousand feet long put up at a factory.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was not carried in that state to the place where it was to be put up.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly not; it was taken to pieces, and then put up again. All the iron rolled for a bridge is just as distinctly for that purpose as if cast for that purpose.

Now, Mr. President, the object of this amendment is to induce the building of iron bridges. Tax iron bridges and leave wooden bridges without tax, and you offer a premium for the construction of these unsafe, unreliable wooden bridges, which ought to be abandoned, and there ought to be a law compelling the use of iron instead of wood. By taxing the iron and leaving the wooden bridge untaxed you actually offer a premium for the use of the unsafe and unreliable wooden bridges. It is a mistake to suppose that there is any danger from exempting the parts of the rolled iron rolled for that purpose. It can be used for no other purpose. It must be used for that specific purpose. There are but two or three establishments in the United States where these bridges are manufactured. I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, which is just as acceptable as that of my colleague, will be adopted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope not, unless the Senate mean to exempt everything.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The amendment, as modified by the Senator from Michigan, will now be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed on page 163, line fifty-four, to strike out the words "and castings for iron bridges" and to insert—

Mr. GRIMES. Those words should not be stricken out, but the words which I propose should be added right on to that line.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of line fifty-three the following: "and all iron rolled specially for, and used in, the construction of bridges."

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, I see no force in the objection insisted upon by the Senator from Maine with regard to the exemption of the various parts of an iron bridge. He seems to see a danger that the revenue will be defrauded by a perversion of the materials to some other purpose after they have been procured by the manufacturer. Undoubtedly there is a possibility that such frauds may be committed; but is there not the same possibility in reference to a clause, which lies in close juxtaposition to this, exempting from all taxation "masts, spars, ship and vessel blocks, and tree-nail wedges, and deck-plugs, cordage, ropes, and cables made of vegetable fiber?" Is there not a possibility that some of these materials might be perverted and put to some other use? Certainly there is; and if there is any force in the Senator's objection against our proposition, there is force in the objection against this same proposition which I have read exempting cordage, ropes, cables, &c., from taxation. The truth is, that there is no more difficulty in identifying the various parts of an iron bridge than there is in identifying masts, spars, &c., that are prepared or procured for the manufacturer for ship-building. Both classes of materials rest upon precisely the same foundation. I hope, in order to encourage the building of iron bridges, and thus to promote the safety of the public in person and property, that the Senate will adopt the amendment which has been offered.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I understand that freeing railroad bridges from taxation is relieving the bridges after they are constructed from taxation as a construction; and to strike out bridge castings from this clause is to strike out that portion of the bridge which is made of castings. The tax upon bar iron which is used in the construction of bridges is not interfered with by the bill that is reported; but there is no tax upon pig metal, and if you take off the tax from bridge castings there will be no tax upon that part of the structure, and this is an effort to get bar iron that is used in the construction likewise relieved. The fair way would be to give a drawback when it is so used and put in bridges, in that careful way in which we always make provision for drawbacks.

When a farmer gets bar iron for the use of his farm, or when any builder gets bar iron for the use of his construction, he has to pay to the manufacturer the tax, which is a part of the cost. This is simply a reduction of the tax on a bridge as a manufacture after it is constructed and put up. It is simply a reduction of bridge castings—cast iron used in the construction of bridges. A large portion of some bridges is of iron castings.

When the war broke out our people were engaged in building a great many iron bridges at the South; they have now resumed it; and there, where for very long distances they have no stone to make the abutment and the piers with, they make them of iron castings. So far as they are made of castings, the bill now relieves them from all tax. We are using iron very extensively in these structures, because it does not wear out so readily and is not burned so easily, and resist longer the influences of decay; and the result is to have the structures more secure and more permanent. I am not against cheapening iron bridges; I think it is very well to do so; but we must get a revenue to pay the interest of the public debt and support this Government; and if we knock out everything that pays a tax, or would cheapen articles, or be convenient to some portion of the people, we shall have no taxes left. I think in prudence and justice we should not run too fast with these exemptions, and I shall therefore vote against this amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I offer the following amendment to come in after line twenty-eight hundred and twenty-four of section nine, on page 123:

That section one hundred and four be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any person carrying on or doing express business shall be subject to and pay a tax of three per cent. on the gross amount of all the receipts of such express business in excess of the amount paid by such person to any railroad company or companies for the transportation of his cars and freight.

This amendment proposes to alter the existing law, in the first place, by striking out the words "company, firm, or corporation," which is in accordance with other amendments in the bill, because the word "person" is defined to include all these; and secondly by striking out the word "duty." But the main point of the amendment is the latter clause. It is to relieve express companies from paying a tax on that part of their earnings which they pay over to the railroad company that gives them their transportation, the railroad company being exempt from paying any tax upon its tonnage earnings. It seems to me that when you exempt the one and levy that tax on the other, you are making a very gross discrimination between them, and they are to some extent rivals in the transportation at least of certain kinds of freight. The object is to relieve express companies simply from paying tax on that part of their earnings which goes over to the railroad company that transports their cars and their contents.

Mr. FESSENDEN. One objection is that the fair inference would be that if railroad companies are relieved so far as freight is concerned, the express companies would get their proportion of that relief.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. But they are working under contracts already made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But their contracts will be out after a time. It is not worth while to legislate in reference to very short periods. That is the first objection.

The next objection—for this matter was considered very deliberately in the committee—is that if there is any set of people in the world who can afford to pay the tax, it is the express companies. They are universally profitable, and the tax is in no way oppressive. My friend from West Virginia has for some reason or other this favorite notion of his, but it has not struck the rest of the committee as it has struck him. I hope this change will not be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I concurred heartily in the view expressed by the chairman of the committee when it was presented; but there was one view mentioned to me by a person interested in this business this morning which I think it is proper to state to the Senate. He said that their chief competitors were these vast transportation lines called star lines, &c., transportation lines connected with the railroad companies, which are expressly relieved by this act from a tax upon transportation. No transportation company pays any tax upon money received for transportation. Express companies are now required under the law to pay a tax on the very money they pay to the railroad companies, while the railroad companies and all these other competing companies which carry property carry it free from any tax. The express company not only pays on its earnings, but also on the amount it pays to the railroad companies. That presents their claim to this partial relief pretty strongly, in my judgment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The answer is obvious. There is a wonderful difference in price between carrying an article by an express company and by these transportation companies.

Mr. SHERMAN. But they pay the railroad companies for express transportation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know they do; but take the price which express companies charge for carrying a bundle and compare it with the freight over a railroad. Bundles and packages and innumerable little things are carried by express, and transportation companies do not compete with express companies except in matters of heavy freight; but the difference between the comparatively enormous charges of express companies and those of railroad companies in the ordinary course of business is exceedingly great, and covers all the tax. Their very great prosperity is enough to satisfy anybody that they are not oppressed by this tax.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I do not think the last argument of the Senator from Maine is a strictly fair one in any case. If you are going to tax anybody that can bear it, you have only got to single out the people who make money and put the whole of the taxes on them. That express companies have made money, I believe is a fact that cannot be disputed; but we also know that recently, at least, they have lost immense sums of money by robbery, and their risk is very great for they insure everything they do carry.

Again, as to their rates being higher than those of railroad companies: they take your goods from your door and convey them to the car and then deliver them at the other end of the route. I remember on one occasion going from here only to Baltimore with a trunk, and I paid more for the transportation of myself and trunk from the railroad depot to a hotel in Baltimore than the fare for the forty miles amounted to.

I put this on the ground that it is an act of justice to these companies in reference to what has been done for others; that if you continue to charge them on this, it is establishing an inequality and making them the subjects of an inequality to their detriment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will this reduce their prices for carrying articles? [Laughter.]

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Oh, yes, certainly. [Laughter.]

Mr. GUTHRIE. These express companies are not very popular in the community. They are supposed to make a good deal of money, and I never knew anybody to be very popular who was supposed to get more than his share. An express company on a long line, say from New York or Boston to Cincinnati or Louisville, make arrangements with the railroad companies to carry a car for them or furnish them room in a car, for which they pay each road so much annually or so much per hundred-weight carried. They undertake with the railroad company to bear all risks, receive all goods offered, and deliver them, and bear the railroad company harmless except from damages that arise from the negligence of the railroad company. It is for that guarantee, that insurance, and for collecting the goods and delivering them to the parties for whom they are intended at the place of destination, that express companies make a charge beyond that which is allowed to the railroad companies. Every railroad, to a certain extent, runs in competition with the express companies; but their guarantee under the liabilities of the law is not as good as the personal guarantee of the express companies, and hence the people prefer to patronize the latter. If an express company undertakes to carry $100,000, and a robbery is committed before the money reaches its destination, the owner expects immediate payment, and not payment at the end of a lawsuit. When I was in the Treasury Department one of these express companies lost $50,000 of Government money intrusted to them. They made a very fair representation of the case, but as Secretary of the Treasury I told them that they could never carry a dollar more until they paid that, and they paid it up, for they wanted the business. So it is with individuals; they require them to stand up to their bargains. No railroad company that I know of would be able to respond at once to such a liability. The railroad companies are not able to keep on hand the amount necessary to meet such contingencies. The Adams Express Company, which I believe is one of the strongest there is, has a surplus invested which is probably sufficient to meet all the hazards, and they do it very promptly. It is impossible that the community can have these guarantees and these extra services and this prompt payment on the part of the express companies without paying something in return. They are running lightning express lines by arrangements with the railroad companies. They charge more than the railroad companies; but if the railroad companies were to undertake to do the business it would be broken up in a very short time, because there is not the same liability and security to the public.

We found during the war that the Adams Express Company made a great deal of money. They were the only line that were allowed by the military authorities to carry anything over the Louisville and Nashville railroad. The railroad company was prohibited from carrying anything except Government supplies and Government troops. The railroad company could not carry a dollar's worth of freight over the road, and the express companies had the business all to themselves. This threw an immense and very profitable business into their hands, and they got to be exceedingly odious to everybody who did not like to see other people grow rich fast. I am satisfied that if the public have the accommodation of the express lines and have their guarantee, they will always have to pay for it. Most of these express companies pay for the transportation of their goods to the railroad companies fully one half of their receipts; and a tax of three per cent. on their gross receipts is equivalent to six per cent. on their earnings, because they pay one half and sometimes a greater proportion to the railroad companies who transport their freight. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer an amendment on page 197, in section [thirty-five] thirty-three, line seven, after the word "gallon" to insert "until the 1st day of November, 1866, and after that date $1 50 on each gallon until the 1st day of April, 1867, and after that date one dollar on each gallon."

This is simply a proposition to reduce the rate of tax upon whisky ultimately to one dollar a gallon. The amendment proposes that the reduction shall not commence until the 1st day of November next, and then $1 50 on each gallon shall be paid until the 1st day of April following, and after the 1st day of April next year, that the rate of tax upon whisky shall be one dollar per gallon.

I am induced to offer this amendment from several considerations. I believe, in the first place, it will yield more revenue. In the next place it will reduce a very large amount of temptation that there is in the country for illegitimate distillation of spirits and for the commission of fraud upon the public revenue and of perjury. I believe, from the slight information I have upon the subject, that there are now thousands of persons all over the United States engaged in distilling spirits in fraud of the revenue, clandestinely and illegitimately. I believe that they are encouraged and rewarded to do so by the high rate of tax upon the distillation of whisky and other spirits. It is a principle that taxes may become so high as to destroy revenue, too high to produce the largest amount of revenue; and I believe that that is the state of the present tax upon whisky. My own opinion is that it is too high to produce the largest amount of revenue. Any evasion of the law by spurious distillation is accompanied by more or less of crime and of demoralization. I think the reduction of the rate of taxation as I have proposed would have a tendency to remove very much of the temptation to fraud, perjury, and crime that is certainly stimulated under the present high tax upon whisky, and I think it would be a measure not only of political economy but of morality also to reduce the rate of tax upon whisky as I have proposed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. The other provisions of the bill have been arranged with reference to that particular provision, the free list, &c.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. I propose another amendment on page 61, in line twelve hundred and eighty-six, to strike out after the word "distillers" the words "shall pay $100," and to insert:

Who shall distill fifty barrels or less of brandy or whisky, twenty dollars; and every distiller who shall distill more than fifty barrels, for each and every one hundred barrels above that quantity shall pay an additional ten dollars.

The intent of this amendment is to establish a graduation of the cost of special licenses. In my State—and I suppose it is so in other sections of the United States—a great many small distillers consume their own grain, grain that they themselves raise upon their farms, in distillation. Many of them make under fifty barrels, and very few above that quantity. There is no reason in justice why a man who distills grain which he raises upon his own farm, and in that form seeks to find a market for it, and who makes but fifty barrels of whisky or less, should be charged as much for a special license as an establishment that makes two thousand barrels. There are some distillers that make more than that quantity, but greatly less than any of the large distilling establishments of the country. The effect of this bill, of its various and complicated and oppressive provisions, will be to induce these small distillers to cease their operation of distilling wholly. The revenue that is to result from this special tax on distillation is increased or diminished in proportion to the number of persons that are engaged in distilling. This high tax of $100 upon every distiller, and the various other most vexatious and oppressive provisions of this bill, which I suppose are necessary, that bear upon distillers, will have the effect of inducing those who distill a small quantity to discontinue the operation entirely. If this amendment shall be adopted, and a graduated price for this special permission to distill shall be established, it will have the effect, I think, of encouraging the continuation of their business by the small distillers, and of bringing others into the operation of distilling their own grain or the grain of their neighbors; and in that way I think it would be a provision that would excite and increase the revenue instead of diminishing it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I propose an amendment to come in after the word "dividends" in line thirty-one hundred and thirty-five of section nine of this bill, on page 136:

That section one hundred and twenty-two be amended by adding thereto the following proviso: Provided, That whenever any such railroad, canal, turnpike, canal navigation, or slack-water company is indebted as herein set forth, and shall owe accrued interest or matured coupons upon its indebtedness, the tax of five per cent. on the amount of all such interest or coupons shall be payable to the Government whenever said interest or coupons shall be ordered by any such company to be paid to the person to whom the same shall be due and owing, or whenever the payment thereof, as aforesaid, by any such company, with or without previous order, shall have been commenced.

I will explain in a word or two what this amendment is. The section of the old law which it proposes to amend is section one hundred and twenty-two. That provides—"That any railroad, canal, turnpike, canal navigation, or slack-water company indebted for any money for which bonds or other evidence of indebtedness have been issued, payable in one or more years after date, upon which interest is stipulated to be paid, or coupons representing the interest, or any such company that may have declared any dividend in scrip, or money due or payable to its stockholders, as part of the earnings, profits, income, or gains of such company, and all profits of such company, carried to the account of any fund, or used for construction, shall be subject to and pay a duty of five per cent. on the amount of all such interest, or coupons, dividends, or profits, whenever the same shall be payable; and said companies are hereby authorized to deduct and withhold from all payments, on account of any interest, or coupons and dividends due and payable as aforesaid, the duty of five per cent.; and the payment of the amount of said duty so deducted from the interest, or coupons, or dividends, and certified by the president or treasurer of said company, shall discharge said company from that amount of the dividend, or interest, or coupon, on the bonds or other evidences of their indebtedness so held by any person or party whatever, except where said companies may have contracted otherwise."

This construction has been given to that provision: that as soon as the coupons became due the company shall pay five per cent. on them, whether the company is in a condition to pay the coupons or not. In other words, it is so construed as to make the payment of the tax to be upon the indebtedness of the company. This was intended to be an income tax, that the five per cent. should be paid by the company, instead of the party to whom the interest is payable. The proposition I now make is, that it shall be in fact an income tax; that it shall be a tax upon the interest paid to the bond-holder, instead of being a tax against the company upon its indebtedness. Congress did not intend to tax the indebtedness of a corporation, but intended to tax the income of the bond-holders against the company, and provided that the tax should be paid directly by the company to the Government instead of collecting the tax from the bond-holder after the coupon or interest had been paid.

It seems to me this is right. There is one company in the State of Indiana that has not been able to pay its coupons, but it has been required to pay the tax upon the coupons when it was not able to meet them. My proposition is that when a company pays the coupons, and not before, it shall pay the five per cent. tax upon them into the Treasury.

Mr. SHEERMAN. The substance of this amendment I had intended to offer myself. The tax, as it is now imposed, is really a tax upon an insolvent corporation. This is a mode of collecting the income tax levied upon persons who own stock in incorporate companies or are bond-holders of those companies. I think there ought to be some provision to meet the case stated by the Senator from Indiana. There are many corporations in the western States, and perhaps some in other portions of the country, that are laboring under the difficulty which that Senator has stated. This was really intended to be an income tax of five per cent. levied upon coupons or interest paid by corporations. In some cases the corporations themselves are insolvent, and cannot and do not pay their interest to the bond-holders. The tax, however, is notwithstanding levied upon the corporations, and it is collected from their other property, adding to their insolvency, and in some cases really taking away from them the power to go on.

The section was intended to provide for an income tax, and for convenience of collection levied it on the company rather than upon the bond-holder. The effect of the section as practically construed, however, is to add to the insolvency of an insolvent corporation, and take away from them the means of paying their liabilities. I think, therefore, some such provision as this ought to be inserted. I commenced to draw one, but I have not yet completed it. I had thought of putting it in the shape of a proviso, providing that whenever any of the companies named, by reason of their inability to pay their interest, should in fact fail to pay it, the tax should be postponed until they did pay it. I think the amendment of the Senator from Indiana uses more words than are necessary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If it can be put into a clear shape, I do not know that I shall object to it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think it is clear enough as I have drawn it:

That whenever any such railroad, canal, turnpike, canal navigation, or slack-water company is indebted as herein set forth, and shall owe accrued interest or matured coupons upon its indebtedness, the tax of five per cent. on the amount of all such interest or coupons shall be payable to Government whenever said interest or coupons shall be ordered by any such company to be paid to the person to whom the same shall be due and owing, or whenever the payment thereof, as aforesaid, by any such company, with or without previous order, shall have been commenced.

The amendment is simply that this five per cent. shall be paid by the company as soon as the company shall order the payment of the coupons or interest, or as soon as the company without such order shall commence the payment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would like to amend that amendment to carry out the object.

Mr. FESSENDEN. While the amendment is being put in shape, I suppose I may as well be allowed to offer some verbal amendments. I have a long list of them here.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I withdraw my amendment for the present.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 33, in line five hundred and seventy-one, I move to strike out the words "under this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On the same page, in line five hundred and eighty-eight, I move to strike out the words "under the provisions of this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line five hundred and ninety-three, on page 34, I move to strike out the words "arising under this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line seven hundred and ninety-nine, on page 42, I move to strike out the words "this act" and insert "law."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line eight hundred and nine, on the same page, I move to strike out "this act" and to insert "law."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That alteration will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line eight hundred and twenty, on page 43, I move to strike out "this act" and insert "law."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line eight hundred and twenty-two, on the same page, I move to strike out "virtue of this act" and to insert "law;" and I move also the same amendment in line eight hundred and twenty-four.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line eight hundred and ninety-four, on page 46, I move to strike out the words "under this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend, on page 50, in line nine hundred and ninety-four, by striking out "this act" and inserting "law."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend in line eight hundred and ninety-five, on page 46, by inserting "fraudulent" before "selling," and by striking out the words "in fraud of said laws."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That change will be made.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have availed myself of the phraseology of the Senator from Ohio, and I now offer my amendment in this shape:

Insert after line thirty-one hundred and thirty-five of section nine: That section one hundred and twenty-two be amended by adding thereto the following proviso: Provided, That whenever any of the companies mentioned in this section shall be unable to pay the interest on their indebtedness, and shall in fact fail to pay such interest, in such cases the tax levied by this section shall not be paid to the United States until said companies resume the payment of interest on their indebtedness.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In line eleven hundred and forty-one, on page 56, I move to strike out "under this act;" and in line eleven hundred and fifty-six, on the same page, to strike out the same words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 57, in line eleven hundred and seventy-nine, I move to strike out the words "under this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 58 I move to amend in line eleven hundred and ninety-eight by striking out "under this act," and by striking out the same words in line twelve hundred and seven.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 59, line twelve hundred and twenty-one, I move to strike out the words "under this act;" and also to strike out the same words in line twelve hundred and twenty-nine and in line twelve hundred and thirty-five, on the same page.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 60, line twelve hundred and forty-nine, I move to strike out the words "under this act;" and in line twelve hundred and fifty-two to strike out the words "within the meaning of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 61, line twelve hundred and seventy-one, I move to strike out the words "under this act;" and also to strike out the same words in line twelve hundred and seventy-eight and line twelve hundred and eighty-four.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 62, line twelve hundred and ninety, I move to strike out the words "under this act;" and also to strike out the same words in line thirteen hundred and four.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 63, line thirteen hundred and twenty-three, I move to strike out the words "under this act," and also to strike out the same words in line thirteen hundred and thirty-one.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 64, line thirteen hundred and forty-nine, I move to strike out the words "under this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 65, line thirteen hundred and seventy-two, I move to strike out the words "under this act," and also to strike out the same words in line thirteen hundred and eighty.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 66, line thirteen hundred and ninety-four, I move to strike out the words "under this act," and also to strike out the same words in lines thirteen hundred and ninety-eight, fourteen hundred and four, and fourteen hundred and ten.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 67, line fourteen hundred and sixteen, I move to strike out the words "under this act;" and also to strike out the same words in line fourteen hundred and twenty-two and line fourteen hundred and thirty-three; and also to strike out the words "within the meaning of this act" in line fourteen hundred and thirty-seven.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 68, line fourteen hundred and fifty-four, I move to strike out the words "under this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 69, line fourteen hundred and sixty-eight, I move to strike out the words "under this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 70, line fourteen hundred and ninety, I move to strike out the words "under this act;" and also to strike out the same words in line fifteen hundred and four and line fifteen hundred and nine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 75, lines sixteen hundred and eighteen and sixteen hundred and nineteen, I move to strike out the words "within the meaning of this act;" in lines sixteen hundred and thirty-two and sixteen hundred and thirty-three to strike out the words "for the purpose of this act;" and in line sixteen hundred and thirty-nine to strike out the words "under this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 76, line sixteen hundred and sixty-four, I move to strike out the words "under this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. On page 70, line fifteen hundred and two, I move to strike out the words "or persons," and in the same line to change the word "make" to "makes," so as to read, "any person who makes for sale photographs," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 77, lines sixteen hundred and seventy-five and sixteen hundred and seventy-six, I move to strike out the words "anything in this act" and to insert "any provision of law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 88, line nineteen hundred and forty-one, after the word "under," the words "the fifty-eighth section of the act to which this is an amendment" have been stricken out and the words "this act" inserted. I now move to strike out the words

"this act" and to insert "the provisions of law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 93, line two thousand and seventy-one, I move to strike out the words "this act" and to insert "law," and that the same amendment be made in line two thousand and eighty-two.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 96, line twenty-one hundred and fifty-nine, I move to strike out the words "this act" and to insert "law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. On page 79, line seven hundred and twenty-one, I move to strike out the words "taxed by this act" and insert "upon which a tax is imposed by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside temporarily to enable the Chair to receive a message from the House of Representatives.

DEATH OF HON. JAMES HUMPHREY.

The following message was received from the House of Representatives by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to communicate to the Senate information of the death of Hon. JAMES HUMPHREY, late a Representative from the State of New York, and the proceedings of the House thereon.

The resolutions of the House of Representatives were read.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, if the frequency of the messages that have been communicated to us since the commencement of this session, that another member of Congress is dead, shall serve to remind us of the uncertainty of human life and to prepare us for the divine injunction, "Be ye also ready," then as these tidings are made known our grief should be assuaged and our sorrow lessened.

Hon. JAMES HUMPHREY, a member of the House of Representatives from the third congressional district of the State of New York, died suddenly at his residence in Brooklyn, county of Kings, on Saturday, the 16th instant, in the fifty-fifth year of his age. For several years he had been more or less an invalid, and many times his attacks had endangered his life.

He was a son of the late Rev. Heman Humphrey, for many years president of Amherst College, and he possessed the fine mind for which his father was distinguished—a mind corresponding, in the delicacy of its tastes and the elegance of its culture, with his sensitive physical organization, and the peculiar grace of his manners.

He was born in Fairfield county, Connecticut, in 1811, and graduated at Amherst College when but nineteen years of age, and immediately commenced his legal studies at Yale College law school. From that institution he removed to New York, and became a student in the law office of the late Seth P. Staples. After his admission to the bar he married and removed to Louisville, Kentucky, where he practiced his profession successfully until 1838, when he removed his law office to the city of New York and his residence to Brooklyn. He soon secured a large business, and became actively identified with the leading commercial and corporate interests of the city of New York, and was the legal adviser of the best merchants and bankers in that city, all of whom ever reposed in him the most implicit confidence. As a lawyer he was distinguished for his learning, candor, fairness, and clearness of thought, and he invariably gave satisfaction to his clients. He possessed a rare faculty of attaching men to him, and was always faithful to every tie of friendly or political relationship. In common with so many of our public men who have gained honorable positions and been of service to the State, his first active occupation was that of a teacher. The first public office that he held was that of alderman of Brooklyn, next that of counsel to the corporation, and in both relations he sustained the same high character he had ever borne. In 1858 he was chosen to the Thirty-Sixth Congress, where he discharged his duties in a highly creditable manner. He was again a candidate for Congress in 1860, but was not elected. His successful opponent at that election was the late Hon. Moses F. Odell, whose decease was announced only three days previous to the decease of Mr. HUMPHREY. In 1864 he was chosen to a seat in the Thirty-Ninth or present Congress, and in the summer of 1865 he visited Europe, hoping to benefit his impaired health from the celebrated springs at Wiesbaden. But the result of his visit was not favorable, and he had determined to withdraw from public life at the end of his present term in Congress.

Mr. HUMPHREY was not a frequent speaker in Congress, but he never failed to speak directly for the object he sought to accomplish, and few were more careful in all matters of legislation, or better understood or were more attentive to the requests of their constituents.

Mr. President, our colleagues and associates in this and in the other branch of Congress die, and prompted by duty or affection or both, we rise in our places and speak to their memory. I sometimes think that we are too ready to omit all reference to their defects of character, limiting our language to that which is universally acknowledged to be good and deserving of praise. What we really need on these occasions is a truthful record of the lives and conduct of public men, that their example may be followed in all that is worthy of emulation, and be avoided in all that is otherwise.

My late colleague in the House of Representatives, whose untimely decease we mourn to-day, was greatly respected and honored by all who had the pleasure of being personally acquainted with him. He was esteemed as a man and a Christian, and confided in as a friend. His delicate health led him to seek a quiet life; and he was naturally indisposed to bear a conspicuous or forward part in legislation or in business avocations. But I cannot withhold my testimony to his elevated moral character, his scrupulous regard for truth, to his gentleness of disposition, his refinement, adherence to friends, his loyalty and unswerving devotion to his country, and to the interests of humanity and freedom. Although from his habit of thought and his diffidence he was not disposed to be prominent as a leader, yet his convictions were strong and his judgment clear and decided. Few felt a more lively interest in public questions, and at no time that I can recall during the present session has there been a debate upon an important question that Mr. HUMPHREY was not present, and giving to it the most profound attention.

I do not suppose that he was devoid of ambition; but I never knew a man whose character and conduct developed less to excite the ill will of his associates and rivals. He was courteous to his opponents, kind and agreeable to his companions, and devoted to his friends. He was never illy spoken of, and I do not believe he had an enemy; and no man ever questioned his honor or his integrity. His were indeed rare virtues, but they were such as it should be the aim of all to possess. To JAMES HUMPHREY we may with strict propriety apply the words—

"None knew him but to love him,
None named him but to praise."

I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate receive with sincere regret the announcement of the death of Hon. JAMES HUMPHREY, late a member of the House of Representatives from the third congressional district of the State of New York, and tender to the family of the deceased the assurance of their sympathy with them under the bereavement they have been called to sustain.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to transmit to the family of Mr. HUMPHREY a certified copy of the foregoing resolution.

Resolved, That in token of respect for the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 23, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SURVEYOR GENERAL OF IOWA AND WISCONSIN.

Mr. JULIAN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back bill of the House No. 491, to remove the office of surveyor general of the States of Iowa and Wisconsin to Plattsmouth, Nebraska.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. The gentleman from the Dubuque district [Mr. ALLISON] is not now present, nor is the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. COBB], who is also interested in this bill. I trust the gentleman will not press it in their absence.

Mr. JULIAN. This bill is acceptable to them and is entirely unobjectionable. It is simply a local matter.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. JULIAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CUSTOM-HOUSE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to present to the House the record of an investigation into the accounts and official transactions of George M. Carleton, late special agent and acting surveyor of customs at Memphis, Tennessee. It is in regard to a transaction in which the Government lost about half a million dollars. I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, with authority to that committee to examine into the whole subject, to call for persons and papers, and to report to the House.

No objection being made, the record was received and Mr. WASHBURNE's motion was agreed to.

IMPORTATION OF BONES.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I also ask unanimous consent to present a communication from the consul of the United States at Beirut, Syria, to the Secretary of State, in relation to the importation of bones of cattle that have died of the rinderpest; and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and printed.

No objection being made, the communication was received and Mr. WASHBURNE's motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SMITH, one of its Clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to joint resolution (H. R. No. 52) to provide for the expenses attending the exhibition of the products of industry of the United States at the Exposition at Paris in 1867, had agreed to the conference asked by the House thereon, and had appointed Messrs. HARRIS, CRAGIN, and GUTHRIE as managers on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 477) further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes, had agreed to the conference asked by the House thereon, and had appointed Messrs. CHANDLER, EDMUNDS, and NESMITH as managers on the part of the Senate.

ANDREW TEN BROOK.

Mr. BEAMAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of Andrew Ten Brook, late consul at Munich; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SANTA CRUZ, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. McRUER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to relinquish the title to the town of Santa Cruz, California; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MOULTON asked and obtained leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. HARDING, until Wednesday next.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now commenced, and the first business in order is the call of committees for reports, commencing with the Committee of Claims.

DR. EDWARD JARVIS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Dr. Edward Jarvis; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Dr. Edward Jarvis the sum of $1,500, in full, for his services in the preparation of the United States census of 1850, provided that the Secretary of the Interior, after full examination of his claim, shall be satisfied that it is reasonable and just.

Mr. WARD. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read. It states that Dr. Edward Jarvis, a gentleman of distinguished scientific attainments, was engaged to arrange and compile certain statistics which were regarded of great value, and which were published in the census reports. The report sets forth the account of Dr. Jarvis for services during the years 1853, 1854, and 1855, consisting of professional clerical labor, in investigation of subjects, examination of records, calculations, answering questions, and solving difficulties, at the request and by the repeated orders of J. B. De Bow, Superintendent of the Census Bureau. The account is indorsed by De Bow, with the statement that the claim is just, but he has no authority to pay it. The committee report a bill for his relief.

Mr. PRICE. I understand from the reading of the report that the services for which compensation is claimed were rendered in 1853, 1854, and 1855, and that there was no contract made for compensation for these services. Now, it strikes me as particularly curious, to say the least of it, that the gentleman who rendered clerical services thirteen years ago without any contract for compensation should after this lapse of time now come forward and ask for $1,500. And but for the fact that the Committee of Claims had reported in favor of it, I should think there was no kind of foundation for the claim. I have every confidence in that committee; but really I am afraid that for once they have been mistaken, as the best men sometimes are.

Mr. WARD. I desire to ask my colleague on the Committee of Claims, who has reported this bill, [Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts,] whether there was any proof before the committee that this man rendered these services upon the strength of any promise on the part of the Government or of any of its officials that he was to be compensated for his labor; or was he merely requested to superintend and compile these statistics, and after the request had been made and complied with he then filed his claim?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. This case is somewhat peculiar. After a thorough investigation the Committee of Claims came to the conclusion that the claim was a just one. I will state some of the facts, if it is necessary to state them more fully than they are stated in the report, in order that every member present may understand the situation of this case. This individual is one of the most distinguished statisticians of this country, and he is the author of some of the most valuable statistics contained in our census report of 1850, as well as the report of 1860. He is employed at the present time, and has been so employed for some time past, and receives his pay regularly, for preparing these very same statistics.

The only point, it seems to me, which the House would wish to understand is why the applicant did not receive his pay for the labors which he performed in 1853, 1854, and 1855. He was employed by Mr. De Bow, the Superintendent of the Census Bureau, to perform these labors from year to year. When they were completed, at the end of three years, he sent in his bill to the head of the Census Bureau for his services. Mr. De Bow felt that he was not authorized to pay the claim and told him that he must apply to Congress for payment, as there had been no money appropriated for that special service. The Secretary of the Interior, as well as the head of the Census Bureau, after examining the claim, was satisfied that the services which the claimant rendered occupied about one third of each year for three years, and that the country has had the benefit of his labor. In 1860, finding that the Department had no authority to settle his account, he made out his claim for services rendered, charging simply the sum of $500 a year for the three years during which he was thus employed.

The claim was recommended by the Department as just and one that ought to be paid. It was examined by a committee of the Senate, who recommended that it be passed. A bill for the payment of the claim was passed by the Senate, and came to this House; and the only reason why it did not pass here was that at the close of the session of 1860 the House did not have time to act upon it. Then the war broke out; and this gentleman said that he would not press any claim against the Government while it was struggling to defend itself against its enemies. Accordingly the claim slept until the present time, when the gentleman has appeared before the committee and stated the facts.

This gentleman is acknowledged by the Department to have rendered most valuable service, having given a third part of his time for three years, and he has received no compensation. It is true that, in answer to a question of one of my colleagues upon the committee, this gentleman admitted that there was no contract made. The reason why a contract was not made was that in the first place the Census Bureau sent to him for information—whether much or little he did not at that time know—so that he could not tell whether he would be obliged to consume in furnishing it only a few days or a considerable time. Accordingly, nothing was said about pay for his services until the lapse of three years, when the census was completed. Then he sent in his bill, supposing that the Census Bureau would pay him, as other officers had been paid for similar services. He sent in a claim for compensation for the time he had actually expended as nearly as he could calculate it, being about one third of each year for three successive years. The Census Bureau, as I have already stated, pronounced the claim just and the charge low. But it was believed that the bureau had no authority to settle the claim. Hence the gentleman has presented his claim to Congress.

Mr. WARD. Will my colleague on the committee yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARD. Mr. Speaker, I was not able to concur with the majority of the committee in the report which my colleague has presented. My reason for dissenting was that I felt that the allowance of this claim would establish a new principle with reference to claims against the Government—a principle which has not heretofore received the sanction of the Committee of Claims or of this House. I understood from the investigation before the committee and from the answer which this gentleman himself gave in response to an inquiry of mine, that when he performed these services, he did not expect compensation from the Government, and he did not perform them with reference to any contract with the Government. Sir, the passage of this bill, as recommended by the committee, will establish the principle that every man, woman, and child in this country who, during the struggle through which we have recently passed, has gratuitously and without expectation of reward rendered valuable services to the country shall receive compensation.

I apprehend, Mr. Speaker, that the committee may be charged with some inconsistency in recommending the payment of this claim. When the Union men of the South, who had their property destroyed by the rebels, who had suffered and sacrificed everything in behalf of the Government, came to our doors as beggars, asking some small compensation for their losses, we said, "No; the Government is not in a condition to pay such claims." When the men of Pennsylvania and Ohio and other States on the border came here asking compensation for their property destroyed by the rebels, we said, "No, we cannot help you. Although you have contributed largely to put down the rebellion, we cannot aid you; first, because there is no obligation on the part of the Government to do so; and secondly, because the national Treasury is not in a condition to pay such claims." Then came the volunteer nurses who had served in field and camp and hospital. When those ministering angels came, asking us for compensation for their services, we said "No."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I will remind the gentleman we have only an hour.

Mr. WARD. I will be through in a moment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I hope the gentleman will confine himself to the question.

Mr. WARD. I say the committee have acted on the principle all along of not compensating parties who have rendered valuable gratuitous services to the Government. We took the position, and had to take it to save the Government from ruin and the Treasury from bankruptcy, we could not reward those who had done service unless there was a contract express or implied. That, sir, is this case. This man has done valuable service to the country. Some have given their lives, some have given their property, and some have given their knowledge and their talents, as this man. All have done so gratuitously, and all should stand upon the same platform precisely. Unless we are prepared to open the door and give to every one who has done service for the Government up to this time, we should not allow this claim. If we are prepared to do that, then we will allow it. I make this statement so that the House may understand what principle is proposed to be established.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I must protest against the principle being established that a man who renders voluntary service to the Government has a right to claim it to be his debtor.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. There is no evidence that this gentleman was to perform this service without payment. The point is whether the House will say to one of the most distinguished men of the country, who has given part of three years to the Government, he shall not have pay for that service. There is not a particle of testimony he performed this service without expectation of pay when the work was done. When the census was completed he sent in his bill, as he would for any other service, and he did not know till the bill was sent in that the head of the bureau would not pay it as any other bill. He never mistrusted that the head of the bureau had not authority to pay that bill. He performed the service honestly, and owing simply to a blunder of the head of the bureau has not yet been paid for them. He has presented his bill to Congress, indorsed by the Department, certifying to the truth and value of his services. What did the committee do when it was submitted to them? They said it was just, and reported this bill in his favor.

We do not establish the precedent of paying for services when there was no contract. You could not make a contract. You could not tell how much time it would take. After the work was done he presented his bill, and we do not see any reason why it should not be paid. This bill was to have been reported by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO,] now absent on account of sickness. He put it into my hand and requested me to report it. I only wish the House to understand the circumstances; and if they see fit they may vote down the bill and I shall have no complaint to make.

Mr. WARD. Should not this be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union? It involves an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to make the point of order.

Mr. BEAMAN. Does the Department employ men it cannot pay?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. He supposed he would receive his pay when he had completed the work.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Is there any evidence of any understanding these services were to be paid for?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. At first it was expected it would only take a few days; when it extended over three years of course it was expected he should be paid. The question is whether we will pay him for the work he has done. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 51, nays 41, not voting 90; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Baldwin, Benjamin, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Buckland, Bundy, Coffroth, Conkling, Darling, Dawes, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eliot, Farquhar, Griswold, Hayes, Holmes, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Jencks, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, McClurg, McKee, McRuer, Miller, Moulton, Perham, Pike, Sawyer, Stevens, Stillwell, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Windom, and Woodbridge—51.

NAYS—Messrs. Baker, Bergen, Boyer, Bromwell, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Dawson, Defrees, Denison, Eekley, Finck, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Henderson, Humphrey, Kelso, Kerr, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Marshall, Marston, Mercut, Niblack, Orth, Paine, Price, Ritter, Ross, Scofield, Sitgreaves, Taber, Thornton, Trimble, Townbridge, Ward, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, and Winfield—41.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Blow, Brandegee, Broomall, Chanler, Reader W. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wright—90.

The SPEAKER. The Chair votes in the affirmative to make a quorum; and so the bill is passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELEANOR C. RANSOM.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Mrs. Eleanor C. Ransom; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in full. It authorizes the payment of $400 to indemnify the claimant for losses sustained by the sinking of the steamship North America, on the 22d of December, 1864, during her voyage from New Orleans to New York, she having been on board to nurse and care for the sick and wounded soldiers of the United States during the voyage.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. I do not wish to consume time, but simply to state this case to the House, it being a little different from the cases usually reported by the committee, and then to leave it to the House to pass the bill or not, as they may deem best. Various individuals who have acted as volunteer nurses in the Army during the war have appeared before the committee asking for compensation, and in all cases the committee have reported adversely upon them. This lady was employed by the Sanitary Commission of Indiana to act as hospital nurse at Memphis, and she had charge of the hospital there as matron for several years. After taking charge of various hospitals she was sent to New Orleans, her daughter accompanying her. There her daughter was taken sick, and returned home and died. The steamer North America was about to leave with some two hundred of our wounded and sick soldiers, and it was the desire of the medical department, as many of the soldiers were very ill, that some matron should attend. Accordingly the medical officer requested this lady to accompany the sick soldiers on the return of the vessel. She consented to go. On the voyage the ship was lost, and out of all the two hundred persons on board only sixteen, including this lady, were saved. On board the vessel was all that she and her daughter possessed. All the money and every thing else she had left in the world went to the bottom. Even her satchel, which contained the small pittance which she had left, was lost, and she had nothing but the clothing which was upon her. Now, she asks nothing for her five years' service which she gave, nothing for the money she had expended, which took her last dollar. She simply comes and asks if we will do something to provide the means by which she may supply her wardrobe which went to the bottom. Under these circumstances the committee recommend the passage of a bill giving her $400 to make up that loss. If the House think the committee acted injudiciously in recommending the passage of this bill they will, of course, vote against it. If, on the other hand, they think the committee have done right they will sustain the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend the bill by striking out "$400" and inserting "$500" in lieu thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN M. BROOME, ET AL.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, also from the Committee of Claims, reported a joint resolution for the relief of John M. Broome, and others; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OBER, NANSON AND COMPANY.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, also from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Ober, Nanson & Co., merchants of New York; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was then read at length.
